He also presented a memorial of the American Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals of New York, remonstrating against the passage of Senate bill No. 560, relative to the transportation of animals from one State to another; which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. CULLOM. I present a petition prepared by the trustees of the sanitary district of Chicago, favoring the construction by the Government of the United States of a deep waterway from Lake Michigan via the Chicago sanitary and ship canal and the Desplaines and Illinois rivers to the Mississippi River. The petition, as stated, was prepared by the trustees of the sanitary district of Chicago, who have had charge of that work, and I commend the paper so prepared to the Senate. I believe it is understood that a copy will be laid upon the desk of every Senator, and I hope Senators will look at it. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CULLOM presented the memorial of George A. and William B. King, of Washington, D. C., relative to a judgment rendered by the Court of Claims in favor of 585 letter carriers of Chicago, Ill.; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Cuba, Puerto Rico, or any other newly acquired territories; which was referred to the Select Committee on Woman Suffrage.

Mr. FRYE presented the petition of Capt. Frank A. Peabody, Company L, Second Regiment Infantry, National State Guard of Maine, praying for the enactment of legislation to improve the armament of the militia; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a petition of sundry Army nurses of Orange, N. J., praying for the employment of women nurses in the military hospitals of the Army; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4961) granting a increase of pension to Margaret Gangloff, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2382) granting an increase of pension to Eli Overhultz, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the Committee on Commerce, submitted a report to accompany the bill (S. 2882) to authorize the Cambridge Bridge Commission to construct a drawless bridge across the Charles River, in the State of Massachusetts, heretofore reported by him.

Mr. FAIRBANKS, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4) for enlarging the public building at Hartford, Conn., reported adversely thereon, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3211) to authorize the construction of an addition to the public building at Hartford, Conn., reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3024) for the erection of a new public building at Burlington, Vt., reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I am directed by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3309) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon, at Carthage, in the State of Missouri, to report it with amendments, and to submit a report thereon. It is a unique report. The committee has been obliged to increase the amount asked for in the bill introduced by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. SCOTT, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2388) to increase the limit of cost for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building at Boise City, Idaho, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1064) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a building thereon at Bluefield, in the State of West Virginia, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3149) for the erection of a public building at Atlanta, Ga., reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. CLAY, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 906) to provide an American register for the steamer Esther, of New Orleans, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. SEWELL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1435) to correct the military record of Gideon Howell, alias Judson Howell, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

REPORT OF COMMISSIONER OF PENSIONS.

Mr. PLATT of New York, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the concurrent resolution submitted by Mr. GALLINGER January 11, 1900, reported it without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 10,000 additional copies of the last annual report of the Commissioner of Pensions for the use of the Bureau of Pensions.

SURPLUS BOOKS IN SENATE LIBRARY.

Mr. WETMORE. I am directed by the Committee on the Library to report back favorably the resolution submitted by the Senator from New York [Mr. PLATT] on the 13th instant, and to ask that it be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to make an arrangement with the Librarian of Congress for suitable space in the Library of Congress in which to place in proper order the surplus Government publications belonging to the Senate library, not required for the current use of the Senate, the said documents to remain under the control of the Secretary of the Senate; and

That the expense of carrying out the foregoing resolution be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers to be approved by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER subsequently, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, reported favorably the foregoing resolution without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent.

Mr. HOAR. Has the resolution been seen by the chairman of the Committee on Rules? The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] is examining into some matters about the use of the vacant space in the Capitol. Will this interfere at all with that subject, so far as the Senator from New Hampshire knows?

Mr. GALLINGER. This resolution was reported from the Committee on the Library. The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. WETMORE] reported it.

Mr. HOAR. It is all right. I presume the attention of the Senator from Wisconsin has been called to it.

Mr. GALLINGER. It came to our committee, and we reported it back favorably.

The resolution was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. CULLOM introduced a bill (S. 3629) for the relief of the heirs of Dixon Dameron; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. CULLOM. I present a large number of affidavits and other papers in support of the bill. I move that the bill and the accompanying papers be referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. PLATT of New York introduced a bill (S. 3645) for the relief of James E. Kelsey and others; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. WOLCOTT introduced the following bills; which were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 3646) granting an increase of pension to William Herriott;

A bill (S. 3647) granting an increase of pension to Frank S. Winters;
A bill (S. 3648) granting an increase of pension to Peter Shelt;
A bill (S. 3649) granting an increase of pension to Charles John;
A bill (S. 3650) granting a pension to Marsden H. Sammis;
A bill (S. 3651) granting an increase of pension to John B. Hanna;
A bill (S. 3652) granting a pension to John F. Kline;
A bill (S. 3653) granting an increase of pension to Henry Smith;
A bill (S. 3654) granting a pension to Thomas L. Sims;
A bill (S. 3655) granting an increase of pension to Ann M. Leonard;
A bill (S. 3656) granting a pension to James S. Bush; and
A bill (S. 3657) granting an increase of pension to John H. Burrowes.

Mr. BARD introduced a bill (S. 3658) granting equal privileges to per diem employees in the United States Navy outside of Washington, D. C., with those employed at the Executive Department in Washington, D. C.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. PERKINS introduced a bill (S. 3659) to recover to the United States the title to private holdings within forest reservations and certain national parks; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. COCKRELL introduced a bill (S. 3660) to increase the limit of cost for the purchase of site and the erection of a public building at Joplin, Mo.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. MORGAN introduced a bill (S. 3661) for the relief of the estate of D. M. Sparks, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. COCKRELL introduced a bill (S. 3662) granting an increase of pension to Louise D. Smith; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENT TO CLAIMS BILL.

Mr. PLATT of New York submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 1676) for the payment of certain claims; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

AMENDMENT TO ALASKAN BILL.

Mr. WARREN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 3419) making further provision for a civil government for Alaska, and for other purposes; which was ordered to lie on the table, and to be printed.

MISPILLION RIVER (DELAWARE) IMPROVEMENT.

Mr. KENNEY submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to have a survey made and submit a report and an estimate for deepening and properly improving the Mispillion River, Delaware, in accordance with recommendations heretofore made by the War Department.

LETTER OF EMILIO AGUINALDO.

Mr. HOAR submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to communicate to the Senate a letter of Emilio Aguinaldo, dated at Bacoor, July 15, 1898, addressed to the American commander and forwarded to General Merritt July 27, 1898, as an inclosure to L. S. No. 45, being the same of which a brief is given in Senate Document, Fifty-sixth Congress, first session, No. 208, page 6.

CORRESPONDENCE RELATIVE TO THE PHILIPPINES.

Mr. HOAR. I submit a resolution for which I ask immediate consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That 7,000 copies of Senate Document No. 208, Fifty-sixth Congress, first session, be printed for the use of the Senate.

Mr. PETTUS. I should like to know what the document is.

Mr. HOAR. It is the information sent in by the President of the United States in response to a resolution offered by myself some weeks ago in regard to the communications with the various commanders in chief in the Philippine Islands, and so on.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is simply a reprint?

Mr. HOAR. It is simply a reprint. I have an estimate from the Public Printer, and this number can be printed without going beyond the statute limit.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

AGES OF EMPLOYEES IN EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS.

Mr. GALLINGER. I submit a resolution for which I ask immediate consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State, the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of War, the Attorney-General, the Postmaster-General, the Secretary of the Navy, the Secretary of the Interior, and the Secretary of Agriculture are hereby directed to communicate to the Senate at the earliest practicable day statements showing the number of persons employed in their respective departments and bureaus as clerks, messengers, etc., of the following ages: Number between 14 and 19, inclusive; between 20 and 29, inclusive; between 30 and 39, inclusive; between 40 and 49, inclusive; between 50 and 59, inclusive; between 60 and 64, inclusive; between 65 and 69, inclusive; between 70 and 74, inclusive; between 75 and 79, inclusive, and above 80; also the number now on the rolls in the respective departments and bureaus who are permanently incapacitated, either physically or mentally, for the performance of manual labor, in whole or in part.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. ALLISON. I do not object to the consideration of the resolution, but it certainly will take a great deal of time to prepare a schedule of that character.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have information——

Mr. ALLISON. Unless the Senator from New Hampshire has information to the contrary.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have information to the effect that it will take very little time.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well; I shall not object.

Mr. GALLINGER. It will take a very brief time to prepare it.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

ADDITIONAL MESSENGERS.

Mr. SULLIVAN. I submit a resolution, and ask that it be read, printed, and lie on the table.

The resolution was read, and ordered to lie on the table, and to be printed, as follows:

Resolved, That each Senator, other than the chairmen of standing and select committees of the Senate and having, as such, a messenger, be, and he is hereby, authorized to employ a messenger, to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate, at the rate of $1,440 per annum, until otherwise provided by law.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 159) to amend joint resolution to furnish the daily CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to members of the press, etc., approved February 17, 1897, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

RURAL FREE-DELIVERY SERVICE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed 25,000 copies of so much of the report of the First Assistant Postmaster-General for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1899, as relates to the rural free-delivery service, of which 10,000 shall be for the use of the House of Representatives, 5,000 for the use of the Senate, and 10,000 for the use of the Post-Office Department.

SENATOR FROM PENNSYLVANIA.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I desire to renew the request which I made yesterday, which is that "a week from next Friday, after the conclusion of the routine morning business of the Senate, the Senate will take up the Quay case for consideration, and during the same period each day from day to day will continue the consideration of that case until it is disposed of, excepting the unfinished business"—the present unfinished business—I mean, of course—and also appropriation bills and conference reports.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Can the Senator forward that request to the Chair?

Mr. HOAR. It will be found at the bottom of page 2929 of yesterday's proceedings. I sent it to the Chair.

Mr. ALLISON. This being Friday, the date proposed is two weeks from to-day.

Mr. HOAR. One week from to-day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read to the Senate the request of the Senator from Massachusetts.

The Secretary read as follows:

I ask unanimous consent that a week from next Friday, immediately after the routine morning business, the Quay case may be taken up for consideration and continued until disposed of, reserving the right of appropriation bills and conference reports.

Mr. HOAR. My request, of course, is for a week from to-day. The phrase "next Friday" was used yesterday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator added one other phrase, "appropriation bills and the present unfinished business."

Mr. HOAR. The present unfinished business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will add to the request "the present unfinished business."

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. President, there is no disposition, so far as I know, to delay the consideration of this matter, but I will suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts, who has been very courteous in the affair, that his suggestion yesterday, in view of the fact that the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] suggested that he might be back next Thursday or Friday, was that he would fix the time a week from Monday. But it will be remembered by the Senator from Massachusetts that a week from next Monday or Tuesday the Committee on Privileges and Elections, with its entire membership, will be engaged in the consideration of a very important matter before that committee involving the right of a sitting member of this body; and it has already agreed that two days, Tuesday and Wednesday, of that week shall be taken up by counsel in the discussion of the question, after which I suppose the committee will proceed with closed doors to consider the matter.

I therefore would suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts to fix the time at two weeks from next Monday or Tuesday, so that the Senator will be here, and to that arrangement I shall not have the slightest objection.

Mr. HOAR. I will accept that modification.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that on two weeks from Monday next——

Mr. HOAR. From Tuesday next.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. From Tuesday next the election case involving the appointment of Senator Quay shall be taken up for consideration and continued to completion, not, however, to interfere with appropriation bills or with the present unfinished business or with conference reports.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I do not rise to object, but simply to make an inquiry. If the Puerto Rican bill, which is the present unfinished business, should be disposed of before that time, do I understand that this agreement would debar me from making a motion to take up the bill reported from the Committee on the Philippines?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of opinion that it would.

Mr. WOLCOTT. No, Mr. President.

Mr. LODGE. I can not consent to that.

Mr. HOAR. My colleague can get it up before that time.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I understand that the junior Senator from Massachusetts would not be in the least debarred from calling up the Philippine measure, but that in two weeks from Tuesday it would give way until the Quay case was disposed of.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair means of course that it would have that effect after the lapse of two weeks from Tuesday.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I certainly shall not object to this arrangement, and yet I wish to make a simple statement.

I was astounded yesterday to have it suggested that those of us who are opposed to seating Mr. Quay were by parliamentary devices preventing consideration of the resolution.

Mr. HOAR. I did not make any such suggestion.

Mr. GALLINGER. It will be recalled——

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask the Senator if he understood me to make any such suggestion?

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say to the Senator from Massachusetts that I did not understand him to make any suggestion of the kind.

It will be recalled, Mr. President, that the last two or three weeks of the time of the Senate have been devoted to the consideration, first, of the Hawaiian bill, which was in charge of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM], who I understand proposes to vote for Mr. Quay, and that next we have been considering the Puerto Rican bill, in charge of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER], who I understand likewise proposes to vote to seat Mr. Quay. In the next place, we have given consent to the reading of a bill at hours other than those that are usually occupied in the transaction of the ordinary business of this body, and the reading of that bill would have consumed two days of the time of the Senate. In the next place, we have been considering an appropriation bill for Puerto Rico in charge of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], who is likewise, I understand, committed to the view that Mr. Quay is entitled to a seat in this body. There has been no matter, so far as I can recall, during the past two or three weeks before the Senate that a Senator opposed to the seating of Mr. Quay has insisted should be considered.

I have placed no obstacle in the way of this resolution. I propose to place none. It is immaterial to me when it is taken up, and it is immaterial to me when it is concluded. I will say that the Senate need not postpone the consideration or the vote upon this measure one single minute on my account, because it is not of any consequence to me or to the Senate or the country whether I submit a single observation in opposition to the seating of Mr. Quay or not. If I am present I shall vote against, if I am absent I shall be paired in opposition to this proposition, it being one that I am totally opposed to.

Mr. LODGE. As I understand it, then, after April 3, which is the date when this unanimous-consent agreement is to take effect, I should have no right under this unanimous agreement to move to take up the bill reported from the Committee on the Philippines.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator would not.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, it is impossible to say how long the debate on the Quay case may continue, and I can not resign that right.

Mr. HOAR. I will except my colleague's bill.

Mr. LODGE. Very well.

Mr. HOAR. We shall undoubtedly be able to arrange about the date.

Mr. LODGE. I merely did not want to bind myself, that was all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Then the Chair will repeat the request of the Senator from Massachusetts so that there may be no misunderstanding.

The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that on two weeks from Tuesday next the Quay election case shall be taken up for consideration, and that the consideration shall be had to the conclusion of the case; interfering not, however, with appropriation bills, or the present unfinished business, or the measure touching the Philippine question reported by the Committee on the Philippines.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Or conference reports.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Or conference reports.

Mr. HALE. Does the Chair hold that under this agreement, if entered into, a motion to postpone or to table or to recommit would not be in order?

Mr. HOAR. I should not claim any such ruling myself. I suppose it will be subject to an ordinary motion that is a disposition of the case.

Mr. HALE. It is simply that the résolution, the privileged question, shall have the right of way, but it is subject to all of the obstacles and all of the resistance that ordinary parliamentary law gives in such a case.

Mr. HOAR. Undoubtedly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That will be the opinion of the Chair.

Mr. HALE. I wanted that to be understood, because I remember, and some other Senators will remember, that without any jugglery on the part of anyone we got caught once and found that only the main question could be put. I want to have that understood by the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. As at present advised, the Chair would hold that any subsidiary motion touching the case would be in order.

Mr. HALE. I so believe.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Immediately after the routine morning business is finished. Is that the Senator's request?

Mr. HOAR. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Immediately after the conclusion of the routine morning business in two weeks from Tuesday next. Is there objection?

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator rise to this question?

Mr. RAWLINS. No, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

PUERTO RICAN REVENUES.

Mr. ALLISON. I now ask that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 9080, the appropriation bill which was under consideration yesterday.

Mr. RAWLINS. Will the Senator from Iowa yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. ALLISON. Let the bill be first taken up.

Mr. RAWLINS. Certainly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Iowa.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. RAWLINS. I wish to ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of a short bill reported by the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. ALLISON. I will yield for that purpose, if it leads to no debate.

ACCOUNTS OF DISTRICT COURT OFFICERS IN UTAH.

Mr. RAWLINS. I ask for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3106) relating to the accounts of United States marshals and the clerks of the district courts for the Territory of Utah.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the United States marshals and the clerks of the district courts for the Territory of Utah, prior to its admission to the Union as a State, shall be held accountable only for fees earned in United States cases in accordance with the decision of the Attorney-General dated December 2, 1901, and they are hereby relieved from making further reports of emoluments and are released from further liability on their bond, and the accounting officers are hereby directed to settle all unadjusted accounts of said officers accordingly, and to readjust and restate all settled accounts of said officers in the same manner and credit them with whatever balances may have been or may hereafter be found due the United States on such readjustment and restatement.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARIA E. MAILLEY.

Mr. SEWELL. Will the Senator from Iowa allow me just a moment to call up a House pension bill? I may be absent when it is reached on the Pension Calendar.

Mr. ALLISON. I yield to the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. SEWELL. I ask for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 5390) granting an increase of pension to Maria E. Mailley. The title is proposed to be amended so as to read: "A bill granting a pension to Maria E. Mailley."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill indicated by the Senator from New Jersey?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Maria E. Mailley, widow of Frank E. Mailley, late of Company D, Ninth Regiment New Jersey Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $8 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting a pension to Maria E. Mailley."

PUERTO RICAN REVENUES.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9080) appropriating, for the benefit and government of Puerto Rico, revenues collected on importations therefrom since its evacuation by Spain, and revenues hereafter collected on such importations under existing law.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN]. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. After line 10, page 2, insert the following proviso:

Provided, That the Constitution was by force of the treaty concluded between the United States of America and the Kingdom of Spain at the city of Paris, France, April 11, 1899, extended over the island of Puerto Rico and its inhabitants.

Mr. ALLISON. I understood the Senator from Nebraska yesterday to say that he would propose this amendment to the bill which the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] has in charge, and that he did not expect it to be acted on upon this bill.

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator misunderstood me. I expect to move to put this amendment on every measure that pertains to Puerto Rico until it is passed. This is the first opportunity, and I think it is the most proper place to put it. I should like to have a vote on my amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PERKINS in the chair). The question before the Senate is on the amendment to the bill offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN].

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I listened as well as I could, but it was impossible to hear the exact import of the amendment, and being so important I ask that it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proposed amendment will be again read.

The Secretary again read Mr. ALLEN's amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. ALLEN. On that I should like a yea-and-nay vote.

Mr. CHILTON. Will the Senator withhold his motion for a few moments?

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly. I withdraw the motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa withdraws his motion temporarily for the purpose of giving an opportunity to the Senator from Texas to address the Senate.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, I will take advantage of this opportunity to make a few remarks. Let the amendment be read again.

The SECRETARY. After line 10, page 2 of the bill, insert the following proviso:

Provided, That the Constitution was by force of the treaty concluded between the United States of America and the Kingdom of Spain at the city of Paris, France, April 11, 1899, extended over the island of Puerto Rico and its inhabitants.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, the course of events since the beginning of our war with Spain shows how impossible it is to see ahead whenever an armed conflict between modern nations is set in motion. Some of the results of the war can be anticipated, but others are beyond the vision of the most far-reaching statesmanship.

In looking back over the course of my service in the Senate I am gratified to feel that neither my votes nor my words contributed to make the war with Spain inevitable. I favored it as a last resort, but I felt then a grave sense of responsibility.

I would not have entered upon the Spanish war for the purpose of procuring any territory, no matter how valuable. Policies of conquest, such as have animated European nations, do not befit the high mission of our Republic; and no matter what our technical rights may be under the treaty with Spain, we should settle all the problems growing out of the war on the broad principles which have built up our nation to become the greatest and freest on earth.

The war with Spain has thrust forward some new questions for our settlement and brought into greater prominence certain old ones which we have tried for years in vain to settle.

One of these questions is connected with the island of Cuba. The Cubans labored for their independence for generations, and finally through our aid they won it. We pledged them independence, and they trusted us. While it is too early to charge the Republican Administration with bad faith, it seems to me that it is time to take steps to release our hold upon the island, so that the people there may make their own experiment of self-government, and that we may not by long and constant association with their affairs fall under temptation to forget our pledges or fail in duty to those who fought for a separate government with their arms in their hands.

According to my own view, there is no part of the earth which would form so valuable and important an addition to the United States as the island of Cuba. Its fertility and future capacity for development baffles description. It could support 6,000,000 more inhabitants than its present population. It is hard to find a great American statesman, from Thomas Jefferson down to Stephen A. Douglas and Jefferson Davis, who has not at some time expressed himself in terms of enthusiasm on this subject.

Indeed, the reasons for a union between that island and the mainland of our country are so obvious that it is hard for argument to make them plainer.

It may be that the State which I represent would be the beneficiary of such a union in higher degree than any other part of the United States. First, because Texas and Cuba are so close to each other that they will be natural mutual customers. Not only so, but it happens that the chief productions of Texas, such as wheat, cotton, cattle, and lumber, are the very things which Cuba needs constantly, but does not produce, and, on the other hand, the chief products of Cuba are the very things which Texas needs constantly and does not produce in sufficient quantities to supply home consumption. Thus, if the tariff walls were beaten down between the Texas ports and the Cuban ports, as would follow in case of Cuban annexation, the people of Cuba and the people of Texas would build up a magnificent trade to the advantage and happiness of both.

But I would not confine the scope of these advantages to any local situation. Every part of the United States would find a quickening trade in the development of this rich island, and every branch of labor in our country would feel the impulse which comes from widening markets.

Again, sir, if Cuba belonged to this country, the yellow-fever scourge, which has cost so many useful lives and which every year interferes with the trade of the Southern States, would be eradicated. I believe every great expert attributes the spread of this disease in the United States to the nearness of Habana and other Cuban cities, where it is constantly bred, and if American methods could take permanent hold of the situation there, this yellow plague would be stamped out of existence. The reports of the officers show that a great deal has been done in this direction since our military occupation began.

Cuba is nature's fortification of the Gulf of Mexico. It stretches across the Gulf, coming near to the coast of Yucatan on one side and the coast of Florida on the other, so that if the island belonged to the United States, our great Gulf of Mexico, with all its present and future immensity of trade, could be safely defended at a minimum of expense. No wonder that American statesmen and thinkers of every generation have looked on Cuba as so natural an addition to our country.

But these questions, while interesting, are largely abstract at this time, because such a plan depends upon the initiative of the Cubans themselves. The independence which they fought for, and which we pledged them, is their independence. We have no mortgage on it. We should speedily remove every check upon it by the presence of our authority in the island, and as long as they desire an independent nationality, bid them Godspeed in their course.

A still greater problem which comes from the war with Spain is that relating to the much-vexed question of the Philippines. I have from the beginning regarded the retention of the Philippine Islands as involving more danger to our future than anything which has ever arisen in our history. I opposed it in the first flush of victory over Spain, when a great hue and cry was heard in the land to take everything we could get and hold everything we took. I feel some pride in the fact that the first Democratic State platform which spoke on this subject contained a declaration blocked out by me, as follows:

That we reaffirm our faith in the Monroe doctrine and oppose the annexation or continued retention of the Philippine Islands or any territory upon the Eastern Hemisphere.

Well-defined hostilities on the part of the Filipinos had not then taken shape, but I was controlled by a broader principle of objection inspired by that Monroe message of American democracy that we should not concern ourselves with the entanglement of Old World politics.

The struggle against our power in the Philippines brings to the front another great principle of American institutions which was immortalized in our Declaration of Independence, and though sometimes misapplied, touches with its sacred virtue the cause of every people who stand, as our forefathers stood, with arms in their hands to maintain their liberties. We have no right to bend to American government peoples who offer their lives as a protest against our dominion. We should hold fast to that jewel of our national achievement, that governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed. When it was found that the natives of the Philippines were determined upon an independent government the President should have declared his desire to treat them as allies and friends. We ought never to have claimed for a moment that we could buy their liberties from their tyrant, Spain.

When the treaty of peace was ratified, Congress should have declared a national purpose toward them in terms of justice, such as we used toward the Cubans. If we had done this, Luzon would have been as peaceful to-day as Cuba. If, at the time the treaty was ratified, we had thought of our principles rather than our power, all the treasure and the lives which have been poured into this Philippine sacrifice would have been saved by the adoption of a clear resolution defining our purpose to be peaceful and protecting. Such a resolution was offered and was lost by a tie vote in the Senate. Our power has been vindicated in the Philippines, but our principles still cry out for vindication.

God grant that we may turn from this bloody vision of far-reaching empire. If we will but turn, we can turn from all danger of a large standing army and get back to the establishment which we had before the Spanish war. If we will but turn, we can turn from all danger of alliances with England or any other power of Europe. If we will but confine ourselves to the American hemisphere—to such annexations as Louisiana, Florida, Texas, Alaska, or Puerto Rico—we will need no increase of soldiers and no treaties of alliance. Since I have been a member of the Senate I have never seen the occasion yet to vote for an addition to the standing army or for any treaty which led up to an alliance with the powers of Europe. I have antagonized these propositions in every shape in which they have been presented.

How the hearts of freemen thrill with interest when we witness the efforts of the British Empire to wipe out of existence the Boer Republic of South Africa—to take from these goodly Dutch laborers the government of their native land, which they have ruled so long and wisely. Yet who can tell, when the intoxication of empire fastens itself upon the American people and the poison takes possession of our system of government, that American rulers may not deal as wickedly with civilized people who stand in our way as Great Britain deals with the Dutch patriots of South Africa, who stand within the circle of her covetous eye. No, Mr. President, let the Chief Executive and Congress give assurance of freedom to the distant dwellers in the Philippines and stop the taxes and the bloodshed and the scandal of our adventure in Asiatic politics, or if this President and this Congress will not do so, let the people choose a President and a Congress which will.

Another great question not growing out of the Spanish war, but which has been brought to the forefront by that conflict, is that of the Nicaragua Canal. When our great battle ship, the Oregon, was forced to make its trip thousands of miles down the Pacific, around Cape Horn, and up the Atlantic to form a junction with our Santiago fleet, the dullest man in the United States could see that we needed a canal across the Isthmus of Darien to serve us in time of trouble and to save the tremendous expenditure which would be necessary if we must keep up gigantic navies in both oceans.

I have for a long time believed the Nicaragua Canal the most important definite improvement needed in our national progress. Unfortunately, the territory through which this canal must be constructed does not belong to the United States, and it has been necessary for us to deal with the subject upon conditions imposed by the Republics of Nicaragua and Costa Rica. These Republics have for many years hampered themselves by granting concessions to outside companies rather than to a great government which was able to do the work.

One of the most important of these concessions was that to the Maritime Canal Company. While this concession was outstanding it was impracticable for the United States to do anything toward constructing a canal unless the concession to this company was used. An effort was made in the Fifty-fourth Congress to utilize this concession, but, strongly as I desired the canal, I could not vote to take up the bill proposed, because it provided for the guaranty of bonds by the United States Government.

The concession being still in existence, at the next Congress a new bill was proposed which, using the charter of the canal company—because there was nothing else to use—provided for the elimination of all private stockholders by paying them the actual value of the work already done and vested 92½ per cent of the stock in the United States Government. The other 7½ per cent we could not reach, because it was reserved to Nicaragua and Costa Rica in the concessions which those Governments had granted. This was practically an ownership of the canal by the United States Government and was the best thing that could be done under the circumstances.

But that was not all. The bill was careful to give every opportunity for direct Government ownership by sections 12 and 13. I quote section 13, which is as follows:

SEC. 13. That if the President shall be unable to secure from the Governments of Nicaragua and Costa Rica such concessions as will enable the United States to build and perpetually own and control said canal, the President is authorized to negotiate for a control of or a right to construct, maintain, and perpetually control some other canal connecting the Atlantic and Pacific oceans, and the President is requested to negotiate for the abrogation or modification of any and all treaty obligations, if any such exist, as shall in any wise interfere with the construction, ownership, and perpetual control of any such canal: Provided, That no payments shall be made under the provisions of this act to or for the benefit of the stockholders of the Maritime Canal Company or for any of its property unless the President shall decide to construct a canal under the concessions granted to said company.

Since that time the Maritime Canal Company has fallen into litigation with the Governments of Nicaragua and Costa Rica, and their rights under the concession are now under arbitration.

The distinguished Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], who has so long followed this great project with his hopes and fears, has reported a bill at this session of Congress which provides for direct government ownership if it can be secured. It will be a happy day for this country when all the difficulties attending this enterprise are dispelled and this great canal is constructed to speed the commerce and aid the safety of our country.

But, Mr. President, it is to that branch of our national responsibility growing out of our relations to Puerto Rico and involved in the amendment which is now pending that occupies a chief place in the public attention of this country. The organization of American government in Puerto Rico, the attempt to provide a taxing system for that island, is made the pivot around which turns one of the gravest questions brought into American politics in forty years, and it is to that to which I arose to devote my special attention. It is proposed by the tax bill brought over from the House to levy customs duties upon articles landed in Puerto Rico from our ports and upon articles brought from Puerto Rico to our home ports.

This proposition marks a step in American history which every patriot should seek to turn back. The friends of the measure cover it with gloss in order to conceal its full significance. They make the tariffs very small. They dedicate the revenues derived from these tariffs to the local needs of Puerto Rico. They declare that it shall be temporary only. Notwithstanding these expedients, it is just as much the assertion of a wrong and dangerous principle as the tax on tea which fired the resistance of our forefathers and culminated in the creation of this Republic.

The progress of the American Union has been glorious with annexations. The Democratic party has been from its infancy the party of territorial acquisition; but in all our history there has never been a proposition made to tax productions of our new territories when transported into the boundaries of the old. When the Louisiana territory was added to our domain by the foresight of Jefferson no tariff wall was raised against its productions. When Monroe brought Florida into our borders no tariff line was raised against her. New Mexico, California, and all the vast West purchased from Mexico came in under the same principles of equality.

Nothing could more sharply and strongly illustrate the difference between the Democratic policy of reasonable expansion and the Republican policy of imperialism than the bill which passed the House and is now pending in the Senate.

I may be pardoned, Mr. President, for saying that I foresaw its importance and investigated this subject carefully at the time the Spanish treaty was submitted to the Senate. I made a speech at that time which briefly embodied the entire contention and gave warning of what the Republican policy of acquisition might lead to. In that speech I discussed authorities at some length, and I quote briefly from it simply to show the principle there outlined and its clear application to the present conditions.

But suppose that danger could be safeguarded by legislation. Where under our Constitution would you find the authority to keep the productions of the Filipinos, manufactured in their own homes, from coming unimpeded to the ports of the United States? In Loughborough vs. Blake (5 Wheat., 317), Chief Justice Marshall, speaking for the court, said:

"The eighth section of the first article [of the Constitution] gives to Congress the 'power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises,' for the purposes thereinafter mentioned. This grant is general, without limitation as to place. It consequently extends to all places over which the Government extends."

That is strong enough.

"The power, then, to lay and collect duties, imposts, and excises may be exercised and must be exercised throughout the United States. Does this term designate the whole or any particular portion of the American empire?"

He then goes on to answer the question:

"It [the United States] is the name given to our great Republic, which is composed of States and Territories. The District of Columbia or the territory west of the Missouri is not less within the United States than Maryland or Pennsylvania; and it is not less necessary, on the principles of our Constitution, that uniformity in the imposition of imposts, duties, and excises should be observed in the one than in the other."

The idea was advanced here a few days ago that Congress possessed a higher power over unorganized territory than that which it had over organized Territories; but when this decision was rendered the greater part of the territory west of the Missouri River, to which Chief Justice Marshall referred, was unorganized territory. This language applies to all the territory, as he says, which belongs to the United States.

The same principle is practically outlined in the case of Cross vs. Harrison (16 Howard). From a consideration of these opinions and the nature of our Government and institutions, it would seem clear that whenever any territory is brought within this American "empire," so called, it becomes subject to the same constitutional principles which limit Congress in regard to that which we now possess.

I can not believe that it will be within the power of Congress to prescribe a rate of duty on foreign goods brought into the Philippine Islands differing from the duty on same goods when brought into Texas, Maine, or California, nor can national legislation fix a tariff on importations which pass from the Philippine Islands to other parts of this country higher than the tax on importations which pass from the Territory of Arizona or the District of Columbia into any existing State or Territory.

We are now speaking of the powers of Congress. Is it within the power of the Congress of the United States to declare that goods which come from Arizona to the District of Columbia shall pay a certain rate of duty or a certain rate of tax—I do not care what you call it—and that goods which come from Texas to the District of Columbia shall pay another rate? Certainly not.

I will quote part of section 8, Article I of the Constitution:

* * * "but all duties, imposts and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States."

Now, if a tax should be laid on goods brought from Manila to San Francisco or New York, even if not a duty or impost, it would fall within the definition of the word "excise," and would be invalid if higher than like excises on goods from other ports of our country to New York or San Francisco.

Mr. CAFFERY. I would, then, ask the Senator whether, if that be true in regard to the Philippines, it is not true with regard to the inhabitants of New Mexico or any other Territory of the United States?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I do not wish to interfere with the Senator from Texas [Mr. CHILTON], but I will say with regard to the inhabitants of the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona, we have by public statute made the Constitution and laws of the United States applicable there. That makes the distinction.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, I have looked into that question carefully. According to that theory, all we have to do to withdraw the protection of the Constitution from the people of Arizona and New Mexico is to repeal that statute; and I do not believe for one moment that the personal rights of the people who inhabit the Territories of this country depend upon any such slender foundation.

The tax bill is loudly heralded as a mark of generosity to the Puerto Rican people; but what people in these days of civilization would care for rights which depend on the generosity of masters?

It must be remembered that the people of Puerto Rico were not so much the abject victims of Spanish tyranny as their neighbors of Cuba. Puerto Rico had a representation of four senators and twelve representatives in the Spanish Cortes, and her people were content with their condition. But when the soldiers and flag of this Union appeared upon the island they were welcomed as the bearers of a new creed which meant more freedom, more commerce, and more enlightenment than they had been able to enjoy under the decaying and far-distant power of the Spanish monarchy.

Puerto Rico came freely into this Government. Not a soldier was raised, not a gun was fired, not a voice of protest was heard in opposition to the power of the United States. The acquisition was as complete, peaceful, and hearty as that of Louisiana or Florida. What Puerto Rican would have dreamed that in coming under our sovereignty he did not also come under our Constitution? The people of the United States want Puerto Rico. We want it not alone because of its fertility or its size, but because it occupies a vantage ground in the Gulf of Mexico, possesses incalculable value as an outpost of defense for our country, as a protection to the Nicaragua Canal, and as a base for naval and military supplies in the West Indies.

No American citizen who has a mature conception of the future needs of his country would be willing to part with a possession of such extraordinary strategic value as the island of Puerto Rico, and no American citizen who has a mature conception of the sacredness of our free institutions would be willing to hold Puerto Rico as a victim of unequal privilege in a country which has boasted that it is all free. The words may be honeyed as they will, but any law which puts barriers against the trade of our American territory known as Puerto Rico that are not put upon the industries of other parts of the American territory is nothing but the tyranny and the spoliation of the strong in dealing with the weak.

Our Constitution does go to Puerto Rico. It goes everywhere that the American power goes. It is bound up in the American name, and it is shame to our pretensions that the first act of an American Congress in dealing with our new territories should be an effort to deny to these people that highest right of freemen, the protection of a written Constitution. It seems like a travesty, sir, to hold that Congress, which is the creature of the Constitution, which has no existence outside of that instrument, can legislate for anybody or anywhere in disregard of the terms of that Constitution.

I am glad to note from the debate in this Chamber and the statements of the public prints that some of the Republican members of the Senate will contest this bill to the uttermost. If so, it will manifest a noble lifting of country above party, which is too rarely seen in these rushing times.

The attempt to lay a tariff against the island of Puerto Rico will make a new issue, and unless all signs fail the American people will decide in November that as the territory and the power of the United States expand the light of our Constitution shall also expand to guide their progress.

Wherever the American sovereignty rests its foot let the American Constitution rear its head. If we buy a strip of land in Nicaragua, if we hold Guam or Samoa in the Pacific, if we should unfortunately retain the Philippines, let the humblest individual who is bound to give allegiance to this Government feel that his allegiance is given to a constitutional republic and not a Congressional despotism. Let us govern them according to the Constitution and tax them according to the Constitution.

Let us impose no discriminations on them that we would not permit others to impose on us. Even if there can be found expressions in some of the judicial opinions which look like a narrowing of the constitutional guaranties, let our statesmen in this year, which records so many great events in American history, broaden out, if necessary, to the proposition that our Constitution is as wide as our country and as vital as our power. Let us make no exceptions against loyal little Puerto Rico, but let us receive her with a spirit as unselfish as her coming was cordial. It is enough of the worship of the gospel of protection to keep out of our markets those who live under foreign flags without undertaking to introduce new problems of complication by calculating tariffs against those whose lives we could demand to uphold that Constitution which it is now claimed guarantees nothing to them.

The study of our Constitution is a part of the course in many of our common schools. Puerto Rico is to have common schools, and the advocates of this bill say that a large sum of money to be realized from the tariff is to be applied to their support. Nothing could better fit the children there for their duties as Americans than a training in the knowledge of our Constitution; but shall it be said that they are to be taught such knowledge by money realized from a violation of one of the simplest clauses of that instrument? Let us teach those youths by example, as well as precept, a lesson of free institutions, under a written Constitution and by methods of peace, conquering the world.

Let our flag go to Puerto Rico not simply as a tarpaulin for sugar hogsheads and coffee bags, but as a sacred thing to them and to ourselves—as a banner which means the same thing wherever it floats—as the symbol of a representative constitutional Republic whose triumphs in arms are but baubles compared to its triumphs in the peace and justice which God has marked for our true national destiny.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question before the Senate is upon the adoption of the proposed amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN].

Mr. ALLISON. I move to lay the amendment on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] to lay the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] on the table.

Mr. ALLEN. Upon that motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CULLOM (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN]. As he is not present, I shall withhold my vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. MCBRIDE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY]. As he is not present, I withhold my vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. PETTUS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. SCOTT (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Florida [Mr. TALIAFERRO]. I do not see him in the Chamber, and therefore withhold my vote. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. STEWART (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEITFELD]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I beg to inquire if the senior Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that the Senator from Washington has not voted.

Mr. WARREN. I am paired with that Senator; but it has been suggested to me that I transfer the pair to the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], so that the Senator from New Hampshire and the Senator from Washington will stand paired.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], the Chair is informed, has already voted.

Mr. WARREN. It is further suggested that I may transfer my pair to the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A pair has been announced with that Senator.

Mr. WARREN. Then I inquire if the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] has voted or if a pair has been announced with him?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut has not voted, and no pair has been announced with him.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, before the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] left the city, he being charged by a general order of the Senate with a duty requiring his absence, notified me that he was paired generally with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES]. There is some misunderstanding in regard to the pairs. The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] has announced a pair with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH].

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. If the Senator will permit me a moment, there is no misunderstanding. Before the Senator from Rhode Island went away he asked me to look after a pair for him, and I agreed to do so. The Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER] is absent without a pair, and it is proposed that the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] and the Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER] shall be paired. I paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH].

Mr. SPOONER. Very well.

Mr. WARREN. The arrangement suggested will be entirely agreeable to me, and I transfer my pair with the Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER] to the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] on this and other votes of a similar character on this measure, and I vote "yea."

Mr. SPOONER. I wish to say that if the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] were present he would vote "yea" on this proposition.

Mr. WETMORE (when his name was called). The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] has already stated what the arrangement is in regard to the pair of my colleague [Mr. ALDRICH] on this particular vote, and the Senator from Arkansas has announced his pair with my colleague. I wish to say that if my colleague were present he would vote "yea" on this question. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BERRY (after having voted in the negative). I wish to announce that I was paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE], but I have transferred that pair to the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW]. I, having voted, will let my vote stand, and the Senator from Maine will stand paired with the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas (after having voted in the negative). On the call of the roll I inadvertently voted. I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH], who is absent. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. SULLIVAN. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. MASON]. I observe he has not voted, and I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. HARRIS (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK], and the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCBRIDE] has a general pair with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY]. We desire to transfer our pairs, so as to permit us both to vote. Under this arrangement I will let my vote stand.

Mr. KENNEY. I desire to state that the senior Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER] is detained from the Senate by business. He has a general pair with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN].

Mr. PROCTOR. I am paired with the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. MALLORY]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 36, nays 17; as follows:

So Mr. ALLEN's amendment was laid on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question before the Senate is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES], which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That all duties collected to this date upon articles imported into the United States from Puerto Rico since the 11th day of April, 1899, the date of the exchange of ratifications of the treaty of peace between Spain and the United States, be returned to the persons from whom they were collected, and from and after the passage of this act no duties shall be collected on articles coming from Puerto Rico.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Mr. President, this bill came up yesterday somewhat unexpectedly, and I offered the amendment as expressive of my own personal feelings to some extent. Quite a number of Senators have expressed the view that there should be no further collection of customs duties on goods coming from Puerto Rico to the United States. If we have been in error in collecting duties in that way, it seemed to me but fair that those duties should be returned to the men who paid them. If we had no right to collect them, then the men who paid them ought to have the money returned. Those who have paid these duties and protested and are now having a hearing before the courts will, of course, get their money back if, under the law, they are entitled to this refund.

I am not particularly interested in that question, because I am willing that they should stand by the law. If we have the right to levy these taxes and propose not to levy them hereafter from any feeling of justice and fairness we may have, that same feeling, it seems to me, would apply to the duties which have been heretofore collected. I am aware that where this money has been paid into the Treasury of the United States and a claim is made for restitution, the parties who get the money back will make that almost as clear profit, because when they sold the goods, after bringing them here, they of course put the tariff duty on the price they got, and they have been reimbursed already by the consumer, and it would be little less than a bonus to them of the amount they had paid. I will not insist on this amendment, as a number of gentlemen on this side of the Chamber, as well as on the other, have expressed a dislike of this provision, and I care nothing for it except a desire to return to what I believe to be a correct course on the part of the Government. I am very much opposed to this bill, because it seems to me to be utterly pernicious and wrong in itself from every standpoint.

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] yesterday appealed to the Senate to pass this bill on the ground of the suffering that exists among the people of Puerto Rico, to relieve those people from the distress under which they now suffer. That of course appeals to the sympathy of every Senator, and if the conditions existing were such as they were left to be understood by members of the Senate there might be some reason for passing this bill.

But I do not think there is any ground to believe that such condition exists. The President of the United States in his annual message in December last made some statements with regard to Puerto Rico which seem to me to be wonderfully significant and as having great bearing in this discussion. He called attention in that message to the fact that there had been a storm in Puerto Rico in August last and that a hundred thousand people were rendered homeless. He stated that the Army was rendering assistance everywhere where suffering prevailed.

This message came in on the 5th of December. September, October, November, three whole months, had passed after the storm, after the devastation, after the destitution, and, as he stated, $392,342.63 had been expended by the military authorities in relieving the suffering existing in Puerto Rico. There was not one word of a suggestion on his part that any additional appropriation was needed to enable the military authorities to relieve the distress. There was not a suggestion that any step of this kind should be taken, or that there was any such condition of suffering in that island as to make it necessary to have an appropriation from this Government.

In the House of Representatives, when a bill was proposed, about which we all know, to levy a tax of 25 per cent on goods going into and coming out of Puerto Rico, there was a storm raised in the United States which in its destructive influence seems to be about as bad as the storm in Puerto Rico in August. It made a wonderful impression among the Republican members of both branches of Congress. It made a great impression all over the country. There was an immediate effort to get out of the storm. One proposition was to reduce the tax from 25 to 15 per cent, and because it was a little one they were in hopes the people would condone the outrage.

The President of the United States seemed also to be moved by some such motive, and he sent in a message which I propose to read to the Senate in a few minutes. But I want to read the exact language of the message of December:

> Our plain duty is to abolish all customs tariffs between the United States and Puerto Rico and give her products free access to our markets.
> As a result of the hurricane which swept over Puerto Rico on the 8th of August, 1899, over 100,000 people were reduced to absolute destitution, without homes, and deprived of the necessaries of life. To the appeal of the War Department the people of the United States made prompt and generous response. In addition to the private charity of our people, the War Department has expended for the relief of the distressed $392,342.63, which does not include the cost of transportation.
> It is desirable that the government of the island under the law of belligerent right, now maintained through the executive department, should be superseded by an administration entirely civil in its nature.

Then he proceeds to discuss the sort of government that ought to be provided for the island of Puerto Rico. There is not one syllable recommending a special appropriation to be made to relieve the individual distress and suffering that existed in that island. Why should all these months elapse before there should be any suggestion made by the President or anybody else that there ought to be an appropriation by Congress to relieve the sufferings in Puerto Rico.

On March 2, after the storm in this country, the President sent this message to the Senate and House:

> To the Senate and House of Representatives:
> Since the evacuation of Puerto Rico by the Spanish forces on the 18th day of October, 1898, the United States has collected on products coming from that island to the ports of the United States the duties fixed by the Dingley Act, and amounting to $2,095,455.88, and will continue to collect under said law until Congress shall otherwise direct. Although I had the power, and having in mind the best interests of the people of the island used it, to modify duties on goods and products entering into Puerto Rico, I did not have the power to remit or modify duties on Puerto Rican products coming into the ports of the United States.
> In view of the pressing necessity for immediate revenues in Puerto Rico for conducting the government there and for the extension of public education, and in view also of the provisional legislation just inaugurated by the House of Representatives, and for the purpose of making the principle embodied in that legislation applicable to the immediate past as well as to the immediate future, I recommend that the above sum so collected and the sums hereafter collected under existing law shall, without waiting for the enactment of the general legislation now pending, be appropriated for the use and benefit of the island.
> EXECUTIVE MANSION, March 2, 1900.

I have read the whole of the message. It was sent in on the 2d of March, and in obedience to it this appropriation bill was offered. There is not one syllable in that message of its being intended to relieve individual suffering, of its being intended to relieve the condition of destitution that existed in that island. On the contrary, he states the reasons for it, and I will read them again:

> In view of the pressing necessity for immediate revenues in Puerto Rico for conducting the government there—

That was the first cause—

> and for the extension of public education—

That was the second—> and in view also of the provisional legislation just inaugurated by the House of Representatives, and for the purpose of making the principle embodied in that legislation applicable to the immediate past as well as to the immediate future—

He asked that this appropriation be made, not to relieve the sufferings, not to relieve the starving, but to carry out the purposes enumerated in the message.

Mr. President, our course toward this island since the ratification of the treaty of peace has been such as to paralyze business. We have subjected its people to tariff taxes which have prostrated every business in the island. The business prostration, the suffering from this action of the United States, has rendered it impossible for the government of Puerto Rico to go on and pay its ordinary expenses, proving conclusively that our course is unjustifiable, indefensible, wrong in every way. The way to remedy that is to reverse our action, and instead of levying taxes on the people of the island we should follow the recommendation of the President and give them absolute free access to the markets of this country and let them buy and sell here without let or hindrance. When that is done, the people of Puerto Rico will be in sufficiently prosperous condition to take care of themselves. Yesterday there was read in the Senate the resolutions of a meeting of the chamber of commerce or board of trade of Puerto Rico wherein it was distinctly said that all they want is to be allowed themselves to raise such money as they need and pay it themselves. They are not asking for charity. All they want is justice.

We have pursued a course toward them that is indefensible. It is wrong, and if the Congress of the United States are willing to stand up like men and say, we have been doing wrong in this business and propose to correct it, I am willing to go as far as anybody. I am willing, if you desire to do so, to return to the island of Puerto Rico this money, which I believe to have been unjustly collected from certain individuals; but if we do it, I think it ought to go in a different way from what is proposed here. This bill is a short one. It reads:

> That the sum of $2,095,455.88, being the amount of customs revenue received on importations by the United States from Puerto Rico since the evacuation of Puerto Rico by the Spanish forces on the 18th of October, 1898, to the 1st of January, 1900—

As it stood originally it read—

> together with any further customs revenue collected on importations from Puerto Rico since the 1st of January, 1900, or that shall hereafter be collected under existing law—

Those words, I am glad to say, are stricken out; so that it will read—> shall be placed at the disposal of the President, to be used for the government now existing and which may hereafter be established in Puerto Rico, and for public education, public works, and other governmental and public purposes therein.

Now, if we want to refund to the people of that country for public purposes the duties we have collected, let us not pretend that we are doing it for the purpose of relieving the suffering amongst individuals. The suffering that exists among individuals, so far as it come from our action, has come from the prostration of business which has resulted from our levying these high taxes against the people of that country. That is all.

While I propose to withdraw the substitute for this bill which I proposed, I will offer at the end of the bill an amendment which I am sure the Senator from Iowa will accept, because he proposes to strike out all provisions relating to future taxes.

After the word "appropriated," in line 10, on page 2, I shall move to insert:

> And that from and after the passage of this act no duties shall be collected on articles coming from Puerto Rico.

I am sure the Senator will agree to that.

Mr. SPOONER. Read it again.

Mr. ALLEN. I should like to ask the Senator a question right here.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I will read it again:

> And that from and after the passage of this act no duties shall be collected on articles coming from Puerto Rico.

Mr. ALLEN. I should like to bring into the discussion right here what I regard as germane, a very important question; that is, What duties are being levied upon American goods shipped into Puerto Rico now, and what duties are being levied upon imports into this country from Puerto Rico? What does the rate amount to as compared with the Dingley rates?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. It is just the same.

Mr. ALLEN. And are these rates to be continued indefinitely, until the passage of the bill which is in the charge of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER], whenever that may be?

Mr. ALLISON. The duties levied upon articles imported into Puerto Rico are those arranged under the military authority, and are not the duties imposed under the Dingley Act.

Mr. ALLEN. Are they purely arbitrary duties?

Mr. ALLISON. They are arbitrary in the sense that they are imposed under military authority. They have no statutory force.

Mr. ALLEN. They simply grow out of the military occupancy?

Mr. ALLISON. They grow out of the military occupation of the island. Now, with respect to articles going into Puerto Rico (I thought I had a memorandum, but I left it at my house this morning, I fear), from time to time the President of the United States has issued orders admitting into Puerto Rico various articles free of duty, not only from the United States, but from all countries. All food products, I think I may say without exception, are now admitted into Puerto Rico free of duty.

Mr. MORGAN. From all countries?

Mr. ALLISON. From all countries, because the military tariff law applying to Puerto Rico is a tariff applicable to all countries, including the United States. All farm implements are also free of duty, and, as I recollect now, without having the document before me (the Senator from Nebraska stated that he would be glad to know that), there are a large number of articles of that nature which are admitted free of duty or at a nominal duty. These orders have been changed from time to time; that is to say, additions have been made from time to time to the free list, so that I think practically the military tariff of Puerto Rico on articles imported into that island is a liberal one.

Mr. ALLEN. With the consent of the Senator from Arkansas, I should like to ask one more question. Do we put up the same bars to the importation into Puerto Rico of American products that are put up as to articles imported from elsewhere?

Mr. ALLISON. What would be called the Puerto Rican tariff applies to all articles imported into Puerto Rico from the United States and from elsewhere.

Mr. CHILTON. On articles imported into Puerto Rico from France do they not collect the Dingley rates?

Mr. ALLISON. No; they do not. There is what might be called an arbitrary military tariff that extends to Puerto Rico, applying to all countries alike, including the United States.

Mr. ALLEN. That is what I wanted to know—whether the United States is put upon an exact equality with other countries.

Mr. ALLISON. With every other country as respects importations into the island.

Mr. ALLEN. Now, one question more, with the consent of the Senator from Arkansas. What rate of duties are the Puerto Ricans paying upon their imports into this country?

Mr. ALLISON. They are paying the rates of duty imposed by the Dingley law.

Mr. ALLEN. They are paying under the terms of the Dingley law?

Mr. ALLISON. They are paying under the terms of the Dingley law.

Mr. ALLEN. Now, is it proposed to continue this arrangement, the Puerto Ricans paying under the Dingley law on their imports into this country, and the inhabitants of the United States paying under the military schedule in Puerto Rico, until the passage of a bill establishing a government in Puerto Rico?

Mr. ALLISON. Well, Mr. President, we have now under consideration such a measure, and it has been laid aside temporarily for the purpose of passing this bill, regarded by many, I think by the President of the United States, as somewhat urgent. I know it is so regarded by General Davis, who is the military governor there. When this bill is disposed of, as I hope it will be in a few moments, then we will enter upon the very question which the Senator from Nebraska suggests.

Mr. ALLEN. Now, does the Senator expect—I do not say hope, but does the Senator expect—that a bill will pass and become a law at this Congress establishing a territorial or district form of government or some form of government different from what we have now in Puerto Rico?

Mr. ALLISON. I not only hope it, but I expect it; and if we do not split too many hairs and draw too many fine constitutional points all these questions will be settled at a very early day. Just what we will do after arguing questions by and large as to the details of the bill, I do not know, but I have no doubt that at a very early day a bill will be passed here that will be entirely liberal and just to the Puerto Rican people as respects their government and as respects our trade relations with them.

Mr. ALLEN. Will that take into consideration a tariff?

Mr. ALLISON. Undoubtedly. I take it that there is no one here on any side of this Chamber who proposes to continue the commercial situation as between ourselves and Puerto Rico for any considerable period. I shall be glad to hasten the consideration of that question; but it is manifest that we can not now deal with the whole Puerto Rican question on this bill as respects present relief to them when they are seeking to plant their crop, their coffee, and their sugar, and so on, where present relief is required. Immediate relief of the situation there is required, and it can not very well wait until we deal with this whole question. The Senator from Arkansas seems to have the idea, if he will pardon me one moment, that because this bill is brought in now and was not brought in at an earlier day it can not be emergent. What the commanding officer in Puerto Rico wants to do is to furnish an opportunity for those people to begin the planting of their crops, the clearing of their land, and the establishment of their roads. There is not a schoolhouse in Puerto Rico, and a portion of this fund is to be used for that purpose. It is worth while, it seems to me, for us to begin to erect at least a schoolhouse or two in the territory of Puerto Rico, with its eight or nine hundred thousand inhabitants. I can assure the Senators—they do not need that assurance; they know how that government is being administered by the present commanding officer there—I can assure them that every dollar of this appropriation will be used for beneficial purposes in that island and for the lawful purposes directly mentioned here, or implied in the language we propose.

So my appeal, if it is of any value, is that we shall deal with this question now, and then deal with the question which we know is controverted. Without saying which side we are on, either on our side of the Chamber or on the other side of the Chamber, let us have a debate upon that question which will properly belong to the very bill that is now before the Senate and which has been laid aside informally only for the purpose of treating this question of an appropriation of money. Every question suggested by the Senator from Arkansas and by the Senator from Nebraska they can consider and offer as an amendment to the bill that is now under the charge and control of the Senator from Ohio. So there is no disposition to meet all these questions now as they will come properly before the Senate on that bill.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Mr. President, it may be entirely true that we could inquire while the bill of which the Senator speaks is before the Senate what the purpose of this appropriation is, but it does seem to me that it would not be out of order to ask what is to be done with this money when we are asked to appropriate it.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The Senator has just stated that General Davis is very anxious to have this appropriation. As I have seen no estimate made from any department—no statement made as to what is to be done with this money—I shall be glad to know what particular thing it is that General Davis proposes to do with this money.

Mr. ALLISON. He proposes to do a great many things with it, I have no doubt.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The Senator from Iowa stated a while ago——

Mr. ALLISON. In the first place, he is carrying on there now a civil government. Because of this agitation——

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Let me ask the Senator right there if there is sufficient money in the military chest to defray the expenses that he is carrying on there as military commander of the army. Is there any deficiency?

Mr. ALLISON. There is no deficiency as yet, but there are no revenues practically being collected there now.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The Army of the United States is not supported by the revenues of Puerto Rico.

Mr. ALLISON. I understand that perfectly well.

Mr. ALLEN. Where did he manage to get the tremendous sum of money that he has expended?

Mr. ALLISON. It was largely received, of course, from the imposition of tariff duties on articles imported into Puerto Rico.

Mr. ALLEN. How does it come into his hands?

Mr. ALLISON. In the military arm of the Government.

Mr. ALLEN. Does not that go to the Treasury of the United States?

Mr. ALLISON. Not a dollar of it. Not a dollar of money that has been collected under the tariff has gone there.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. What amount has been collected?

Mr. ALLISON. No Puerto Rican tariff duties have been paid into the Treasury of the United States. It all goes into the Puerto Rican treasury and it is all expended there.

Mr. ALLEN. Is he levying any military exactions, any local taxes, upon the people?

Mr. ALLISON. There are some local taxes there.

Mr. ALLEN. Will the Senator be kind enough to state what they are?

Mr. ALLISON. They are communal taxes chiefly, and I think there are some license taxes, so called, levied there upon the occupations of people, such as brokers and merchants. I have not these details, because they belong more particularly to the committee having in charge the bill proposing to provide a form of civil government for Puerto Rico.

Mr. ALLEN. What is the amount of the expenditure?

Mr. ALLISON. At the present time?

Mr. ALLEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. ALLISON. I do.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. If the Senator will permit me, I will read some of the items for which this appropriation may very properly be expended.

Mr. ALLISON. I am very much obliged to the Senator.

Mr. ALLEN. I merely ask the Senator what this money is being expended for, in what channel—not what it might be expended for, but what it is expended for.

Mr. ALLISON. In Puerto Rico now?

Mr. ALLEN. In Puerto Rico, locally.

Mr. ALLISON. It is being expended to sustain schools, to sustain the judiciary, to sustain the local administration, to sustain the quasi-civil administration they have there. It is expended in the maintenance of the courts, the municipal governments, and so on.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. If the Senator will permit me, I have the testimony of General Davis, the governor of Puerto Rico, before me.

Mr. ALLISON. That will give the items.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Replying to a question propounded by the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL], he said:

> What is needed is $2,000,000 for municipal expenditures, for the support of municipalities, paving, waterworks, sanitation, police, orphanages, almshouses, and the same objects to which municipal taxes are applied in the United States.
> The CHAIRMAN. You have now a system of municipal taxation under your orders?
> General DAVIS. Yes, sir.
> The CHAIRMAN. Will that yield a sufficient revenue?
> General DAVIS. It must. I do not expect that there would need to be more than a temporary assistance given to municipalities.
> The CHAIRMAN. By continuing the present system of municipal taxation by the legislation that we may enact, we will meet that point?
> General DAVIS. Yes, sir. The island ought not to attempt to carry on its functions with less than $3,000,000 revenue, divided in this manner: A million dollars for schools; and in explaination of that I will say that there is but one modern schoolhouse in Puerto Rico to-day, and that has been built in the last four months.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Will the Senator please repeat the statement about the schoolhouses?

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Yes, sir; with pleasure.

> A million dollars for schools; and in explanation of that I will say that there is but one modern schoolhouse in Puerto Rico to-day, and that has been built in the last four months.

Mr. ALLISON. Allow me to say that the Senator from Arkansas evidently interrupted the Senator from Indiana so that he might repeat that there is a schoolhouse there, when only a moment ago I said there was not a schoolhouse. It seems there is one schoolhouse for the million people in Puerto Rico.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. "The wicked flee when no man pursueth."

Mr. FAIRBANKS. The Senator from Iowa was right as to the situation four months ago. There was not one modern schoolhouse there then. General Davis proceeds as follows:

> Every town needs schoolhouses, every barrio, every ward. On a very economical basis, it will cost $1,500,000 to establish schoolhouses adequate to the teaching of the children of Puerto Rico. For educational purposes, $1,000,000 a year is indispensable. I think this year we are spending about $340,000 on schools. The next is public works. The condition of the roads of Puerto Rico is as bad as can be, except about 150 miles of road, which is as good as any in the world.

The bill expressly provides that this money shall be used, among other things, for public works.

Mr. WOLCOTT. The coffee plantations suffer for seed, etc.

Mr. ALLISON. It will be used for that purpose also.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I read further from the testimony of General Davis:

> The condition of the roads of Puerto Rico is as bad as can be, except about 150 miles of road, which is as good as any in the world.
> Mr. COCKRELL. Where is that good road?
> General DAVIS. From San Juan to Ponce and some branches. There are about 80 miles to Ponce, and there are branches aggregating some 70 miles more. Roads ought to receive an expenditure of $1,000,000 a year for ten years at least.
> The CHAIRMAN. That is for highways?
> General DAVIS. That is for highways; I am not speaking of railways or anything of that kind.

There is much additional testimony to similar effect, but I shall not stop to read it; it is in the committee's report to the Senate.

Money spent in putting poor, idle men to work building schoolhouses and upon other needed public improvements is wisely spent; it is the most helpful form of charity.

These are some of the necessities for the appropriation.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Does the Senator from Iowa accept the suggestion of the Senator from Indiana as to the purposes for which this appropriation is made?

Mr. ALLISON. I certainly do not know in detail to what purpose or purposes this amount will be applied. I do not know that. I only know that we have specified in this bill so far as we can possibly specify the purposes to which it may be applied.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Then it is not a charity.

Mr. ALLISON. It is impossible for us, I submit to the Senator, to specify more in detail than we have specified. We tried it in the Committee on Appropriations, and all were agreed, so far as I know, that we had specified as fully as we could fairly do the purposes for which this money should be used.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Mr. President, it seems to me that the limitations put by the Senate committee on this expenditure cut off the arguments that were used in favor of the passage of the bill yesterday and which appealed most strongly to me. The statement made that there were a great many people who were ruined by the storm last winter, who were without the means of support, appeals very strongly to anybody's sympathies. If there is not money enough in the hands of the military authorities in Puerto Rico to relieve such conditions, I am ready to vote for all the money that is needed for that purpose. But this bill specifically and in terms cuts off the use of a single cent of this money for any such purpose. It distinctly says it must be used for public purposes, for building roads, and for school purposes, and other conditions of that kind.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Arkansas allow me to ask him what kind of an amendment he would propose to accomplish the purpose he has just expressed?—for I am in full sympathy with the Senator.

Mr. ALLEN. Public charity.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I would rather vote for the bill as it came from the House than to vote for it as amended.

Mr. FORAKER. I suggest that the Senator move an amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator kindly read the provision in the bill as passed by the House? I am not familiar with it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, it becomes the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 8245) temporarily to provide revenues for the relief of the island of Puerto Rico, and for other purposes.

Mr. FORAKER. I ask that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside until this matter may be disposed of.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, that will be taken as the sense of the Senate. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. SEWELL. Mr. President, I would ask the attention of the Senator from Arkansas in relation to the statement made by him that this question was not brought before the country by the President. I find on page 50 of the President's message the following:

> As a result of the hurricane which swept over Puerto Rico on the 8th of August, 1899, over 100,000 people were reduced to absolute destitution, without homes, and deprived of the necessaries of life. To the appeal of the War Department the people of the United States made prompt and generous response. In addition to the private charity of our people, the War Department has expended for the relief of the distressed $392,342.63, which does not include the cost of transportation.

I will state my own information is that that has very largely increased up to this time; that there has been an absolute necessity for the issue of rations to those people, who are in a condition very much like the reconcentrados under Weyler, a condition that the United States ought not to allow to continue at the present time. This appropriation is practically for the relief of those people; it may be through the employment on the Government works, so as not to continue a state of pauperization. That is the intention, and this bill should stand on its own merits as a measure of relief to Puerto Rico, the general question as to the government and trade relations in the future coming up under the bill which the Senator from Ohio has in charge.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. If the Senator from New Jersey had done me the honor to listen to me in the beginning of what I had to say he would have observed that I read at the beginning exactly what he has read from the President's message, and that I called attention to the fact that there was not one solitary syllable of suggestion in the President's message asking for any special appropriation for this purpose; that he advised Congress and he advised the people of the United States that there had been expended by the War Department for the purpose of relieving the suffering resulting from the storm the sum of $392,342.63 in addition to the sums that had been contributed by private individuals; but that there was not one word in the message asking for an additional appropriation for this purpose.

Now, if the storm occurred in August, and the months of September, October, and November had passed and there was no necessity for a special appropriation for the relief of those people in December, I can not understand where the necessity comes now, especially when there is no official information to advise us of that fact. We are left to conjecture. We are assured that there are conditions there equal to the condition of the reconcentrados in Cuba, but the official information does not come to this body; and as far as I am concerned I am not willing to make appropriations on mere rumors of that sort.

Mr. FORAKER. I did not hear all of the Senator's remark, but——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. SEWELL. I will say to the Senator from Arkansas that that expenditure by the War Department is going on to-day, to the exhaustion of the fund at the disposal of that Department, and that this money is to take its place practically.

Mr. FORAKER. The Senator from New Jersey has adverted to what I intended to say for the benefit of the Senator from Arkansas. As I understand it, the War Department has been making large expenditures for the relief of those who were made to suffer by the hurricane. I understand that those expenditures amount to a very large sum.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Do they need a larger sum?

Mr. FORAKER. The reason why this legislation was not sooner proposed, as I understand it, is because it was hoped that out of the war emergency fund, by the exercise of the power belonging to the President and the War Department, they might be able to relieve the necessities of the island until Congress should legislate and give some relief.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Now, as I understand the Senator from Ohio, his idea is that this appropriation is to assist in the work of relieving suffering that is carried on by the War Department.

Mr. FORAKER. What I undertook to say was that my information is that the War Department has been expending large sums of money out of what is called the war emergency fund to relieve distress and suffering occasioned by the hurricane and occasioned by other——

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I think that has been the case, and that has been properly done.

Mr. FORAKER. Yes; and they hoped that they might be able to carry the matter along until Congress would legislate; but there was so much delay about it that finally this proposition was made.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator——

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. But this bill distinctly provides that not a dollar of this money shall be used for any such purpose as that.

Mr. FORAKER. That is what I wanted to see this bill cover if you amend it, and that is why I interrupted the Senator a moment ago. I desired to ask him to suggest the form of an amendment that would be acceptable.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if the Senator from Arkansas will permit me, I beg to say that I sat very patiently three or four weeks listening to testimony on this Puerto Rican question, and I want simply to make a suggestion to the Senator. It is very likely he has thought of it, and yet he finds objections to this bill. Inasmuch as there are only two roads in the entire island of Puerto Rico—one from San Juan to Ponce, and I think an extension of that road to some other point covering a few miles—does not the Senator think that if our authorities there were given money to construct roads it would give employment to those poor people who have been thrown out of employment because of the destruction of the coffee plantations on the island, and could there be a more charitable and beneficent use of our money than to give employment to those poor men who are now destitute and in want?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Mr. President, if I could understand what is the purpose of this bill, I could make up my mind whether or not I am for it. The Senator from Ohio thinks it ought to supplement the fund that is being used for charity to help those people out. The Senator from Iowa thinks that it ought to be used to help the people who are planting coffee and sugar; how, he does not say. That is the nearest he comes to making an explanation about what the money might be used for. The Senator from New Hampshire wants it appropriated to build roads, so that the contractors who propose to build the roads may perhaps hire some of the poor fellows who are living along the line of the road and may give them something to pay for the work they do.

Mr. ALLISON. That is the suggestion of General Davis. He proposes to pay some of those poor people wages in extending and enlarging the roads, and to give an opportunity to those who plant coffee to recuperate the wastage and damage of the storm last year, in order that the coffee may grow again. I do not suppose that it is possible, as I said to the Senator, for us in detail to be more specific than we have been.

The Senator from Ohio yesterday suggested an amendment which I did not think was objectionable, although I think the money can be used now in the manner I state as respects these plantations. He suggested the insertion of certain words in line 4, on the last page, the words "including agricultural relief," which I understood him to expect would more readily provide for the kind of relief proposed in the way of paying wages, and enabling the farmers to recuperate their lands wasted by the storm of last year. Of course I can not satisfy the Senator from Arkansas, I am sorry to say, by any more definite and detailed statement. If he has any doubts about the President of the United States giving proper and judicious orders, or about their execution by General Davis, whom he knows, then I fail to inform him.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. It seems to me to be impossible to find what the purpose of this appropriation is, and I shall content myself by moving as an amendment at the end of the bill, after the word "appropriated," line 10, page 2, the following:

And that from and after the passage of this act no duty shall be collected on articles coming into Puerto Rico from other ports of the United States or on goods coming from the island of Puerto Rico into other ports of the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas withdraws the pending amendment and offers an amendment which the Secretary will read.

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President, I desire, in the first place, to call the attention of the Senate to what I consider a dangerous departure from the practice of the Government from its foundation as shown in this bill. I do not mean to say that you have not possibly the power to act in this regard, though it is absolutely certain that it has not been the practice of the Government at all until the Senate voted what is called the war emergency fund.

Mr. President, that ought not to be taken as a precedent for any bill of this kind. The Constitution provides that no money shall be taken out of the Treasury of the United States except on an appropriation made by law. What is an appropriation made by law has been interpreted by Congress to mean an appropriation for a particular purpose. That has been the custom of the Government from its foundation. We do not say that a million or two million dollars shall be appropriated for the use of the Army. That has not been the habit. There have been no bills that I remember, prior to the present Administration, which carried a gross sum for general purposes. Appropriation bills have always specified, not minutely, but in a degree, the object of the appropriation. All appropriation bills have specified as well as might be what the money was to be used for, how it was to be expended, the particular purpose as well as the bill could define, for which the appropriation was made.

It is true that when we found ourselves on the very verge of a war and utterly unprepared for it, as we ought never to be in the future, an appropriation of $50,000,000 was made here for the purpose of enabling the President to prepare for the defenses of the country. I am not here to criticise that bill, because, as you all know, every Senator felt then that we were going to war and that we were unprepared for it, and we had no time to assemble our committees and have them parcel out the different expenses into different directions. If that bill was right, it was right because of the emergency, the necessity for acting and acting quickly; but I see no reason why we should abandon the uniform custom of Congress in making expenditures and especially in making an appropriation of large amounts like this. I want this bill to get in such a shape that I can vote for it. I can not vote for it in its present shape.

Mr. SEWELL. I will state, if the Senator from Alabama will allow me to make a suggestion to him, that subsequent to the $50,000,000 appropriation there was an additional appropriation of $3,000,000 given to the President for such purposes as he should deem best in connection with the pacification of the island of Cuba. This appropriation is intended for general purposes.

Mr. PETTUS. I understand that since that $50,000,000 appropriation was made there have been other appropriations. I am only calling the attention of Senators to what is a dangerous departure from the practice of Congress in making appropriations.

Mr. President, it will not do; it is a dangerous practice. We had to do it when war with Spain commenced, and I voted for it, and I do not at all regret it. I do not know that that was an unconstitutional appropriation; I do not know that this is, and I am not declaring that it is; but I am declaring that it is a dangerous practice and that it ought to be abandoned.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Will the Senator from Alabama permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. PETTUS. Certainly.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Is it not true that long before the present Congress large sums of money have been appropriated by Congress for the relief of sufferers in the Mississippi Valley, and that those sums were included in a general appropriation, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, in terms even more general than those proposed by the pending bill?

Mr. PETTUS. Not in the least, Mr. President. I remember those appropriations. This Government has acted liberally toward sufferers at home and abroad, and I think we ought to continue that practice. I am in favor of it. I always have been in favor of such action when a great calamity came upon a people. We relieved the Mississippi Valley sufferers; we relieved the Chicago sufferers; we relieved the sufferers in Ireland, in India, and in many other places. I am proud of the fact that we did it; but we did not do it in the form the Senator suggests. We appropriated a specific sum of money for a specific purpose, and that was to relieve the suffering caused by a particular calamity.

Mr. ALLISON. Now, will the Senator from Alabama yield to me for a moment?

Mr. PETTUS. I will.

Mr. ALLISON. There are many appropriations that must be, in the nature of things, of a general character. We appropriated $1,400,000——

Mr. PETTUS. I yielded to the Senator only for a question.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well; I will sit down.

Mr. PETTUS. We do appropriate sometimes for things that we ought not to appropriate for. I mean by that that we spread our appropriations out in a manner which is not authorized by the practice of the Government, and that is very dangerous in itself.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Will the Senator from Alabama permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. PETTUS. Yes, sir.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Has there ever been a case where an appropriation has been made for the purpose of upbuilding the schools by the General Government and for the purpose of building roads in the manner indicated by this bill?

Mr. PETTUS. I do not remember any such case; but I am not prepared to say that there never was such a case. I am prepared to say that it ought not to be done; that it would be contrary to the practice of the Government, to the almost uniform practice, which may have been violated at times, but only in what was thought to be an emergency.

Mr. WOLCOTT. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. PETTUS. Certainly.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I will refer the Senator to the phraseology of the resolutions which have been heretofore passed, long before this Congress. Here is one for the Mississippi River in 1882, which I shall read:

That the sum of $100,000 is hereby appropriated, of which sum so much as is necessary shall be used by the Secretary of War in the purchase and distribution of subsistence stores to aid in the relief of destitute persons in the district overflowed by the Mississippi River and its tributaries.

There was no specific designation of what stores the Secretary of War was to buy, but it was generally for the "purchase of subsistence stores." In 1897, when there was another destructive flood in the Mississippi River, there was an appropriation——

Mr. PETTUS. I did not yield to the Senator to make a speech.

Mr. WOLCOTT. This is part of the question.

Mr. PETTUS. Oh, yes; it is a part of the question.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I am coming to the interrogation point in a minute.

Mr. PETTUS. After you make your speech.

Mr. WOLCOTT. No; I assure the Senator that this is all a part of a somewhat long, but really a very simple question—to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War in the purchase and distribution of subsistence stores for such destitute persons as may require assistance in the district overflowed by the Mississippi River and its tributaries and by the Red River of the North by recent floods.

Now I come to my question: I ask the Senator from Alabama if that is not far more general than the provision in the pending bill?

Mr. PETTUS. It is not. It is a specific appropriation for a specific purpose. Could one dollar of the money appropriated in the instances which have been called to my attention have been lawfully used for the purpose of relieving a man who was not injured or in distress by reason of the two calamities there mentioned? Not at all. You had to intrust it to an officer to ascertain who the people were whom you intended to benefit; but those you intended to benefit were specifically described in each case. Oh, Mr. President, it will not do. It is a bad policy, and it is a dangerous policy.

I propose as an amendment—I intend to propose several amendments, but there are two of them to which I shall call attention.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator offer his amendment as an amendment to the pending amendment? There is an amendment now pending, which was offered by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES].

Mr. PETTUS. No, sir. I supposed that as many amendments as Senators chose to submit might be offered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the amendments be read for information, and lie upon the table.

Mr. PETTUS. I am going to offer an amendment, and the amendment can lie upon the table until such time as the Senate wishes to consider it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair simply made the inquiry whether the Senator desired to offer his amendment as a separate amendment or as an amendment to the amendment now pending.

Mr. PETTUS. I do not intend to offer it as an amendment to the pending amendment, but I desire to offer it as an independent amendment. The first is to strike out of the bill, on page 1, line 4, the word "being" and all that follows it down to line 9, including the date "1900" in that line; so as to eliminate entirely the statement as to where this money came from. I want to vote for this bill. As I tell you, I am perfectly willing to vote for any proper appropriation to be expended in any proper way. If my amendment be adopted, it will simply leave the bill that you appropriate the amount of money here named out of the Treasury; that is, I mean that that sum shall be appropriated.

Then I propose a separate amendment, on page 2, not connected with the other, by striking out, in line 1, on page 2, the words "the President" and inserting in lieu of those words the word "and;" then striking out the word "for," in the same line, and inserting "by;" in line 3 by striking out the word "and;" and in line 4 by striking out the words "governmental and public." I propose that as one amendment. I intend to propose a third amendment by striking out of lines 7 and 8 the words "or so much thereof as may be necessary."

That would leave the money mentioned in the bill to be expended by the government of Puerto Rico. What for? "For public education, public works, and other purposes therein."

It is true that the President of the United States, who, I am glad to say, I believe to be a very generous man, has used a very large amount of money which was appropriated for a different purpose. There is wherein I am calling your attention to the nature of this departure. I am not censuring the President; I suppose if I had been in his place and had all that money at my disposal, I would have done the same thing; I believe I would, but the fact is that the President, according to the statement in his message and according to the report of the Attorney-General, had, up to the 1st day of January of this year—I believe it was this year—expended nearly $400,000 of the money appropriated by Congress as an emergency fund. That was, I suppose, to relieve the sufferings of the people of that island. That is what the Secretary of War states about it. The sufferings were great; the people there were in need of immediate relief; it was our country, and as we had been assisting distresses caused by these dreadful calamities in different parts of our country and also the sufferings of people abroad, when they were very great and the relief was urgent, the President devoted a sum to protect the people there from starving, as I understand it.

Mr. President, if you will put this bill in the shape I have suggested, it will then say nothing about tariff, nothing about duties, but it will appropriate a certain sum of money for the relief of those people generally, to be at the disposal and to be used by the government of Puerto Rico not "and for," but "for"—"for public education, public works, and other purposes therein;" that is, in the island of Puerto Rico. That is a broad discretion, and, if it is given, the money will be appropriated by a quasi civil government for the present, and by a real civil government, if we establish one over that island.

I am in favor of giving this money for that purpose. I think it would be an honorable, a just, and a wise thing to do; but I am not willing to vote for the bill in its present shape. It commits this Senate to what I do not believe they can be committed to lawfully, and that is the use of money unlawfully collected.

If we strike out the provision as to where the money comes from, it will not make a row of pins' difference as to the validity of this bill; it will not make a particle of difference to the United States. The United States has collected this money, it is true. If it belongs to them, they will hold it; and if it does not belong to them, they will have to deliver up a large part of it. Whether we appropriate this sum out of that money, or out of the Treasury generally, does not at all affect the people of the United States; it does not at all affect the people of Puerto Rico; it is of no value under the sun in this bill. So it ought to be stricken out. It can not affect the United States, because every Senator knows that if this money was unlawfully collected and proper steps have been taken to reclaim it, it will be reclaimed; if it has been lawfully collected, it belongs to the United States, and there is no distinction between that and any other money in the Treasury. Why, then, encumber the bill with a statement of the use of the money which very many of us believe was unlawfully collected?

It has been said that this money is not to be used for the purpose of relieving distress. To be sure, as the bill was framed, it could not have been used for that purpose, because the purposes were specifically enumerated—that is to say, it was for education generally, for public education and for public works generally, and for other governmental and public purposes. That included the whole field. That is to say, we appropriate this much money to be used in Puerto Rico without being limited to any purpose, unless it be a public or governmental purpose. It is a broad appropriation; it covers the whole field of legislation; it includes every single public expense that could be thought of; and it includes it without any distribution at all; it puts it all into the hands of the President, to be used by him. I want it put in the hands of a government that can appropriate it and appropriate it now.

Mr. President, I do not want it understood that I am charging that the President of the United States would use this money improperly. I am not making any such charge, and I would not believe another man if he made it, unless it might be that some of the President's agents deceived him. I think that might readily be. I do not want his agents to deceive him. If you put it into the hands of the government of Puerto Rico, then they can appropriate it as they please, and that government ought to appropriate it to the best advantage to secure good government and prosperity in the island.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, yesterday, when this matter was up, I obtained the floor and was proceeding to give my views on some of the phases of the subject, with which I acknowledge I was not then as well acquainted as I am now. There was some difficulty in adjusting the parliamentary status and the wishes of the Senate as to what should be discussed, and as to how long it should be discussed, and as the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW] expressed a desire to speak, as he had to leave the city I gave way.

I am in a much better condition this morning to present my thoughts and some facts than I was yesterday, because, in the meantime, I have investigated somewhat; and if there ever was another subject which appears to need investigation, and about which so many Senators know so little, I have not struck it in my association with this body. Even the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, who is a walking encyclopedia, who seems to know something about everything, and everything about nearly all governmental affairs, has been floundering around here unable to answer questions, and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER], who is on the Puerto Rican Committee, has been unwilling or unable to give light.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

Mr. TILLMAN. I hope the Senator will not suppose I am casting any reflections on him, because I acknowledge my ignorance; and every other Senator here has been in the same degree of ignorance that I have been.

Mr. FORAKER. I want to say for the benefit of the Senator from South Carolina, who I know will correct his statement, that I have necessarily been out of the Chamber during most of the discussion this morning, and I was not here when any question was asked to which he can refer. If there is any information he wants, I shall be glad to furnish it, if I have it; and if I have not the information, as may be the case, I shall be glad to say that. But I have not been asked any question yet, so far as I am aware, in regard to this matter which I have not been able to answer. The Senator knows that I have not been unwilling to answer.

Mr. TILLMAN. I intended nothing more than a little pleasantry, though not at the Senator's expense.

Mr. FORAKER. Very well, then; I will not interfere with the amusement of the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. TILLMAN. I am very sorry that I made any reference to the Senator, who says he was absent, because I certainly intended no reflection upon him.

But this is absolutely the first time in my knowledge of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] that he has brought in a bill here when he could not answer almost any question anybody asked about it.

I will say for the benefit of the Senate that but for the fact that I went to the Library this morning to see what I could find, and obtained there a copy of General Davis's official report to the War Department—and it was the only copy they had, and they had borrowed it from the War Department, and therefore it does not appear to have been accessible to Senators unless they had gone there and got this report—I would be as ignorant as anybody else. If the Senator from Ohio had had that report, then he could have answered the questions which the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] has been propounding to the Senator from Iowa, which he did not answer.

Mr. FORAKER. I was not in the Chamber when any question was asked by the Senator from Arkansas that was not answered.

Mr. TILLMAN. Senators have had access to the testimony of General Davis before the committee; but I have here a full outline of everything that has been done in the island of Puerto Rico since the United States Government took charge of it, very clearly set forth; and it contains so much that is new and startling to me, and which I think will startle the Senate, that I will, in as clear a way as I can, considering how little time I have had to examine it, give some facts from it which will bear very materially on this subject.

Before I go into that question, however, I wish to discuss a little the motive behind this bill, which has been adverted to here by several Senators. The Republicans have been charged with "being in a hole" and presenting reasons for this legislation which, at least, are susceptible of doubt as to their loyalty to the truth. I do not want to have anybody say that I am at all malicious; but there is evidently so much division of opinion and feeling and purpose among our friends who are in the majority here that I may be allowed to discuss the matter a little in a good-natured way.

Mr. FORAKER. Just for amusement, I suppose.

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator from Ohio declared very eloquently that behind Puerto Rico were the Philippines, and the Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE], with equal frankness, has declared that behind the Philippines is China; and if I can understand or interpret the purpose that is sought to be attained by this legislation, it is that the Republican party feel that they are clinging to it as almost their last sheet anchor of hope; that they must preserve the principle for which they contend; that the United States Congress has no limitation upon its power of legislating for Territories; and they, therefore, seek to ingraft into this Puerto Rican legislation such provisions as will hold on to that idea, it does not matter what else goes or how the thing may be adjusted, it does not matter whether we have any Puerto Rican legislation at all.

In fact, I doubt very seriously whether we shall have any bill changing the present military status; and it will be sought to gloss over, or it will be sought to rub out the impression which has been created in the minds of the people of this country as to the injustice and inconsistency and unconstitutionality of the so-called Puerto Rican legislation, which has already passed the House of Representatives and is pending here, and about which our Republican friends are so much disturbed.

Mr. President, we occupied the island of Puerto Rico in the summer of 1898. The Spaniards withdrew from there on the 18th of October, 1898. The islanders received the United States troops as liberators. They welcomed our flag as an emblem of freedom, liberty, and equality, and there was no reason why Congress at its session a year ago should not have taken some action looking to placing that island upon some basis of self-government, if we ever intend to give self-government to those people.

But pending the settlement of affairs in Cuba and the determination of the Republican party as to whether or not it intended to carry out our pledges in regard to Cuba and give those people autonomy and independence, it was very natural that we should let things drift along and let the whole situation remain in statu quo. There is an idea here that will intrude itself, however, and that is that in dealing with our insular possessions, including Hawaii, there has been a marked difference of policy.

Hawaii was annexed in June, 1898. We had possession of Puerto Rico shortly afterwards, in August, and yet while we have not hesitated to give Hawaii the most liberal government that is possible—some Senators have characterized it as the most liberal Territorial government ever given to any possession of this country—here is another island almost similarly situated; and if we are not treating it like a stepdaughter or like an outcast, then I know nothing about the meaning of those words.

Senators can not blame me if, following the thought, I ask, Why this difference between these islands? It is true that the Hawaiian Islands came to us by cession of its own government and by joint resolution of annexation, which gave certain pledges, while the Puerto Rican Island came to us by cession from Spain as the fruits of war. But considering the fact that the Puerto Ricans were not in rebellion, and that we had not gone to war with Spain for the purposes of the liberation of that island or its people; considering the fact that its people had welcomed our soldiers and that General Miles in his proclamation had given certain pledges as to the policy to be pursued, I contend that Senators here are under some obligations of honor and decency to cease this discriminating treatment and not to show so much favoritism on the one hand and so much infamous outrage on the other.

Senators, is it because the Hawaiian sugar planters are Americans and that the stock of their companies is held in the United States and that the inferior races there are subservient and under control, while the sugar-planters of Puerto Rico are Spaniards or alien owners in large measure, that there is such a difference in policy? Is it the purpose of this adverse legislation to wait until the carpetbaggers have gone to Puerto Rico and by misgovernment and some kind of devilish combination have seized all the valuable property in that island, and then we will have a change of policy? That is not a far-fetched thought, although I see some of my friends on the other side are smiling.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is a little visionary.

Mr. TILLMAN. I said yesterday that I was going to vote for this bill. I assisted in the Committee on Appropriations, of which

I am an humble member, in the changes which have been made in it which struck out a great many of the offensive features of the House bill. I will vote for it simply as an act of justice in restoring to the people of Puerto Rico in the only way in which it can be restored money from taxes that has been taken from them unconstitutionally and in contradiction, as I understand it, of sound public policy.

If the flag and freedom do not go together, as our President proclaimed and has proclaimed a half a dozen or more times that they do; if his pledge that Puerto Rico and the Philippines should have the same advantages under the flag that the Americans have, had no meaning to it—was a mere sugarplum to be thrown at some audience who were applauding him—I ask you why it is that this island, which is peculiar, where there has never been any resistance to American arms, and where there is no opposition to our Government, which welcomed our Army gladly as liberators, is placed outside, a tariff wall raised between that people and this, and why it is that the United States takes the place of Spain as taskmistress?

It can not be denied that the government in Puerto Rico is not one whit better than that which the Spaniards gave them, so far as its fiscal affairs are concerned. It is not so good, because the island had Spain as a market, where she could send her products without any tariff being levied.

Mr. GALLINGER. I beg the Senator's pardon. Spain did levy tariff duties even on coffee, which we in this country never have done.

Mr. TILLMAN. To such a slight degree that it did not amount to a row of pins.

Mr. GALLINGER. It amounted to a great deal.

Mr. TILLMAN. It might, as preserving the principle which the Senator from New Hampshire and his brethren are so desirous of preserving here, but it did not amount to a row of pins so far as the prosperity of the island was concerned.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator will permit me. If he will examine the record, he will find that the tariff duties on coffee were very considerable, exacted by Spain from the inhabitants of Puerto Rico, and that coffee constitutes about four-fifths of her exports; and we have never levied duties, and do not propose to, on coffee.

Mr. TILLMAN. It does not matter whether the statement of the Senator or my statement is the correct one. I have not had time to examine that phase of the question sufficiently to be familiar with it. I am glad to find one man on the other side who knows something about Puerto Rico, because hitherto I have not been able to find anyone who knew anything about the fiscal affairs of the island.

I said a moment ago that I should vote to restore this money because it has been unjustly, and, as I believe, unconstitutionally taken from those people. A proposition was made yesterday to restore it to the men who had paid it. That would have been unjust; it would have been unreasonable; and while we may have to return it to the importers, if the courts shall decide that it was illegally collected, that is a question apart from this. This amount, as I understand it, being the Dingley rates collected at the ports of the United States on imports from Puerto Rico, is the sum of taxes levied by the United States Government on the productive energies of the people of Puerto Rico.

While the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] yesterday declared that only a few men had paid these taxes, everyone familiar with agriculture knows that the labor which enters into the production of agricultural products is largely the predominant factor in the cost, and the only reason why this can not justly be restored to the men who paid it is because the producer, the laborer, has received a less wage—the sugar grower and the producer of other agricultural products that have been exported have received a less price.

I will illustrate that by pointing out that the sugar which has come into this country (and $1,800,000 or thereabouts of this $2,000,000 came from sugar) has entered the American market with the tariff taken off, so far as the producer is concerned, and the American consumer has paid that duty, as he would pay it on sugar coming from any other source except Hawaii, and it has been added to the cost of the sugar here to the consumer.

The consumer has paid this tax to the Government, and the producer has lost the difference that he would have received if he could have had his goods come in here free of duty. So if we want to get back to the man who originally paid it or who lost it, we have got to restore it to the taxpayers of Puerto Rico, and the only way we can do that is to give it back to the government of Puerto Rico and thereby reduce the burden of taxation upon those people to that extent. Therefore I shall vote for it, and I do not want any amendments tacked onto it.

As has been said here, it is not worth while for us to hope that in this bill we will be able to agree as to the future policy of government for this island. A bill is already pending here for that purpose, and the Senator from Iowa informed us that he hoped that will pass, and we know how pertinacious and pugnacious is our friend the Senator from Ohio when he sets his head on anything, and we know that if he is going to press his measure we will come to a vote on it sooner or later, although the Senate debating society may run for a month. I say I am in favor of passing this bill now as a modicum of justice to the taxpayers of Puerto Rico, as an abatement of their taxes in the future, by restoring to the taxpayers, in the only way possible, this amount of money unjustly wrung from them at our custom-houses.

Now, we have had our sympathies appealed to here very strongly as to the exigency of the situation, the devastation of the cyclone or hurricane, the destruction of property, and crops and houses. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS] stated that the United States Government, or rather the general in charge, has used $397,000 of money appropriated by this Government to relieve that distress. I do not find in General Davis's report anything which corroborates that statement. I find that that money has come out of the general budget of the amount received in Puerto Rico from internal taxes or insular income, as they term it, and from the import taxes at their custom-houses on goods imported into Puerto Rico upon which duties have been levied.

The United States Government has not given these people a cent, and it is high time, after we have collected this money at our custom-house, that we returned some of it back. I only hope that this Congress will come to some conclusion which will be just to those people and will knock down this tariff barrier between one part of the United States and another, and allow this island at least, which is in America, to stand on its own bottom and on its own merits and upon the merits of its people, and let our sympathies and our sense of justice and decency have some leeway in acting toward them, rather than to legislate with some ulterior motive and bring in here a subterfuge bill which has no purpose other than to preserve a principle about which we all differ.

If it is true, as some Senators contend, that Congress is omnipotent and can legislate as we please for our territorial possessions or our insular possessions that have been brought to us by the fortunes of war, then there is no reason why we can not differentiate.

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. TILLMAN. With pleasure.

Mr. PETTUS. The Senator spoke of my saying that money was used, aggregating nearly $400,000, out of money appropriated for the relief of the suffering. I did not say that.

Mr. TILLMAN. I understood the Senator to say that $400,000 had been appropriated to relieve the starving people.

Mr. PETTUS. Yes; I did say——

Mr. TILLMAN. Not appropriated, but used out of the war chest, so to speak.

Mr. PETTUS. It was the President's statement and the statement of the Secretary of War—both of them.

Mr. TILLMAN. I knew the Senator said he got it from the Secretary of War and the President, but he misunderstood their allusion. They simply fixed the amount, without saying whence it came.

Mr. PETTUS. They say expressly that it came out of the emergency fund.

Mr. TILLMAN. Which emergency fund—the fund in the War Department?

Mr. PETTUS. By the "emergency fund," as I understand, is meant the $50,000,000 that was appropriated.

Mr. TILLMAN. General Davis does not say anything of the kind, but charges that expenditure to the general fund collected from taxes and imposts. There is a great deal of this financial stuff in the Davis report in reference to receipts and expenditures in Puerto Rico, and the amount of the current expenditures and the estimates for future expenses, and all that kind of thing. I may not be able to present it consecutively in my speech, but I will try to straighten it out so that it will appear in the RECORD in the morning, and Senators who wish to get at the facts will be able, unless they send to the War Department and get this volume and examine it themselves, to arrive at some intelligent understanding of the situation.

General Davis himself presents in a condensed table, on pages 50 and 51 of his report, the estimated receipts of the island itself for the current fiscal year, 1899–1900, and in round numbers the import duties are $332,000; miscellaneous, $139,349.14; customs, estimated upon the collections of twelve weeks, $1,357,841; postal service, $80,000; rent of post-office boxes, $1,000, making a total of estimated receipts upon current sources of income of $1,910,390 for the fiscal year 1899–1900. His estimate of proposed expenditures is a long one, with thirty items or more, and the aggregate is $1,943,678. Including a balance of $450,000 last year, the total estimated income is $2,360,000, and this would leave a surplus at the end of the fiscal year on the current year's expenditures, if they are carried out in accordance with these estimates, of $417,000.

Now, there is further on in this volume a report from Lieut. Col. C. H. Heyl, United States Volunteers, who has been made comptroller-general or auditor-general, so to speak, of the island of Puerto Rico and who has had charge of the fiscal affairs of that government and has given all the data necessary to an understanding as to the amount of money that has been collected and passed through the hands of United States Army officers from the time of the occupation up to a given date fixed therein.

I shall not go into these details, but I will say, for the benefit of my friend the Senator from Iowa, who is chairman of the Appropriations Committee, that his broad, sweeping statement a moment ago that there was not a schoolhouse in the island of Puerto Rico, and later on an amended statement that there was one, are not borne out by the facts presented in this report. General Davis, on page 25 in his report, states that there were attending school and registered as such in Puerto Rico last year, 19,804 boys; girls, 9,368; total, 29,172 registered; while the attendance was, boys, 14,720; girls, 7,153; total, 21,873.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. TILLMAN. With pleasure.

Mr. GALLINGER. I did not hear the statement made by the Senator from Iowa. If he made the statement attributed to him, he was not as accurate as he usually is. The testimony taken before our committee disclosed the fact that under Spanish rule there is not a building on the island that was constructed for school purposes. I think since we took possession of the island one building has been constructed as a school and others are contemplated, but that some portion of the children had been taught under the Spanish régime is beyond question. However, they were not taught in buildings constructed for school purposes.

Mr. ALLISON. I simply stated that there was not a schoolhouse proper in the island, as I understand it.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is absolutely correct.

Mr. TILLMAN. I trust the Senator from Iowa will not consider that I am trying to convict him of any misstatement or of any undue ignorance on this subject.

Mr. ALLISON. I would not suppose the Senator would do that.

Mr. TILLMAN. I have too much respect for him, and I have paid him so many compliments in his absence, which he will read in the RECORD to-morrow, that if he will wait to see them, I think he will not feel hurt by any criticism I am putting on him.

Mr. ALLISON. I am not objecting to that, but I understood from the observation of the Senator from New Hampshire that he had misapprehended my statement. Therefore I meant now to correct that. Of course there have been schools there, but a very small fraction of the children go to school.

Mr. TILLMAN. The general trend of the remarks of the Senator from Iowa was that we needed money to put this island on its feet and start it on a course of civilization which would be upward and in accordance with American ideas, and the first principle of that was a schoolhouse. I sympathize absolutely with that purpose. I am very axious to cooperate with the Senator, as I said, in restoring this money to the taxpayers, who have been made unjustly to pay it; and we will not have any dispute about that. I am merely bringing out these facts in regard to the status there, so that we will not have our sympathies appealed to and our hearts wrung with all these pictures of ignorance and poverty and starvation which have been advanced here as a reason why this bill should be rushed through.

Let us pass this bill like honest white men and American Senators desirous of doing justice to these people, and do not let us have any hypocrisy and namby-pamby philanthrophy about it. That is all I want the Senate to agree to. Whether they agree with my ideas or my purpose is unimportant; just so we pass the bill as it is we will be satisfied, I hope, and the question what shall be done with Puerto Rico hereafter and whether a tariff wall shall be established between Puerto Rico and the rest of the United States will be adjusted by this Congress, or it will be adjusted by the people of the United States next November, beyond any doubt.

Now, as I said a moment ago, there were 21,873 children who attended school somewhere. I presume they were in some sort of schoolhouses, as those children could not be taught in the open air. We will pass on, then, to the amount spent for education out of the budget last year. For public instruction, $293,404. I read from page 24 of General Davis's report. He proposes to appropriate in the coming year $330,000 out of the insular budget and then by taxation, local in the municipalities, $83,063, making $413,000 which will be expended for public education in the current year.

Here is one of the startling things I should like to have our friends on the other side to explain. I find on the same page 24 of General Davis's report that the total appropriation for all purposes of government for the last fiscal year was $4,487,921—that is, the general budget of the island was $2,674,896. The language here is unusual, and I do not know what it means, but I give it as it is written: Provincial deputation (insular), $194,755; municipal budget $1,618,769. The current year's appropriations for all purposes are: General budget of the island, $1,943,678; municipal budgets, $1,429,981, making a total expenditure of $3,373,659.

Now, in another portion of General Davis's report he speaks about the hurricane and the devastation, but he does not lay such stress on it as would create the impression that he felt that unless he got this money anybody would starve to death. Let me call the attention of Senators to the actual situation. I have had some little experience in noting how rapidly things upon which men can keep alive can be raised. In the Tropics the usual and the accustomed articles of food are bananas, fruits, vegetables—very little meat. This hurricane occurred last August.

In that island you can plant vegetables any month in the year, and there is no doubt about it that any Puerto Rican who was not too lazy to get a hoe and scratch the ground a little somewhere and plant something has had his wants relieved long before now, or else he has gone to join his fathers because he was too lazy to tickle the earth that a harvest might follow his labor. Their huts are mere ramshackle affairs, that cost little but labor, and not much of that. If they were blown down or were blown away, anyone who was industrious could have gone into the bamboo thickets and got enough material to build another hut, and got some straw or palmetto or something to thatch it with to protect himself against the rain.

The coffee plantations, they say, are gone and ruined on the southern half of the island. I presume they are badly devastated and damaged, but I have noticed that in the Tropics vegetation grows very rapidly. Take the Florida orange groves, which were cut down level with the ground in 1895 by the freeze, and since have been frostbitten twice in the middle and northern part of the State and down below the frost line, or rather down below the ordinary frost line, because the frost line in 1895 went down mighty near to the tail of the Peninsula. Those orange groves are to-day producing nearly a full crop where the people went to work and cultivated them, cut the dead trees down, and went to plowing and hoeing and did not sit down and wait for God Almighty to do something for them.

You want to educate these poor devils down there, you say. That is a good thing. Restore this money of which we have robbed them by unjust and unlawful taxation, as I contend. Then say to these landowners, "We will remit your taxes for a year." Let General Davis have the discretion as a military officer or let the President issue orders, for he has been issuing a good many of which I will speak directly, and give those people free trade with the United States, and give them a market, and they will get on their feet.

The trouble now is that there is a blighting frost on all enterprise and all capital and all investments in that island by reason of the fact that they are not sure, the people do not know, whether or not the market which Spain once afforded will be given back by this country allowing their products to come into our markets without this discrimination. They ask for free trade. They ask to become a part and parcel of the United States. They ask for the privilege of collecting duties at their ports under the Dingley tariff like any other port of entry of the United States, and then let the trade between the various parts of the United States, including Puerto Rico, be the same as between Massachusetts and Florida.

You talk about giving them schools and roads. What do they want with so many roads? Let me tell you what happened in my State just after the war, and I do not bring this up as in any manner reopening old sores or to bring unpleasant memories back here, because it does me no good to revive them and it does you no good to think about them. After a certain army had gone from Savannah, sweeping 70 miles wide through South Carolina, it left behind it a much more devastated region than any part of Puerto Rico is to-day. What followed? The starvation threatening the blacks was cared for by the Freedmen's Bureau.

Every military post became a commissary to distribute rations to keep the poor devils from starving. Some whites had to have relief, too. What happened so far as labor was concerned? As soon as you started the public soup house, so to speak, every fellow who might have got a hoe or an ax and gone to hunt a job sat down and waited until the rations gave out. If you start another freedmen's bureau on a small scale in Puerto Rico with this money, as will be possible under this general provision, "other governmental and public purposes," I warn you that your efforts to rehabilitate that island and put it on its feet will be unsuccessful.

If you go to building roads there at a great rate, expending hundreds of thousands of dollars—a million, as some man proposed here—I warn you that you will take from the farmer the very labor which he needs to cut the trees off his coffee plantation. You will take from him the very labor which he needs to rehabilitate his farm.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator permit me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. TILLMAN. With pleasure, always.

Mr. GALLINGER. One of the chief troubles in Puerto Rico to-day is that the hurricane blew down trees, and that the coffee plantations are being desolated because of the fact that they have no shade. The people are not engaged in cutting down trees on coffee plantations in Puerto Rico.

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator is not a farmer, and I am. He does not know that when a tree has been blown down you have got to grub out the old root and cut away the log. The Senator had better talk about medicine, because there I yield to him, but when it comes to agriculture he is off his ground. [Laughter.]

I know possibly you have got to plant new shade trees to shade the coffee berries from blistering, but they will grow very rapidly if somebody will look after them and not let the tangled grass and undergrowth and weeds choke them out. They must have agricultural labor to rehabilitate that island, and if you start your public works, you will to a large extent compete with capital that owns the land, and you will raise the price of wages so that the farmer will be unable to get his coffee plantation rehabilitated.

That is the situation from a practical standpoint, and I know whereof I speak, because I saw it go on in my State. I saw it no longer than six years ago, when a great hurricane came along about Beaufort and drowned about a thousand of those sea-island colored people and devastated an area there in which there were 20,000 people involved. Every living thing that could be swept off the face of the earth was carried away either by the waves or by the winds, and if it had not been that God Almighty had been kind in providing shellfish and oysters and crabs and other things in the estuaries around there, and any darkey who could obtain four planks and make a little boat could go out and get a breakfast in an hour and a half, they would have starved to death.

But what happened? I was governor at the time. A great many contributions came pouring in—one, I recollect, of $5,000 from Philadelphia. I had a notice from Clara Barton that if I wanted the Red Cross Society to come there she would be glad to bring a corps of assistants to take charge of the relief work. I thanked God that there was an angel of mercy somewhere to come in and help a poor, perplexed governor out of a scrape. So she came. She went to Beaufort and established her headquarters there.

I turned over all the funds sent to me, and the other funds that came from elsewhere I knew nothing about. She stayed there for six or eight months. There was some criticism, as there always is. Nobody ever is satisfied with any distribution of a relief fund. There are some greedy people who want more than their share of it. But I believe that lady and her philanthropic helpers saved a good many lives. However, as long as the rations lasted, so help me God, you could not get anybody to pick cotton around Beaufort.

I mentioned this briefly in the Appropriations Committee room the other day, and the Senator from Iowa, with his wise head, said they ought to be very careful how this money is expended, and we tried to hedge it about with such restrictions as suggested themselves to us. If that be the course pursued, the purpose for which this bill ought to be passed of restoring the money wrung by unjust taxation will be accomplished and in the best possible way; otherwise the expenditure of money will be made in a way which will do more harm than good.

And as for this question of assistance, the best way you can help those people is to help them to help themselves, as all philanthrophy has taught you that the best way to give charity is to help somebody to help himself rather than simply pour it down his throat without any effort on his part. That consists, as I said, in restoring their markets, in removing the barriers between this and that country, putting them on practically the same basis that they held with Spain, and not have to take the place of Spain in exercising governmental control over a dependency, as the phrase now is—it is a new word in our history—a dependency outside of the Constitution, in the power of Congress, without any limitation.

You can not help it; you may do your best; as long as you keep the Army officers in Puerto Rico, there will be some regard for decency; but if you undertake to set up a carpetbag government there, then you will renew the orgies that made the South the laughingstock and hissing and byword during the reconstruction period. I hope Senators will examine in the morning very carefully the figures given by General Otis, on pages 50 and 51.

Mr. GALLINGER. General Davis.

Mr. TILLMAN. "All roads lead to Rome," and every idea here goes to the Philippines. You can not get it out of our bones, gentlemen. It is in them.

Mr. GALLINGER. "And more is the pity."

Mr. TILLMAN. "And more is the pity." If our soldiers were off those islands and on our fleet, and a hurricane and earthquake should come along and sink the islands out of sight, I would say, "Praise God, from whom all blessings flow," because it would relieve you gentlemen of a very unpleasant dilemma and it would relieve us who are patriotic and believe in the Constitution of a great sorrow and dread. I do not say that you have not got some patriotism on your side, but you are awfully blind, to my mind. If you will read General Davis's proposed expenditures, you will see what a great blessing it is to have a composite government on the Spanish model, as improved slightly by military despotism under the Stars and Stripes.

I do not intend any reflection upon General Davis, because what little I have been able to read here shows me that he is a broad-minded, liberal, high-toned officer, anxious only to do his entire duty as he understands it. But he advises a certain form of autonomy here. He begs for free trade. He points out the basis of a greater economy in this very list of expenditures. Here are proposed expenditures to the amount of $1,943,000, of which only $328,000 would be for education. There would be $185,000, in round numbers, for the judiciary alone.

Just think of it! My State has a million and a quarter of population. Our entire expenditures for the judiciary are less than $40,000, and the pitiful sum, as I said, of $313,000 only, out of about $4,000,000, for education. That was what these people last year spent on their government—this composite Spanish-military. I will not say American, for God knows I do not see much American in it from our standpoint, unless you say Spanish-American.

The entire taxation in South Carolina for everything—State, county, and municipal schools—was less than three millions. There is no sense, no justice, no honesty in having these poor wretches, because they have come under our flag, robbed in that way. They need civil government, not a despotism like that which the Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE] wishes us to give the Philippines when we pacify them. I do not believe they are capable of setting up a representative government along the lines which have been followed in the South on manhood suffrage. If you do not have educational and property government, you will have a pandemonium of robbery and misrule.

Whether we shall give these people a Territorial government and a Delegate here or not will depend, of course, upon the wisdom of the majority here. There may be some men on the other side who will vote with us on this side; I do not know. You are the best disciplined party I ever ran up against. No matter how some of you talk, you generally round up when the roll call comes. Whether you are in a dilemma or not, as some Senators think, I dare say you will get out of it some way.

But, Senators, there is one aspect, and only one more, that I will present, and I will make some more inquiries. It may be somebody can answer them. We have had one Philippine Commission, which went out shortly after the war began. They tried to lay down some scheme of compromise by which the Filipinos could be induced to come under the American control and Government on terms that would be acceptable to us and acceptable to them. It was a lamentable failure, but it cost a heap of money. It was paid under the war power, I suppose, out of the general budget under the control of the President of the United States, without any specific appropriation. What salaries were paid we do not know.

Now, we have organized or are preparing to organize another Philippine commission composed of four gentlemen. A distinguished judge, who was on the circuit bench or the United States, resigned his seat to accept the presidency or the chairmanship of this new commission. The average man is selfish and is always looking out for the main chance. What induced a man with a life tenure at $6,000 a year, with the great power and honor attaching to the circuit judgeship, to surrender that office and embark on this doubtful venture of setting up an acceptable government in the Philippines, of organizing a new government in our Asiatic dependencies? It may have been the highest patriotism. There are a few men left who are patriotic, even among Democrats, and a few among Republicans, men who for high public purposes will surrender their own self-aggrandizement and their personal ambition to subserve a great public purpose.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Carolina permit me?

Mr. TILLMAN. With pleasure.

Mr. GALLINGER. Of course I know the Senator does not mean to impute even the possibility of any low or selfish purpose on the part of Judge Taft in resigning.

Mr. TILLMAN. I tried to make myself very plain that I did not.

Mr. GALLINGER. Judge Taft, as we all know, is one of the most honorable and high-minded men in the country. I simply want to ask the Senator if he does not believe there is a judge in his State, who has a life tenure, who would be willing to resign it to take a place in this body, which is only for a short time?

Mr. TILLMAN. In South Carolina?

Mr. GALLINGER. There is one, I think. I can see some——

Mr. TILLMAN. You are bringing the argumentum ad hominem to me as to whether there is anybody in my State who would do this thing?

Mr. GALLINGER. I made the suggestion to the Senator if he does not think there may be a judge in his State who would be willing to surrender that office, high as it is, honorable as it is, and for life, to accept a temporary service in the United States Senate. I have heard it suggested that there is.

Mr. TILLMAN. You mean in the Senate?

Mr. GALLINGER. In the Senate of the United States.

Mr. TILLMAN. Oh, the Senate of the United States is a very different thing from a mission to the Philippines. I hope the Senator does not undertake to put a scat in this august assemblage down to the level of a district judgeship!

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, what I meant to say was simply that Judge Taft yielded the high office he held, an office for life, to accept the chairmanship of the Philippine Commission. I have no doubt he was actuated by high motives of patriotism and love of country. I have no doubt that there are judges in every State of the American Union who would be willing to resign in order to accept a similar service, whether it was in the Philippines or in Cuba or Puerto Rico or in the Senate of the United States. The fact that a judge holds a place for life under the Constitution does not argue that he would not yield it for temporary service which might be of a more congenial nature or dictated by motives of high patriotism and a desire to serve his country.

Mr. TILLMAN. I would feel that the American Republic was already doomed, that we were on our last legs, so to speak, if there were not men anywhere in this country, in any State in this Union, who, if their whole hearts and souls were interested in a patriotic purpose, would not be willing to ignore and throw aside their own sordid, selfish ambition and emoluments to serve the public.

But what I was trying to get at was this: Without casting any reflection on the gentlemen who have been appointed from various positions of honor and trust, I want to know what you are going to pay them? I saw in the papers that the associate commissioners were to receive $22,500 per year and that the head of the commission would receive $25,000. Now, if anybody can throw any light on that it will illuminate this question very much. Nobody is authorized to speak. If we are left to guess and to conjecture as to how much this new departure in government is to cost, if we are to have our new possessions governed by men appointed from Washington, to reintroduce into our politics the old-time stench of carpetbaggery, then I, for one, am more than ever opposed to the villainies that are proposed to be carried out here.

Who will pay these enormous salaries and of all the subordinates that will run on down pari passu? A man would have to offer me more than that to get me to agree to go to the Philippine Islands to live, because I would expect to get a bolo in my back the first time I was out of sight of the United States Army post and got out where the Filipinos could have a chance at me, besides the climate, the enervation, the destruction to health and vitality. I have got but little left anyway, only twelve or fifteen years, according to the tables of probabilities, and I want to stay where I can have as few aches as possible the little balance of time I am in this world. But as nobody seems to be willing to tell us what this commission is to receive for compensation——

Mr. FORAKER. I am not authorized to speak on that subject, but I can state what I have heard in answer to the Senator's interrogatory. I have been informed that the President did say to one of the commissioners appointed to serve on this commission, and who has accepted, that the salary to be allowed would not in any event exceed $10,000.

Mr. TILLMAN. Well, that is a little better than I had hoped for.

Mr. FORAKER. You are disappointed?

Mr. TILLMAN. No; I am not disappointed; I am gratified. I am always willing to trust William McKinley. It is his bad and wicked partners that I am against. [Laughter.] It is the influences which dominate and control and seem to drive him that I am criticising. Left to himself I believe his aspirations and his purposes are patriotic and noble. He is carried off his feet right now, I expect, by the dream of history putting him up as the man who added so much territory, alongside of Jefferson and other great men of the past, to our domain, and all that kind of thing. I do not know whether he has any such dreams or not.

But aside from the salaries which are being paid to these commissioners we will have another commission after this one goes out, if it fails. The point that I am trying to make right now, in this part of the speech—for I have had rather a rambling and longer talk than I intended when I got up—is that imperialism, or the government of dependencies, whichever way you have a mind to put it—the government of dependencies, if you do not like the other word—comes high.

The American taxpayer in the long run has got to settle the bills. We can never hope to get enough trade from Puerto Rico, even if we keep it outside of our tariff wall, to make it profitable. We can never hope to get enough trade from the Philippines to make profitable the expenditures which they will entail and which we will continue to incur. The American taxpayer will get tired of paying all these expenses some of these days, and he will ask, What is all this thing about?

He will inquire whether trade has followed the flag. You will not let trade follow the flag to Puerto Rico. You have got hurdle fences to be jumped between here and there, and your purpose in holding Puerto Rico down is to preserve the principle that you have a right to treat the Philippines the same way, and after you have got the Philippines have gone on and participated in the Chinese partition and get a thigh or a big piece of breast of that Empire.

Then you will have another dependency over there, which will furnish big salaries of $10,000 in the great company of so-called civil governors, or commissioners, or governor-generals, or some other title that is un-American, and you will always have to have a soldier—yes, a hundred or five hundred soldiers—around each one of those men to keep his life from being taken by the men you are to hold down by the bayonet in that way. That is what I am trying to direct your attention to.

I hope when the bill in charge of the Senator from Ohio comes back before the Senate, those who on the other side have announced that they are for America for Americans, not including Puerto Ricans, will help us on this side who are for America for the Americans, including Puerto Ricans, to have that modicum of self-government given them that will knock down and obliterate all lines of demarcation between that island and the United States, and let the President's words mean absolutely what he said when he proclaimed the glorious doctrine that liberty follows the flag.

Let us take away our hands from the throats of those poor people who have been taken from under Spain's degrading and liberty-destroying despotism. Let us let the American eagle fly around there on terms of equality; let us run up the Stars and Stripes; let those people have the best government they are capable of maintaining, and, if they can not maintain law and order, then we will have enough troops there to keep them straight, like we do in the Indian reservations, and civilize them and educate them in self-government as Mexico is being taught.

APPENDIX.

OCTOBER 21, 1899.

THE ADJUTANT-GENERAL, DEPARTMENT OF PUERTO RICO,
San Juan, P. R.

SIR: In obedience to instructions contained in communication from your office, dated August 21, 1899 (L. S., 2292, D. P. R.), directing me to prepare and submit a "financial statement of general receipts, showing sources and amounts of revenue and statement of expenditures for all purposes, itemized under the proper heads and subdivisions, showing objects and amounts," this in view of having been previously designated by the department commander, verbally, to examine and audit the money accounts of military officers and others, having reference to the receipt and disbursement of "insular" funds, I have the honor to submit the accompanying statements, showing amounts received, disbursed, and remaining on hand June 30, 1899, on account of "customs collections" and of the "central treasury," embracing "internal revenues," showing sources from whence received of all insular revenues of the island of Puerto Rico since date of American occupation.

At the time of first invasion of Puerto Rico and occupation by our troops of Ponce (July 28), Arroyo (August 1), and Guanica the custom-houses at the two first-named ports (no custom-house being at Guanica) were placed under charge of military officers, who assumed control and continued—in a semi-civil capacity as collectors of the port—to administer and exercise the functions pertaining to that office. As inland invasion progressed the port of Mayaguez was next similarly taken charge of (August 12), and so continued under military authority. Upon the final surrender and entry of American troops into San Juan (October 18) the custom-house at that port and the custom-houses at the several remaining ports of Humacao, Fajardo, Arecibo, Naguabo, Vieques, and Aguadilla were also soon after placed under charge of military officers, who have since continued in their official capacity to act as collectors of the port, rendering account of receipt of collections and expenditures and performing all the duties required in the administration of their office.

That such assignments were wise, and that the duties have been ably, intelligently, economically, and honestly performed, is attested by the figures shown in the result as compared with those of the "internal revenue," which latter department was wholly under charge of civil (native) functionaries.

It will be observed by reference to the statement of "customs" that there are items enumerated in the expenditures under, viz, "Department of public works," "Department of public instruction," "Judicial department," "Post-office department," "Maintenance of insular police," "Representation of the island of Puerto Rico at Philadelphia Exposition," "Vaccination expenses," and "Pay of prison guards, inspectors," etc., aggregating $481,757.28, which properly belong to and should be chargeable to departments coming under the control of the "central treasury," and which, if deducted, would greatly decrease the expenses proper of customs and correspondingly increase its balance shown on hand, as also increase the expenditures of the central treasury.

In addition to these amounts, charged as expenditures against customs, there appear the sums advanced to the municipalities of San Juan, Mayaguez, and Aguadilla for certain city improvements, aggregating $29,079.75, which amount is treated as a loan, and is to be returned by said municipalities. This amount, also, if deducted from the expenses of customs, would still further decrease the expenditure shown.

Of the amount of customs funds drawn on the orders of Generals Miles and Brooke during the early part of the invasion and used by the several staff departments of the army for military purposes, the records show the following sums distributed to staff departments: Quartermaster's department, $18,308; subsistence department, $8,455.42; medical department, $371.59; judge-advocate's department, $16.54; total, $27,211.55. The greater portion of this sum, and especially that received and disbursed by regular officers, has been accounted for by proper accounts current with vouchers, while in a few instances, mostly in the cases of volunteer officers, there yet remains unsatisfied accountability.

When the conditions of actual war are considered, the very limited facilities had for clerical work by troops campaigning, and the absolute lack of all papers, blanks for vouchers, etc., together with the inexperience of many, and entire ignorance of others among the volunteer officers as to the accountability of public funds, added to the general impression that was had by many officers that they would not be required to account for these funds, "only expend it for the general benefit of the troops and best interests of the service," it is not surprising that there remains a portion of the amount unaccounted for.

No one unacquainted with the early conditions here following American occupation can form an idea of the difficulties and obstacles encountered in the efforts to obtain replies and information in connection with the task of auditing the customs account, and properly accounting for expenditures of that fund. Much time and labor have been spent in the preparation of this statement, and the amount of indefinite and unsatisfactory information received in answer to inquiries in this connection would fill a large volume. Only constant and persistent delving into the various ramifications of irregularly kept accounts, and research, groping in the dark as it were, through the abyss of successive mysterious intricacies and labyrinths of Spanish archives, has brought about the result.

In the accompanying statement all expenditures shown can be verified by actual reference to records in this office, excepting the sum of $139.78, which is charged as "amount unaccounted for." The total collections received on account of customs and balance in hands of customs collectors agree with the amounts shown by the auditor of the island. The balance in bank to the credit of the treasurer of Puerto Rico has been verified, and the balance shown in hands of military officers has since been all transferred to the credit of the treasurer of Puerto Rico.

The statement of the central treasury is submitted as rendered by the civil secretary, excepting that the receipts and expenditures under the various heads have been arranged and classified with a view of making it more clear of understanding for higher authority; the figures, however, remain the same and are unchanged. This account has not been audited, and the monthly accounts, to be rendered in detail from February 1 to June 30, of internal revenues have not as yet been received.

During the months of June and July Mr. William T. Kent, expert accountant, of the inspector-general's department, assisted me very materially in my duties in this direction, to whom my grateful acknowledgment and thanks for the valuable services rendered are due.

Following is general summary and recapitulation of all insular funds received, disbursed, and remaining on hand June 30, 1899:

C. H. HEYL,
Lieutenant-Colonel, Inspector-General, U. S. V.

[First indorsement.]

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF PUERTO RICO,
San Juan, October 25, 1899.

Respectfully forwarded to the Adjutant-General of the Army for file with other appendixes to my report on civil affairs of Puerto Rico, dated September 30, 1899.

The work of audit of civil expenditures is in progress, but can not be completed until all the voluminous records in Spanish are collected and arranged.

Under Spanish domination there never was made an audit of accounts that would respond to the requirements of United States standards.

The culling out of the dates is very laborious, and as the civil force is small, it takes much time. It will hardly be possible to complete this work before the close of the present calendar year.

I think that the result of the audit of customs receipts and expenditures, which has been thorough, is eminently satisfactory. When it was taken up, shortly after my arrival, I despaired of ever having an intelligent exposition of all the financial transactions, but by dint of most laborious effort every cent has been properly accounted for save about $37 of a total income of over a million and a quarter dollars.

GEO. W. DAVIS,
Brigadier-General, Commanding.

C. H. HEYL,
Major, Inspector-General, U. S. A.

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF PUERTO RICO, INSPECTOR-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
San Juan, Puerto Rico, October 1, 1899.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, as is my custom, I will not occupy many minutes of the valuable time of the Senate in discussing this bill. Indeed, I will not occupy a single moment if the Senator from Iowa can get consent to have a vote at the present time. I trust the Senator will ask consent.

Mr. ALLISON. I shall be very glad to have a vote now if the Senator from New Hampshire will forego.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES].

Mr. ALLISON. I will extend the request for a vote to the amendments that may be offered to the bill. I am very anxious to get a vote to-night.

Mr. TILLMAN. I ask the Senator from Arkansas, if he can get his own consent, to withdraw his amendment, and I ask the Senator from Alabama to withdraw his, and let us pass the bill right straight just as it came from the committee, and then fight the proposition out on the bill to provide a government for Puerto Rico. This is a restitution of taxes to those people to help them, to reduce the burdens of their government, and put the money back where we stole it from.

Mr. ALLISON. I accept the suggestion of the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. FORAKER. I rise only to express my gratification that the Senator from South Carolina should have made that suggestion, and I sincerely hope that it may be accepted by all Senators.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I am delighted with the proposition that we are proposing to make restitution for what we have taken from those people without their consent.

Mr. FORAKER. All these questions arise under the bill to which the Senator has alluded, and we can discuss them then as much as Senators may desire.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that the Senator from Arkansas withdraws his amendment.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Yes, sir.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I desire simply to say that, in view of the fact that the Senate seems disposed to take the vote, I make a great sacrifice by not making the speech which I had intended to make. [Laughter.]

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator can keep his speech for future delivery.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS].

Mr. ALLEN. Let the amendment be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There are several amendments submitted by the Senator from Alabama. The first amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 4, on page 1, after the word "cents," it is proposed to strike out "being the amount of customs revenue received on importations by the United States from Puerto Rico since the evacuation of Puerto Rico by the Spanish forces on the 18th of October, 1898, to the 1st of January, 1900."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment which has just been read.

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment submitted by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS] will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 1, on page 2, after the words "disposal of," it is proposed to strike out "the President" and insert "and;" in the same line, after the word "used," to strike out "for" and insert "by;" in line 3, after the name "Puerto Rico," it is proposed to strike out "and" where it first occurs; after the word "other," at the end of line 3, to strike out "governmental and public;" and in line 7, after the word "sum," to strike out "or so much thereof as may be necessary;" so that if amended it will read:

Shall be placed at the disposal of and to be used by the government now existing and which may hereafter be established in Puerto Rico for public education, public works, and other purposes therein; and the said sum is hereby appropriated for the purposes herein specified out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Unless the Senator from Alabama desires to divide the amendment, it will be considered as one amendment. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further amendments as in Committee of the Whole, the bill will be reported to the Senate as amended.

Mr. PETTUS. I desire to know what became of the committee amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. They were adopted, the Chair is informed, on yesterday.

Mr. PETTUS. Is there now no proposition to change them pending?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that there is no proposition for any further change, except as to the title of the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "An act appropriating, for the benefit and government of Puerto Rico, customs revenues collected on importations therefrom since its evacuation by Spain to the 1st day of January, 1900."

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 9139) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901, and for other purposes; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator withhold the motion for a moment while the Chair lays before the Senate bills from the House of Representatives?

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I withdraw the motion for that purpose.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 9139) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

REMOVAL OF SNOW AND ICE, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 204) to provide for the removal of snow and ice in the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia; which was read the first time by its title.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution at this time. It is important that it should be passed immediately.

The joint resolution was read the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the following sums are hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, namely:

For cleaning snow and ice from the streets and avenues of the District of Columbia, $1,000, one half of said sum to be paid out of the revenues of the District of Columbia and the other half out of the Treasury of the United States.

For the removal of snow and ice, to be disbursed under the direction of the officer in charge of public buildings and grounds in and around Washington, D. C., $1,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THOMAS PAUL.

The bill (H. R. 2000) for the relief of Thomas Paul was read twice by its title.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What disposition shall be made of this bill?

Mr. McBRIDE. I ask that this House bill, which is identical with Senate bill 1393, which has been favorably reported by the Committee on Public Lands, may be immediately considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon asks unanimous consent that the bill received from the House of Representatives be now considered. The bill will be read for information, subject to objection.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, directed to sell the following-described tract of land, to wit: Lot 6, section 24; lot 7, section 34; the northeast quarter of the southeast quarter of section 34; lot 6, section 35; lot 7, section 35; all in township 8 north, of range 35 east of the Willamette meridian, aggregating 132.15 acres, to Thomas Paul for the sum of $1.25 per acre.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. PETTUS. I should like to know of the Senator in charge of the bill why this is proposed to be done. I am not objecting to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. McBRIDE. I will state, Mr. President, that this House bill is identical with Senate bill 1393, which has been favorably reported from the Committee on Public Lands and is now on the Calendar. The report of the committee, which has been printed with the bill, shows that the claimant in this case has been in actual possession and occupation of the lands for about thirty years; that he has cultivated and improved the lands, and has sought to obtain title to them under the public-land laws of the United States; but, owing to the fact that the lands had, sometime prior to his settlement, been declared to be included within the boundaries of a military reservation in the State of Washington, the claimant was unable to obtain lawful entry upon the lands under the public-land laws.

Mr. PETTUS. Are those lands now within a reservation?

Mr. McBRIDE. I understand the lands have been appraised and ordered to be sold.

Mr. PETTUS. I asked if the lands were within a reservation.

Mr. McBRIDE. They were within a reservation.

Mr. PETTUS. Are they now?

Mr. McBRIDE. They are not now, a law having been passed authorizing the sale of these lands at public auction. This bill seeks to give to the actual settler upon the lands, who has resided upon and cultivated them for about thirty years, the right to purchase the lands at the minimum price for public lands. The Senate bill, which is the same as the House bill, has been unanimously approved by the Senate Committee on Public Lands.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. McBRIDE. I now move that the Senate bill on the same subject, being the bill (S. 1393) for the relief of Thomas Paul, be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that when the Senate adjourn to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to.

SIGNING OF BILLS OF EXCEPTIONS.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I renew my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator from Indiana kindly withdraw his motion for one moment?

Mr. FAIRBANKS. For what purpose?

Mr. HOAR. I want to ask the Senate to take up and pass a bill to which I am sure there will be no objection. The bill simply provides that when a judge dies or becomes insane, after a trial, and he is unable to sign a bill of exceptions, the judge who succeeds the trial judge may inquire into the facts and the law. There is some special reason for having that done. The bill comes from the Attorney-General's Office, and I ask consent for its present consideration.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I withdraw the motion for an executive session temporarily.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3254) to amend section 953 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to the signing of a bill of exceptions.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADDITIONAL REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. WARREN, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3393) granting an increase of pension to Agatha O'Brien, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Pensions; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1661) for the relief of George W. Graham, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. MASON, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3545) for the relief of Mrs. Lavinia M. Payne, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

CHANGE OF NAME OF STEAMSHIP PARIS.

Mr. PENROSE. I desire by unanimous consent, and with the consent of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. FAIRBANKS], to submit a report.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. PENROSE. I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3537) to grant authority to change the name of the steamship Paris, to report it favorably without amendment. As it is merely a nominal matter, I ask consent of the Senate for the consideration and passage of the bill at this time.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I must object. I yielded only for the presentation of morning business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being made, the bill will go to the Calendar.

SOUTH AFRICAN REPUBLICS.

Mr. MASON. With the consent of the Senator from Indiana, I desire to enter a motion, which I shall call up for action on Monday after the routine morning business. The motion I enter is that the Committee on Foreign Relations be discharged from the further consideration of Senate resolution No. 8, and that the same be placed on the Calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion will be entered.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I renew my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After forty minutes spent in executive session, the doors were reopened.

SOUTH AFRICAN REPUBLICS.

Mr. MASON. I have an article, taken from the Chicago Tribune, relating to a meeting held at the Auditorium in that city by American citizens of German birth or descent, at which they expressed their collective opinion of England's attempt to crush the white republics of South Africa. I send it to the desk, and ask that it may be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

THE BOER AUDITORIUM MEETING.

On Thursday evening at the Auditorium, American citizens of German birth or descent met to express their collective opinion of England's attempt to crush the white republics of South Africa. The building was thronged from doors to roof.

Organized primarily by the Turner societies, the speakers were chosen with a view to showing the unanimity of our citizens of the Teutonic race in an issue of political and civil liberty. They included Lutherans, Catholics, Free Thinkers, Democrats, Republicans, expansionists, anti-expansionists, every shade of prevalent American opinion. It was exclusively an American meeting. Its predominating spirit was against monarchy in every form, for free representative government by the people for the people. The German tongue was employed; the choruses, superbly rendered by nearly a thousand male voices, were written in that tongue, which has embodied so much of the music the world has universally adopted. The speaking was in the tongue which has given to its younger kinswoman, English, the larger proportion of its vigor, purity, and perpetuity. The most acceptable quotations in English—none of them in favor of monarchy—were from Goldsmith, Walter Scott, and Thomas Jefferson. The Stars and Stripes were sympathetically placed beside the flag of the Transvaal Republic.

Of the thousands who participated in the meeting many were veterans of a war in which native and foreign born risked life side by side for preservation of the Union of our free commonwealths. A still greater contingent were the sons of American veterans. The sympathy of the meeting was with the Boers on strictly American grounds; they were fighting for the freedom and independence of their own country. Whatever contentions may exist between Germany and England had no voice at the meeting. Its voice was the voice of Americans, uttered in behalf of the rights of the citizens of other democracies.

Its voice was for American rights on this continent also. The meeting was as solid for the Monroe doctrine as for the freedom of the Transvaal. No cheer of the occasion was more significant than that for Grover Cleveland when his name was mentioned as having been signed to a notice to England in the Venezuela episode to keep "hands off" this continent. A large share of the men at the meeting were necessarily Republicans, detesting much that Grover Cleveland stood for when an active figure in American politics. They cheered his name, not for party or personal, but for national reasons. It would be well for the present leaders of the Republican party to note this fact and extract from it its obvious lesson. There is no considerable body of American citizens of any ethnic category, of any creed, of any cult, who are prepared to follow in partisanship leaders who subordinate the interests or the honor of the United States to any foreign power.

The German-American Auditorium meeting was an American meeting. Its voice was the voice of freedom and humanity. It will not fail to be heard throughout the country.

GENERAL DAVIS'S REPORT ON PUERTO RICO.

On motion of Mr. GALLINGER, it was Ordered, That 2,000 copies of report of General Davis on Puerto Rico be printed for the use of the Senate.

Mr. PETTUS. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate (at 4 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) adjourned until Monday, March 19, 1900, at 12 o'clock, meridian.

Resolved, That the injunction of secrecy be removed therefrom, and that they be printed.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, March 16, 1900.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

EULOGIES ON THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE EPES.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that Saturday, March 24, beginning at 1 o'clock, be set apart for eulogies on the character of the late SYDNEY P. EPES, Representative from Virginia.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that Saturday, March 24, not later than 1 o'clock, be set apart for eulogies upon the life and character of the late Representative EPES, of Virginia. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and that order is made.

REPRINT OF A BILL.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the reprint of 2,000 copies of House bill 4618, the pure-food bill. I will say that the bill has been called for by various associations and wholesale grocers throughout the country, so that two reprints have already been exhausted.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I want to know where the bills are to go for distribution. If they are to go out here in the document room, I object. If you send them to the folding room, I will not object. But somebody goes out to the document room and takes them out by the cartload, and the first man that gets there gets them all.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Wisconsin that a reprint carries 625 copies, and unanimous consent is in order; but if the gentleman's request goes beyond a reprint, the proper form is a resolution.

Mr. BABCOCK. I will confine it, Mr. Speaker, for the present, to a reprint, the usual number at this time, and later I will bring in a resolution.

The SPEAKER. To go to the folding room or the document room?

Mr. BABCOCK. For this amount I think they had better go in the usual way. I will introduce a resolution for a large number to go to the folding room later.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I would like to know what is the reason these can not go to the folding room.

Mr. BABCOCK. There is no objection, only——

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman that the law expressly provides where bills must go under a reprint.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Where is that?

The SPEAKER. Bills under an order for reprint go to the document room.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Then I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

REMOVAL OF SNOW AND ICE IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following resolution, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois, chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 204) to provide for the removal of snow and ice in the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the following sums are hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, namely:

For cleaning snow and ice from the streets and avenues of the District of Columbia, $1,000; one half of said sum to be paid out of the revenues of the District of Columbia and the other half out of the Treasury of the United States.

For the removal of snow and ice, to be disbursed under the direction of the officer in charge of public buildings and grounds in and around Washington, D. C., $1,000.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask if it is not usual for money appropriated for this purpose to be expended under the authority of the District Commissioners, and not under the authority of the superintendent of public buildings and grounds?

Mr. CANNON. They are both included in the resolution. The removal of snow and ice on all public reservations is under the direction of the superintendent of public buildings and grounds, and the other under the direction of the District Commissioners. There is $1,000 to each.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I did not understand that there was any money to be expended under the supervision of the District Commissioners.

Mr. CANNON. Yes; $1,000.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman a question. It is getting along in the spring, and the sun is very warm, and I want to know if he does not think the sun would remove the snow soon enough? If it was in the middle of the winter there might be some necessity for it.

Mr. CANNON. I will say to the gentleman from South Carolina that in February last these estimates came, and I said to myself and to some others, springtime is almost here; but with the appropriations exhausted and the prophets of the Weather Bureau having failed in their prediction, the amount of snow which fell yesterday is with us.

Mr. TALBERT. The gentleman is hardly ever mistaken a second time. He is generally right in his prophecies. He is a good prophet, and it does seem to me that it is unnecessary to make this appropriation. I want to suggest that to the gentleman.

Mr. CANNON. We have the snow with us now, and it seems to me that this appropriation is necessary.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There was no objection.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

ANDREW J. DAVIS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 524) granting an increase of pension to Andrew J. Davis, with Senate amendments thereto.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Speaker, I will say to the House that the Senate amendments to this bill and to several other bills which I understand are to follow immediately are all formal. The purpose is to produce uniformity so far as possible in all of these bills, so that the only variation shall be in the name of the beneficiary, the amount of the pension, and the statement of the service performed.

I move that the House concur in the Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were concurred in.

HOUSE BILLS WITH SENATE AMENDMENTS.

The SPEAKER severally laid before the House the following House bills with Senate amendments. The Senate amendments were severally read, and, on motion of Mr. SULLOWAY, were severally concurred in:

H. R. 2749. An act granting a pension to Susan Garrison;

H. R. 5156. An act granting an increase of pension to Frances C. Kirby;

H. R. 6575. An act granting a pension to Matilda G. Higbee;

H. R. 2477. An act granting an increase of pension to George H. Pennington;

H. R. 854. An act granting an increase of pension to John J. McCormick;

H. R. 4416. An act to increase the pension of Henry Geesen;

H. R. 3072. An act to increase the pension of William W. Wharton;

H. R. 3071. An act granting an increase of pension to John F. Nelson;

H. R. 309. An act granting a pension to James M. Kercheval;

H. R. 5509. An act granting a pension to Malinda Jones; and

H. R. 3067. An act granting an increase of pension to Melvina Bottles.

PURE-FOOD BILL.

Mr. BABCOCK. I now renew my request for a reprint of the bill H. R. 4618.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BABCOCK] renews his request for a reprint of the pure-food bill (H. R. 4618). Is there objection?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. RIDGELY, indefinitely, on account of serious illness.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. GRAFF. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar, subject to the resolution passed on Wednesday of this week.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House to consider bills on the Private Calendar, controlled by the order recently adopted by the House.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, under the rule, with Mr. HEMENWAY in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the first bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 5196) for the relief of CLAUDE A. SWANSON.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, what becomes of the bill that was before the committee at the last session on private bill day?

The CHAIRMAN. That was a war-claim bill. The Chair understands that business reported from the Committee on Claims is in order to-day under this rule.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. On the last private bill day the bill (H. R. 6909) to pay $4,500 to the Eastern Extension, Australasia and China Telegraph Company was under consideration. I desire to inquire whether that is to be in order at any time to-day?

Mr. GRAFF. From what committee was that bill reported?

Mr. RAY of New York. From the committee of which the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MAHON] is chairman.

Mr. GRAFF. That is the Committee on War Claims, and in my judgment the bill would not be in order to-day under the rule.

Mr. RAY of New York. I merely desired to know the fact.

Mr. GRAFF. As I understand it, Mr. Chairman, that is a bill reported from the Committee on War Claims.

The CHAIRMAN. It was.

Mr. GRAFF. My interpretation of the rule which we passed on Wednesday morning of this week would exclude consideration of bills reported from the Committee on War Claims to-day.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the rule under which we are proceeding to-day.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That on all Fridays for the remainder of this Congress, except the second and fourth of each month, it shall be the order, the House having proceeded to the consideration of private business according to the provisions of section 6 of Rule XXIV and section 1 of Rule XXVI, to take up, in the Committee of the Whole House, bills on the Private Calendar under the following conditions: On the next Friday which the House may devote to private business, and on every alternate Friday thereafter which may be devoted to private business, bills reported from the Committee on Claims shall have priority over those reported from the Committee on War Claims; and on the remaining alternate Fridays devoted to private bills, those reported from the Committee on War Claims shall have priority over those from the Committee on Claims. (Order made March 14.)

Mr. GRAFF. Mr. Chairman, I understand that in conformity to that rule war claims would not be in order unless we exhaust the business reported from the Committee on Claims, and there should then remain sufficient time for the consideration of bills reported from the Committee on War Claims.

The CHAIRMAN. Has the gentleman from New York [Mr. RAY] anything to say on this question?

Mr. RAY of New York. I wanted to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that House bill 6909, which, I am informed, is reported from the Committee on War Claims——

The CHAIRMAN. It does come from the Committee on War Claims.

Mr. RAY of New York (continuing). Is unfinished business. Now, it being the unfinished business and regularly in order to-day under the rules of the House, I wish to inquire, in order to ascertain in any proper way, whether the special order adopted the other day displaces the unfinished business already pending on that Calendar?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that the general rule of the House is that it goes over to the particular day on which business of its class is in order. On the Friday set apart for the consideration of bills reported from the Committee on War Claims this would be the unfinished business and would be in order, and in the opinion of the Chair it is not in order to-day.

Mr. RAY of New York. It will not be in order at all to-day?

The CHAIRMAN. It will not be in order to-day.

Mr. RAY of New York. That is satisfactory. I only desired to know when it would be in order.

CLAUDE A. SWANSON.

The first business was the bill (H. R. 5196) for the relief of CLAUDE A. SWANSON.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to CLAUDE A. SWANSON the sum of $1,769.59, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for expenses incurred in his contested-election case in the Fifty-fifth Congress.

Mr. GRAFF. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the report on this bill may be read for the information of members.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the report.

The report (by Mr. BOUTELL of Illinois) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5196) for the relief of CLAUDE A. SWANSON, have had the same under consideration, and, after investigation and examination of the accounts and vouchers submitted by him, report the bill back with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. SWANSON was elected to the Fifty-fifth Congress from the Fifth district of Virginia. His seat was contested by Mr. Brown, and the case was investigated by the Committee on Elections No. 3. A majority of this committee decided that Mr. SWANSON was entitled to his seat, and so reported to the House. By a yea-and-nay vote the House twice decided not to consider the case, thus leaving Mr. SWANSON in possession of his seat.

The record in this contested-election case was extremely voluminous, the evidence extending to the examination of several hundred witnesses. Mr. SWANSON submitted to the Committee on Elections a sworn statement showing that the expenses incurred by him in defending the contest amounted to the sum of $3,769.59, of which the sum of $2,533 was for counsel fees, and the sum of $1,236.59 for fees of witnesses, court costs, and printing.

The Committee on Elections unanimously reported to the Committee on Appropriations, recommending that Mr. SWANSON should be paid the full amount of his claim. In accordance with the existing law Mr. SWANSON received from the Government $2,000, leaving a balance of $1,769.59, the payment of which is provided for by this bill. Your committee has carefully examined the accounts submitted by Mr. SWANSON and believes that the charges therein contained are just and reasonable, and that he should be reimbursed for the above balance of $1,769.59.

There are numerous precedents for the payment to the parties to contested-election cases of the expenses incurred by them over and above the $2,000 authorized by the act of March 3, 1879. Since the passage of that act the following payments in excess of $2,000 have been allowed:

By act of July 7, 1884:
To John S. Wise	$1,500.00
To John E. Massie	1,500.00
By act of March 3, 1891: To Philip S. Post	5,668.40
By act of March 2, 1895:
To Robert A. Childs	2,500.00
To Thomas Settle	2,500.00
To A. H. A. Williams	2,500.00
By act of March 3, 1881:
To A. G. Curtin	6,000.00
To S. H. Yokum	6,000.00
To N. A. Hull	1,500.00
To Ignatius Donnelly	1,500.00
To W. B. Washburn	1,500.00
To Joseph Mason	2,000.00
To Jesse J. Yeatts	250.00
To J. J. Martin	250.00

Mr. GRAFF. Mr. Chairman, I am disagreeing with the majority of the committee in the favorable report on this bill, and I deem it courteous to yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BOUTELL], my colleague on the committee who made the report, to present the reasons in support of it; and I should like to be recognized by the Chair when the gentleman from Illinois has concluded. I reserve my time.

Mr. BOUTELL of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, this bill was introduced by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. OTEY], who, I think, is present in the House, and I yield to him for an explanation of the bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON. No one is objecting to the bill, and we may just as well vote on it.

Mr. BOUTELL of Illinois. The gentleman stated that he objected to the bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I did not understand that.

Mr. OTEY. Mr. Chairman, I understood objection was made by some gentleman to the bill; I do not know what his objection is. He did not state it, and the report here is as full an explanation as I can give of the bill, unless there is some special point on which the gentleman from Illinois desires light.

Mr. GRAFF. I am afraid no explanation would be satisfactory to me, because I am opposed to it on principle.

Mr. OTEY. I did not know that you were the gentleman who objected. I thought it was some other gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. Chairman, this is simply a question of the reimbursement of money to a contestee in an election case. The law or the rule provides that these expenses shall not exceed $2,000. Well, the contestee does not bring this thing on himself. He received notice of a contest, and he must meet all the points that the contestant chooses to raise; he gives notice of taking depositions all over the district, and of course the contestee must meet it; he has to employ counsel and is put to a great expense, and then when he comes here he finds that he has expended more money than the law or the rule permits.

In this case a very voluminous record required large expenditures for lawyers' fees, and they charged only what lawyers generally charge, $15, $20, and $25 a day—in fact, only $10 per day—for services rendered, and these charges are attested by vouchers which were presented to the Election Committee and that committee recommended that they should be paid; but when it reached the Committee on Appropriations they simply cut it down to the usual amount of $2,000. Mr. SWANSON had but one recourse, and that was to present his case to Congress. He did so, and he refers to a number of precedents, which are published in the report. If there was any reason for allowing such a claim at all in the past, there is certainly a good reason for allowing this.

Mr. TALBERT. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question there? There was so much confusion that I did not hear the reading of the report.

Mr. OTEY. Certainly.

Mr. TALBERT. Has the gentleman in this case drawn the maximum amount of $2,000? Did the committee allow him $2,000?

Mr. OTEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. TALBERT. And he wants another $1,000?

Mr. OTEY. He wants the balance of the expense, amounting to $1,760.

Mr. BROMWELL. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. OTEY. Certainly.

Mr. BROMWELL. The principal item in this amount asked for is for attorneys' fees, to the amount of $2,500, is it not?

Mr. OTEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. BROMWELL. How many attorneys were there employed in this case?

Mr. OTEY. Well, sir, I can not tell you without looking at the papers. There were a great many. There are a number of counties and a number of depositions. I do not remember, but that is stated in the papers of the case, which I suppose the chairman of the committee has on his desk, with the original vouchers, which will show.

Mr. BROMWELL. Does the gentleman know what was the largest amount claimed by any attorney as fees in this case?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Ten dollars a day, I will state, is all that is allowed.

Mr. BROMWELL. Is there a law that allows $10 a day?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Yes, sir; that is my understanding. There were eight or ten of them taking depositions at different places over a very large district, which made a large sum due to these attorneys.

Mr. BROMWELL. Does that cover only the fees, or does it include the expenses of traveling?

Mr. RICHARDSON. This is for fees at $10 a day, as I have been informed.

Mr. OTEY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is entitled to recognition. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BOUTELL] yield the floor?

Mr. BOUTELL of Illinois. I reserve the balance of my time. If there are any objections to the bill, I would like to hear them stated.

Mr. GRAFF. Mr. Chairman, on March 3, 1879, there was enacted into law the following provision:

That hereafter no contestee or contestant for a seat in the House of Representatives shall be paid exceeding $2,000 for expenses in an election contest.

I was surprised to find that prior to the enactment of that law in 1879 there was a law on the subject. Turning to the Revised Statutes of 1878, on page 21, section 130, I find this provision, which was law prior to that time:

No payment shall be made by the House of Representatives out of the contingent fund or otherwise to either party in a contested-election case for expenses incurred in prosecuting or defending the same.

So that up to March, 1879, it was the law on the statute book that not simply should the parties be limited to recompense of $2,000, but absolutely any sum was prohibited by law being paid by the House of Representatives out of any funds for the purpose of recompensing either party to the contest for the expense of that contest. Now, it is a matter of some embarrassment to me, upon the consideration of the first bill from my own committee, to disagree with a majority of the committee on this proposition.

I consider that it is a matter involving an important principle. Some one says that the reason why we ought to distinguish the man who is contestant or contestee in a Congressional contested-election case from the man who is a candidate at an election and becomes involved in a contest over some other elective office is because the people have an interest in who shall be elected to Congress to represent them outside of the personal interests of the contesting parties. But there is no difference between a member of Congress and a contest between two parties claiming to be elected as a judge or a governor or any other officer elected by the people, because the books all recognize that when the courts come to pass upon that contest it is the courts' duty to look not only to the interets of the respective parties, but to see that the voice of the people has been obeyed and a correct judgment rendered upon that contest. So there is nothing in that contention.

But it is said there are precedents for this Congress allowing expenses in contested-election cases. In some State legislatures it has been the custom to recognize the contestee and the contestant in contested-election cases, but I know of none where there has not been an express limitation which has been adhered to.

So we must remember that in 1879 the statute law was changed by the action of both parties to this Congress out of generosity, giving the members of this body $2,000, and no more, to recompense them as the limit for expenses incurred in contested-election cases; that it was an act of generosity and benevolence, and not a matter of right. There is absolutely no difference in principle between parties when they go before the court for the purpose of sustaining themselves concerning the enjoyment of emoluments and privileges of any other elective office and parties contesting as to the right of a seat in this House.

Now, then, what have we here? We have what is cited in this report as a justification of our action, six or seven precedents. What does that mean? It means that in citing the precedents Congress has heretofore stepped aside from the general provisions of the law and exercised favoritism over and above the limit in voting to favor a few. It means that if we do it at this time we add another precedent for disregarding the general law. I tell you, gentlemen of this House, the secret of this whole business is that if you look over the lists of these men you will find no obscure names on the favored roll.

What was the next difficulty in regard to the matter? The utter impracticability of examining into the fees and expenses which a man has actually paid out. We all know that we have not the facilities that a judicial body has for the purpose of determining and discriminating between different items involved in a contest. We all know the elasticity of lawyers' fees. If the contestant or contestee goes into a contest and realizes the fact that there are precedents in this House to warrant him in believing that the House will pay back to him any sum he may see fit in his own interest to pay out for the purpose of advancing his case, how will he be moved in that transaction?

What incentive will there be to him to use economy? He will go over the district with a fine-tooth comb and employ lawyers without number, in the hope that, forsooth, an addition of one more may add a mite to his strength in this contest. I have not been able to examine into all the precedents cited in this report, but at least two or three of these recent precedents were cases where the parties did not succeed in having an original bill reported to this House from the Committee on Claims and passed on its merits, but the parties went over to the Senate side and succeeded in having it tacked onto an appropriation bill and succeeded in putting it through.

So at least, as to that many of these precedents cited, here are three or four of them which can not be considered as precedents in this House. They were passed in a general appropriation bill, with practically no power in this House to consider them upon their merits. So, then, we see what wisdom there is in our first making a law in 1879 and yielding up of the general law which prohibited any recompense, and fixing a liberal maximum sum which would be allowed to both the parties.

I want to say to my Democratic friends on the other side of the Chamber that there has been no politics in the Committee on Claims in the consideration of any measure; and I oppose this claim with the utmost personal kindness to the claimant, Mr. SWANSON. I opposed it without reference to the merit of the contest between him and Mr. Brown, because I did not have the time to go into the merits of that controversy, and it is not involved here. I will say to him, however, that it can be fairly presumed that while he was incurring an expense of $2,600 Mr. Brown was also at least put to an equal amount of expense. And yet Mr. Brown gets no favorable report from this committee, and, in fact, seeks none.

It is true that after Mr. SWANSON's claim had been favorably acted on by the committee some member of the House who was opposed to the principle of that bill, and for the purpose of accomplishing at least equity in injustice, introduced a bill for the purpose of allowing Mr. Brown, Mr. Aldrich, and three or four other individuals who are exactly in the same position as Mr. SWANSON equitably, but were not placed in the same fortunate position to enforce their claims, a similar allowance for expenses in excess of the sum fixed by the statute.

One other thing: I was present here in the House at the time when there was an attempt made to secure consideration of the contested-election case of Brown vs. Swanson. Now, it would seem to me that after a gentleman had fortified himself by the expenditure of this extra money which he had paid out to establish the fact that he was elected, he would have been anxious to show the fruits of his labor by having a hearing upon the question. But it must be remembered, my friends—and I state it most kindly—that when that contested-election case came up, instead of my distinguished friend upon the opposite side of the Chamber seeking to have an exhibition before the House of this legal ability which had been exercised in the preparation of his defense, he did not want to have a trial in this body—I suppose out of his extreme kindly and benevolent feeling toward Mr. Brown.

Mr. BROSIUS. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. GRAFF. Yes, sir.

Mr. BROSIUS. What is the difference between the amount which you say the law allows to Mr. SWANSON and the amount claimed?

Mr. GRAFF. The law allows him $2,000 as a maximum sum, and Mr. SWANSON claims that he paid out about $3,600 in all, making an excess of some $1,600 or thereabouts, which he is now asking to have reimbursed to him by Congress.

Mr. BROSIUS. Was it made to appear before your committee that there was reasonable necessity for the expenditure of the additional sum?

Mr. GRAFF. I will say that my colleague from Illinois [Mr. BOUTELL], who reported this bill, was upon the Elections Committee which had in charge the case of Brown vs. Swanson; and I understand from him that it seemed to him that the items making up the $3,600 were fair and equitable.

But that is not the point. If in determining the claims of contestants and contestees for allowance of their expenses we propose to proceed upon the basis of what they have actually and necessarily paid out, then let us repeal the existing law which limits such allowances to the maximum amount of $2,000. Let us treat everybody alike.

I want my friends on both sides of this Chamber to consider the consequences of establishing this precedent. And I want to remind them that there has not been any precedent of this kind recently. A payment of this kind was made in 1891 and another (the last) in 1895; so that since the last payment of this kind there has elapsed a period of five years.

Now, it is entirely immaterial to me how the House may act upon this measure; but so far as I am concerned I have a little more delicacy in asserting my rights under the Constitution to pay out money for the benefit of myself and other members of the House than I have in exercising my right under the Constitution in paying out money for the benefit of people who do not enjoy the benefit of membership in this House.

It is true that the statutory law is no bar to our voting in this case the sum which is asked. It is true that we may, if we choose, maintain and enforce so much of the existing law as relates to procedure in election cases and ignore this other provision, a part of the same law, with regard to payment of contestants. We can relieve one, two, three, eight, or ten members from the effect of this last provision with regard to allowance of expenses in contested-election cases. Mr. Chairman, for the reasons I have given, I am opposed to the favorable reporting of this bill.

Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. Forty-five minutes.

Mr. GRAFF. I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER] and reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, I can add comparatively little to the argument made by the chairman of the Committee on Claims [Mr. GRAFF] against the payment of this claim. There is no doubt that, if passed, this bill will establish a most troublesome precedent. The report of the committee shows several claims of a similar character to have been paid in former Congresses; but, as has been well said, those precedents ought not to be followed. It is against the rule of procedure throughout the country to pay out of the public money expenses of litigants, including attorneys' fees, incurred in contesting or defending rights, whether they be public or private. Only about twenty years ago was the statute passed authorizing the payment of a maximum sum of $2,000 to parties in contested-election cases to reimburse them for expenses incurred in prosecuting or defending contests. This was a departure from the custom in such cases. But I have no criticism to make of the law. I believe it to be a wise provision.

In this case, Mr. Chairman, the amount authorized by that provision of law has already been paid. The claim of seventeen hundred and odd dollars in addition to the amount already allowed, though recommended by the Committee on Claims, will be, if paid, a pure gratuity. The statement is made in the report that this bill was recommended and approved by the Committee on Elections that had this contest in charge. I happened to be a member of that committee, and am thoroughly familiar with the claims of contestants and contestees which were pending before that committee. I was a member of the subcommittee that examined into the items of this particular claim, and our committee certified to the Committee on Appropriations that the amount stated in the report upon this bill had been actually and reasonably expended in defending the case of the sitting member.

We gave the same kind of a certificate to each contestant and contestee, and some of those claims, Mr. Chairman, amounted to over $8,000. These were cases of men who occupied the same attitude before the House and in relation to the public funds as the gentleman who by force of this bill is asking the payment of $1,700.

Several weeks ago a bill was introduced asking that Congress make an appropriation to pay to other contestants and contestees who had cases in the last House the expenses incurred by them over and above the $2,000 authorized by law and paid to all. It involves an actual appropriation of nearly $18,000, and is pending to-day before the committee.

Mr. HILL. Is there any reason why those claims should not be paid if this is paid?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. None whatever. If the House decides to pay this claim, it should make up its mind to treat other claimants with equal magnanimity and pay the seventeen or eighteen thousand dollars of additional claims pending before the committee.

If we depart from the limits fixed by the statute and treat all parties to contested-election cases alike, it will involve the appropriation of many, many thousands of dollars.

I know that it is a very expensive luxury to have a contested-election case in this House, particularly from the State of Virginia under the peculiar election system that exists in that State. Such a proceeding costs a great deal of money. But I submit, sir, that the Congress of the United States has fixed a limit upon its generosity; and there is a grave doubt of the wisdom of paying any money in excess of that limitation to parties in contested election cases. I know of gentlemen on the other side of the House who have been seeking an absolute repeal of this provision of the statutes because they say it encourages election contests. I am not in favor of its repeal; I believe it is a worthy and meritorious law. I am in favor of some such equitable provision until the election systems in the respective States of this country are such that the people and the country can have entire confidence in the results of an election.

Mr. Chairman, I do not know why an exception should be made of this case. As I said a moment ago, I was a member of the committee that had in charge this contest. I prepared the report, which was concurred in by only a minority of the committee. That report was submitted to the House with resolutions recommending the seating of John R. Brown, the contestant. Gentlemen of the last House well remember that the report remained upon the Calendar month after month and month after month. Mr. Brown had honestly made his contest; he had incurred expenses amounting to over $7,000, which were certified by the committee on the same basis as the expenses incurred by the contestee. Mr. Brown came here and begged the poor privilege of presenting to the members of the House his claim to the seat which was occupied by the contestee. And the friends of the contestee raised the question of consideration, and they succeeded in every instance in denying the contestant the right even to be heard on the floor of the House.

I say, Mr. Chairman, I am against this bill because it opens wide the door, and if passed it ought to open wide the door, to the claim of every party to a contested-election case since 1879. If we pay this bill, we ought to pay every other bill that stands upon the same legal and equitable basis. I am against the payment of this claim because I think that parties who engage in these contests or who are defendants in contests of this character should be required to carry part of the burden, as litigants do in all civil and local matters.

The bill is dangerous in principle. It practically repeals or suspends for the benefit of a particular person a statute enacted twenty years ago after we had had a number of years of experience in relation to these matters, a statute enacted for the protection of litigants in contested-election cases and for the protection of the public Treasury as well.

I appeal to members of the House to vote down this claim; stand by the $2,000 limit; let parties who have honest contests before the House receive that amount and no more. But I submit that if this claim be granted, the law limiting the amount to be paid to parties in contested-election cases should be at once repealed, and every man who has a claim of this character should be notified to submit it to the Committee on Claims; and I have no doubt the sentiment of justice and fairness and equity that pervades that great committee will induce them to report in favor of these other claims as well.

I believe I have said all I care to say on this subject; but I do hope that this bill will be defeated and let the whole matter end there.

Mr. BOUTELL of Illinois. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURKE].

Mr. BURKE of Texas. Mr. Chairman, as a member of Elections Committee No. 3 in the last Congress, I gave my approval to the entire amount of this bill, as I also did to the bill for the contestant, Mr. Brown. I did that because of the precedents of this House which had previously upon repeated occasions allowed to both contestant and contestee more than the statutory amount of $2,000. I believe this bill ought to pass the House this evening. I shall vote for its passage, and I will state to my friend from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER] that so far as my vote goes I shall vote for the payment of every claim of this kind that he has referred to here as now undisposed of before this House. I would do it for the reason that I have already suggested, because of the policy which has been pursued here, and because of the precedents of this House allowing the payment of these sums in excess of the $2,000.

But I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that during the last Congress I prepared and introduced a bill to repeal in toto the law as it now stands allowing $2,000 as an absolute amount to be paid to contestants and contestees in every contested-election case before this House. I ask the members of this House, Do you know how many contested-election cases have been filed since the passage of the law allowing these sums? Do you know the amount appropriated by Congress to pay the parties in this large number of contested-election cases?

The Clerk of this House during the last session of Congress informed me that there had been 157 contested-election cases filed since the passage of the law, and in the Fifty-sixth Congress there have been 10 more, making an aggregate of 167 contested-election cases. Even at $4,000 apiece, under the law as it stands to-day, $2,000 to the contestant and $2,000 to the contestee, this Government has paid out nearly $700,000 to litigants in civil lawsuits before the House, for a contested-election case is a civil suit.

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. BURKE of Texas. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman contend that under the present law each contestant and contestee are always required to be paid $2,000?

Mr. BURKE of Texas. I do not say that they are required to do it, but I say that they invariably do it, with but few exceptions, and the gentleman from Illinois can show very few exceptions where contestants and contestees have failed to avail themselves of the $2,000.

Mr. MANN. I can very easily show the gentleman several exceptions.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I had a case here once that cost $175, instead of $2,000.

Mr. BURKE of Texas. Yes; and I can show the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] cases in which Congress has paid over $4,500 to a contestee from the State of North Carolina.

Mr. MANN. That is the reason why this law was enacted.

Mr. BURKE of Texas. If you have stood by the law in the past always, I should say stand by the law to-day, but you have not done it.

Mr. DOLLIVER. How much extra does this call for?

Mr. BURKE of Texas. About $1,000.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Is there a showing made that the expenses were actually incurred?

Mr. BURKE of Texas. A perfect showing was presented to the Committee on Elections No. 3, and receipts for every dollar of it, and sworn to. There is no question or contention here but what this is a just claim, so far as the amount concerned is involved, the money having been actually expended beyond any question of doubt. Under the precedents of this House, I submit that we ought to refund to Mr. SWANSON, the claimant in this case, the money that he has paid out.

But, Mr. Chairman, I submit that whenever government furnishes to a litigant a tribunal in which he can litigate his claims—the issues involved in any controversy—government has discharged its full obligation to that citizen. The Government of the United States presents the House of Representatives as a tribunal into which any contestant in a contested-election case can come and present his case. I think, sir, that when Government has done that, it should stop and not pay the litigants for the privilege of going into the very tribunal that government has given them to hear and determine their cases. The Government has done enough for him, and, in my candid judgment, it has been a standing bid to certain men to prosecute contested-election cases before this House.

Mr. GRAFF. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. BURKE of Texas. Yes.

Mr. GRAFF. Do you not think that a fine opportunity is presented here to give further encouragement to contestants to enter upon fruitless contests by adding strength to the few precedents that already exist?

Mr. BURKE of Texas. Stop your precedents that you have established heretofore and join hands with me to repeal the law in toto. That is the way to do it. Do not give a man a tribunal in which his case may be tried and then pay him for the privilege of coming there. The Government of the United States ought not to do it. It is unjust to the taxpayers of this country that we should do it.

Mr. DOLLIVER. In that case what would become of an honest contestant who had not the means to prosecute his case?

Mr. BURKE of Texas. What is to become of an honest litigant in the State of Iowa who has not the means to begin a lawsuit?

Mr. DOLLIVER. But this is a public matter.

Mr. BURKE of Texas. The State of Iowa gives the litigant a tribunal in which he can present his claim.

Mr. DOLLIVER. This is a public matter.

Mr. BURKE of Texas. No, Mr. Chairman, this is simply a contention and a lawsuit, so to speak, between two men over the possession, pay, and emoluments of a public office.

Mr. DOLLIVER. But my friend will admit that it is of more importance to the public at large that an election should be honestly held and returned than it is to either of the contestants.

Mr. BURKE of Texas. Well, I do not make that admission; but I want to suggest this further to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER]: I am not acquainted with the laws of his State, but I will venture the assertion here, and I call upon the gentleman to contradict me if I am not stating the fact, that the laws of Iowa do not permit the legislature of that State to pay the expenses of a contested-election case.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I am not advised about that, but I have no doubt they do.

Mr. BURKE of Texas. Well, if they do, that State is an exception to the rule of the States of this Union. I have never seen any exception to the general rule. I do not know of any State where the legislature comes up and pays the lawyer's fees of a man contesting a seat in the legislature.

Mr. DOLLIVER. But I will say to my friend that I doubt if there was ever a contest of that character, involving the honesty of the conduct of an election or the returns, in the legislature of Iowa.

Mr. BURKE of Texas. Perhaps you may differ from the most of the States in that matter. Many of the States have contested-election cases in both branches of the legislature, and I venture the assertion, and I believe I can say without fear of successful contradiction by any member of this House, that there is not a legislature of any State in this Union to-day that pays the lawyer's fees in a contested-election case in the legislature of any State. They do not do it, and it ought not to be done here. Will the gentleman from Ohio, the gentleman from Indiana, and others entertaining the views that they have expressed, join hands with me and others on the floor of this House and repeal in toto this law?

I thank the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BOUTELL], and yield back such time as I may have of the ten minutes.

Mr. BOUTELL of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON].

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that this is a case that we must try upon the facts presented, and not upon any former precedents. The facts are that in the last Congress the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON], the claimant here, had his right to a seat attacked. He was a defendant. He brought no action; he simply defended a just right to a seat. I submit, Mr. Chairman, whatever grounds there may be, and good grounds, for a law which limits the amount to be paid in election contests to $2,000, it ought not to be applied in a case like this when we have the discretion to change it.

Now, if a contestant comes without any right, and it is solemnly adjudged by this House that he had no right to bring his contest, he ought to be satisfied with the very reasonable amount that we give him, $2,000. He has brought an improper action, and his case is similar to that of a plaintiff in a lawsuit who loses his case. All the lawyers here, and I suppose all the other members, understand that if the plaintiff loses his case in an ordinary action at law, he must pay the costs. If he gets his judgment against the defendant, the defendant pays the cost, as a general rule. Now, here was a gentleman attacking the title, the indisputable title, of Mr. SWANSON to a seat in the last House. He did not go around and hunt up a lawsuit or a contest; he simply defended a right. In doing that it is conceded that he paid out about $1,600 more than the $2,000 allowed him by law. The money has actually been paid by him.

Mr. GRAFF. Will the gentleman yield to me?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Certainly.

Mr. GRAFF. The gentleman has cited general litigations as an example of the usual method where the defeated party is liable to pay the costs. I want to ask the gentleman whether it is usual to incorporate the attorney's fees as a part of the costs?

Mr. RICHARDSON. No; but Congress has been reasonable enough to do that, has seen fit to do it, and nobody has objected to it.

Mr. BURKE of Texas. In many States on promissory notes they allow a 10 per cent attorney's fee.

Mr. RICHARDSON. There are some cases where the attorney's fees are allowed, but it is not usual to do so in a bill of costs.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I understand the gentleman to state that he thought a contestant ought not to be allowed any expense money unless he was successful.

Mr. RICHARDSON. No; I did not say that.

Mr. MANN. Then I misunderstood the gentleman.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I said there might be some ground for Congress to pass an act of that kind, but Congress has not done so. Congress has provided that contestants and contestees shall stand alike and each be allowed $2,000 and no more. I say this is liberal where a man loses his case, to allow him $2,000 for his expenses, but where a man defends his right to a seat and actually expends more than $2,000 in order to defend a just cause, we ought not to shut him off with the sum of $2,000. That is the position I take.

Mr. MANN. Another question. Take, for instance, the Aldrich case in the last Congress, where Mr. ALDRICH was successful in the House, and where he expended an amount a great deal over $2,000; would you be willing that he should be paid?

Mr. RICHARDSON. If it was a just claim——

Mr. MANN. Well, the House decided it was a just claim.

Mr. RICHARDSON. That would be all right; I would make no controversy with him; if he paid more than $2,000 I am inclined to think that Congress ought to allow it to him. I am not making the contention that it should not be allowed; I am trying to make the distinction between a just and an unjust claim.

Mr. GRAFF. May I ask the gentleman from Tennessee if I understand that he would allow an amount much exceeding the limit, and is not that tantamount to a repeal of the existing law?

Mr. RICHARDSON. It is not a repeal. It would repeal it pro tanto; it certainly would repeal it in this case and to the extent of this case; and that I am in favor of doing, because a distinction should be drawn between a man who brings an unjust complaint and one who simply defends his just title. We have got the discretion, and I say we ought to exercise it.

Mr. Chairman, no man controverts the justness of this claim; no man controverts the fact that Mr. SWANSON was put to this expense of $1,600 more than he got to defend a proper title to his seat. I do not want to make an argument ad hominem, but how easy it may be for some of us to have an unjust assault made upon the title to our seat; and when we have expended more than $2,000 in defending that we would not like to be held down to such a rule. We have made precedents in former cases; it seems to me we ought not now refuse to do by this gentleman what we have done in similar cases.

Mr. STEELE. Will the gentleman yield to me for a minute?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I would not like to yield to the gentleman for a minute to make a speech; I will yield to him to ask a question. He can get time if he wants it.

Mr. STEELE. I do not know whether I can get time or not.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Well, I yield, then.

Mr. STEELE. In the Forty-ninth Congress my seat was contested, and without my principal attorneys being added to it, the expense of that contest, every item of which was sworn to, amounted to over $4,700. When the case was brought to the committee every single member of that committee, after hearing it, decided that the contestant had no ground whatever for contesting. Not a member of that committee voted that he had any right to the contest; and the House sustained the verdict of the committee. Yet, when my itemized expenses were brought in, they only allowed me $2,000. First it was $1,000, and then, by an amendment in the Senate, another thousand was added.

Mr. RICHARDSON. What Congress was that?

Mr. STEELE. The Forty-ninth. Now, if I was allowed one cent, I should have been allowed the full amount of the expense, just as I think should be done in this case.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I agree with the gentleman. That proves the point I am trying to assert—that where a just claim to a seat is unjustly assailed, we should not make the man who is unjustly assailed pay the expense of defending his just claim.

Mr. Chairman, I do not want to take the time of the House. I find we have a number of precedents here. I wish to say, and I do assert here, that these precedents have not been made by any particular party. I do not think politics has heretofore entered into the decision of these cases.

I know in the case from North Carolina, the case of Mr. Settle, a Republican, it was a Democratic House. He defended his seat and was successful. He was allowed $2,500, as this report shows, over and above the $2,000. Now, one gentleman who argued on the other side said that these cases seemed to be peculiar to Virginia. I find a case from Illinois, the State of the gentleman [Mr. GRAFF], Philip S. Post, in which he was paid $5,686 over the $2,000. Here is a case from North Carolina, Mr. Williams; here is the case of Governor Curtin, from Pennsylvania; here is a case from Texas, Mr. Yokum; here is the case of Mr. Donnelly, from Wisconsin. But, Mr. Speaker, the point I want to emphasize is that the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] defended his seat in a Republican House—the last House—where the Republicans had a majority of about 60. His seat was unjustly attacked, and he made his defense to it. The proof is that every dollar of this $1,600 was honestly paid by him. Now, when he comes to Congress and asks that that $1,600 be refunded, we are met by the statement that there is a law which limits the amount to be paid to $2,000.

But we find in a dozen cases nearly this House has overruled that law and made an appropriation. There are cases similar to that cited by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STEELE] where the appropriations have not been sufficient to cover the additional amount expended by the contestees in defending their cases. But because Congress has not done it in all cases is no good reason why we will not do it in this case, when a claimant comes and asks to have it refunded. He is not asking anything irregular; nothing out of the ordinary course of events; he is not asking anything that any other gentleman ought not to ask and receive from Congress.

If there was any controversy or any criticism about one dollar entering into the sixteen hundred dollars, Mr. SWANSON would not have it. I am authorized and fully warranted in saying that if there was a criticism of the expenditure of 10 cents of this sixteen hundred dollars asked by him, he would not want it, although he has paid it. The proof shows that he has paid every dollar of it. Congress has decided that he paid it justly. Congress has decided that when there were 60 Republican majority on that side, and when a Republican contested his seat, he should not be turned out. With these facts, with precedents that have been cited here, Congress ought to pass this bill.

Now, then, on the question of making a precedent, if it establishes a precedent, why, all we have got to do will be to disregard it if we want to in some other case. If we do not do this, we disregard a precedent. It is an unfortunate appeal when you say you do not want to disregard precedents, because here are the precedents, and when you do not pay Mr. SWANSON you disregard the precedents. Why should you disregard it in his case? If such a case comes up here in the next Congress, or in this Congress at a future day, and you are asked to pay more than $2,000, all you have got to do is to inquire into it and ascertain whether the expenditure is proper, whether the money has been properly expended, and pay it. If it was not improvident, if you find the facts to be as they are in this case, we will follow the precedent we have established and make the payment. Mr. Chairman, that is about all I care to say in this matter.

Mr. GRAFF. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. Thirty minutes.

Mr. GRAFF. I will now yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I take it that were it not for the genial presence and the whole-souled personality of the claimant, a member of this House, this claim would never have come before the Committee on Claims or before the House.

I suppose a majority of the House, out of pure kindness to the gentleman from Virginia, would be very glad now to vote him this sum, or even double the amount; but the question is whether we shall treat him and others fairly, and the still broader question, Mr. Chairman—and I call attention of the members on the other side of the House to the proposition—that the contests themselves depend largely upon the amount that is paid for contestants' fees.

In the last House there were twenty-one contests, nearly all of them against members on the other side of the floor. In the Committee on Elections No. 1, of which I have the misfortune to be a member, and was in the last Congress, we considered the claims presented by contestants and contestees in each of the seven cases referred to. I happened to be a member of the subcommittee that considered these claims, and under the practice of the House, when we had allowed a claim, the amount allowed was certified to the Committee on Appropriations.

In nearly every case that was presented to our committee the amount expended, both by the contestant and the contestee, was largely in excess of the $2,000. I have no doubt that some of the contests had been inaugurated for the very purpose of getting attorney's fees for some attorney belonging in the district in which the contestant lived.

I have no doubt there will be plenty of contests in this House from some of the districts where people are elected members of this House by two or three thousand votes—plenty of contests—if this House proposes to set up a precedent of paying four, five, six, or ten thousand dollars for expenses. We have before the committee at this time, in this Congress, a record from Virginia which nobody could produce and get up with attorneys' fees which cost less than eight or ten thousand dollars.

Does the House desire in this case to instruct the Committee on Elections and the Committee on Appropriations to recommend to the House the payment of all the expenses and attorney's fees in all these cases? Do the gentlemen on the other side of the aisle desire to serve notice upon some of the people in their districts that they want contests instituted against them? I have no doubt myself that if the contestant in this particular case in the last House had been paid a good round sum for his contestant's fees and attorneys' fees we would have had the same contest in this House.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I do not think he will make an argument that allowing more than $2,000 to a successful contestee will induce a contestant to bring a contest.

Mr. MANN. It has been the uniform practice in this House to treat the contestant and the contestee in precisely the same manner. If they allow to one, they allow to the other. If you make a rule that the contestant should only be allowed his expenses when successful, the same rule carried out would prevent the allowance to the contestee when unsuccessful; and if you allow this sum in this case to the claimant, then you ought to allow to every one of the claimants in the last House who were successful their fees, and you ought not to allow to anybody in this House who is unsuccessful his fees.

Would the gentleman claim, for instance, that in the ALDRICH-Robbins case, in which the House has just seated Mr. ALDRICH, Mr. Robbins having been declared by this House to have been fraudulently elected—would the gentleman claim that in that case Mr. Robbins ought not to be allowed anything? If you apply the rule in one case, let it work always; give no preference.

Mr. Chairman, while I appreciate the desire on the part of some gentlemen to give a gratuity to the gentleman from Virginia, while I would be very glad, indeed, to give him anything in the form of friendship or money, so far as my conscience and my sense of propriety would allow, I say that this House ought to preserve the law as it stands, and either allow all the expenses in all cases or else allow in each case only the expenses incurred up to $2,000.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURKE] is in favor of allowing nothing; but if you allow anything, he wants to make the amount as large as possible.

Mr. BURKE of Texas. To the extent of every dollar actually paid out.

Mr. MANN. Now, Mr. Chairman, the trouble in these cases is that while this case may be perfectly fair and plain as to the amount paid out, the verification of the amounts paid in such cases depends upon the statements made in each instance. It is an easy matter to produce an attorney's bill receipted.

These cases depend very largely upon the statement of the claimant as to the amount paid out. It became the duty of the committee on which I served in the last Congress to cut down some of the bills of claimants. Why, Mr. Chairman, we had a bill presented to us from Alabama where one of the claimants had done nothing but serve notice of contest. Yet he insisted and swore that he had paid out $1,500 as attorneys' fees.

The committee did not allow it. But under the idea of the gentleman from Texas, if a claimant to a seat will institute a contest and then swear that he has employed attorneys and paid them retainer fees, the House must pay the bills.

Mr. BURKE of Texas. Not at all. Will the gentleman allow an interruption?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. BURKE of Texas. I take it that such a claim would go to the appropriate committee and the matter would be passed upon by the committee, just as any other claim would be passed upon, and if the committee became satisfied by proof that the claim was fair and just they would allow it; otherwise they would disallow it, just as they would do in the case of any other claim.

Mr. MANN. Well, Mr. Chairman, there is absolutely no way to determine the correctness and justice of the expenditures except upon the statement of the claimant. I say that if you break down this rule, which was upheld by the last House, you will have a great number of election contests. In the last Congress there were 21 contests. We observed the rule; we served notice upon the contestants that we would not allow them an amount exceeding $2,000, and the result is that in this House there are only 10 contests.

Are gentlemen from the South on the other side of the aisle so anxious for their seats to be contested that they are urging contestants to come before this Congress and seek the payment of large bills for expenses? I should suppose that they, of all other members, would be most anxious to preserve the rule inviolable, that under no circumstances shall a man filing a contest be paid a sum exceeding $2,000.

For myself I am frank to say that I very much agree with the gentleman from Texas in the idea that we ought to allow no attorneys' fees whatever in these contested-election cases. I believe the law as it stands has already encouraged a great many contests which ought never to have been brought into this House.

But I know that if the law fixing a limitation upon these allowances be practically repealed by the action of this House, it will result in encouraging additional election contests in the South, and probably elsewhere. For these reasons, it seems to me that this claim ought not to be allowed.

Mr. GRAFF. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. CAPRON].

Mr. CAPRON. Mr. Chairman, it is not my purpose to occupy even the entire five minutes allowed to me. But, Mr. Chairman, I think that more than this particular case is being considered to-day by the Committee of the Whole. It seems to me clear that if we are to allow each contestant to be the judge of the sum to be expended in election contests for himself, then, taking the contested-election cases which have been brought before this House during the last four Congresses—not going back further than that—there would not be one in which the contestant or contestee would not be willing to state—under oath, if necessary—that his case was equally good, equally strong and pertinent, had equal right and righteousness behind it, with the case now under consideration.

In the Fifty-third Congress there were nine contested-election cases. I desire to put a summary of those cases in the RECORD, that we may clearly see what we are running up against:

State of Alabama: Fifth district—Martin W. Whatley vs. James E. Cobb, three packages.

State of California: Third district—Warren B. English vs. Samuel G. Hilborn, two packages.

State of Georgia: Tenth district—Thomas E. Watson vs. James C. C. Black, two packages.

State of Illinois: Eighth district—Lewis Steward vs. Robert A. Childs, two packages.

State of Kansas: Second district—H. L. Moore vs. Edward H. Funston, five packages.

State of Missouri: Eleventh district—John J. O'Neill vs. Charles F. Joy, two packages.

State of North Carolina: Fifth district—A. H. A. Williams vs. Thomas Settle, two packages.

State of Tennessee: Eighth district—P. H. Thrasher vs. B. A. Enloe, three packages.

State of Virginia: Fourth district—J. T. Goode vs. J. F. Epes, three packages.

If we go to the extent of allowing in this case $1,600 more for expenses than is allowed by the statute, next week or next year some other case may, and probably will, be presented in which the excess will be $2,000 or $5,000, or an indefinite amount, when we fix a precedent of paying all the actual expenses incurred. In the Fifty-fourth Congress there were 34 contested-election cases, as follows:

No.	Contestant.	Contestee.	District.
1	W. C. Robinson	George P. Harrison	Third Alabama.
2	W. F. Aldrich	Gaston A. Robbins	Fourth Alabama.
3	A. T. Goodwyn	James E. Cobb	Fifth Alabama.
4	T. H. Aldrich	Oscar W. Underwood	Ninth Alabama.
5	W. H. Felton	John W. Maddox	Seventh Georgia.
6	Hugh R. Belknap	Lawrence E. McGann	Third Illinois.
7	John I. Rinaker	Finis E. Downing	Sixteenth Illinois.
8	George Denny, jr	William C. Owens	Seventh Kentucky.
9	N. T. Hookins	Joseph M. Kendall	Tenth Kentucky.
10	H. Dudley Coleman	Charles F. Buck	Second Louisiana.
11	Taylor Beattie	Andrew Price	Third Louisiana.
12	Alexis Benoit	Charles J. Boatner	Fifth Louisiana.
13	William S. Booze	Harry W. Rusk	Third Maryland.
14	Robert T. Van Horn	John C. Tarsney	Fifth Missouri.
15	J. Murray Mitchell	James J. Walsh	Eighth New York.
16	Timothy J. Campbell	Henry C. Miner	Ninth New York.
17	R. A. Cheesebrough	Geo. B. McClellan	Twelfth New York.
18	Henry P. Cheatham	Fred. A. Woodard	Second North Carolina
19	Cyrus W. Thompson	John G. Shaw	Third North Carolina.
20	Charles H. Martin	James A. Lockhart	Sixth North Carolina.
21	George W. Murray	William Elliott	First South Carolina.
22	Robert Moorman	Asbury C. Latimer	Third South Carolina.
23	Joshua E. Wilson	John L. McLaurin	Sixth South Carolina.
24	Thomas B. Johnston	J. William Stokes	Seventh South Carolina.
25	J. H. Davis	D. B. Culberson	Fourth Texas.
26	Jerome C. Kearby	Jo. Abbott	Sixth Texas.
27	A. J. Rosenthal	Miles Crowley	Tenth Texas.
28	R. T. Thorp	Wm. R. McKenney	Fourth Virginia.
29	George W. Cornett	Claude A. Swanson	Fifth Virginia.
30	J. Hampton Hoge	Peter J. Otey	Sixth Virginia.
31	Jacob Yost	H. St. Geo. Tucker	Tenth Virginia.
32	A. M. Newman	J. G. Spencer	Seventh Mississippi.
33	Thomas E. Watson	J. C. C. Black	Ninth Georgia.
*34	Beattie	Price	Eleventh Louisiana.

*Second case.

Now, I do not believe you could get any one of those 34 contestants to agree that he had not as good a case as is presented by the bill before the committee, and had not equally good grounds for claiming an additional allowance, if this claim be allowed.

In the Fifty-fifth Congress there were 11 contested-election cases, as follows:

State of Alabama: Second, Third, Fourth, Fifth, and Ninth districts.
State of Delaware: At large.
State of Kentucky: Third district.
State of Louisiana: First district.
State of Mississippi: Third district.
State of New York: Sixteenth and Thirty-first districts.
State of Oregon: First district.
State of Pennsylvania: Third district.
State of South Carolina: First, Second, and Seventh districts.
State of Tennessee: Tenth district.
State of Virginia: Second, Fourth, and Fifth districts.

In the Fifty-sixth Congress there are, or have been, six contests, as follows:

State of Alabama: Fourth district.
State of Kentucky: Fifth, Eighth, and Ninth districts.
State of Mississippi: Third district.
State of North Carolina: Sixth and Ninth districts.
State of South Carolina: Third district.
State of Virginia: Second and Eleventh districts.

Which I insert in the RECORD, that we may see what a tremendous consideration this precedent involves when we take these cases in the aggregate. If this thing goes on, I agree with the gentleman from Illinois that the United States Treasury will have to find some additional means of revenue and the contested-election cases will very soon aggregate an amount larger than the pension roll.

Mr. BURKE of Texas. I apprehend from the remarks of the gentleman from Rhode Island that he will join with me in an effort to repeal the law in toto.

Mr. CAPRON. Well, if the gentleman will bring in his bill, we will discuss that when it is presented; but upon present consideration I confess that I am very much of the opinion that I do agree with the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. FITZGERALD of New York. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CAPRON. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD of New York. Does the gentleman know whether, in all these cases that he has cited, more than the statutory amount was expended?

Mr. CAPRON. I have been told by numerous contestants and contestees that their expenses ranged anywhere from four to eight and nine thousand dollars; and I have been told within three days of one gentleman who was seated during the last three days whose actual expenses amounted to more than seventy-five hundred dollars. Now, I will not agree to vote one cent beyond the $2,000 to either of the contestants who were admitted during the last week.

Mr. FITZGERALD of New York. The gentleman leaves the impression that in all these cases the amount exceeded the sum allowed by the statute.

Mr. CAPRON. I do not know whether that was so or not.

Mr. FITZGERALD of New York. It would be immaterial how many contestants there were unless the amount exceeded the statutory limit.

Mr. CAPRON. We have no knowledge of that, either one way or the other; but so far as it has ever come to my knowledge there has never been an election case where the contestee or the contestant has admitted that his expenses came within the $2,000 limit.

Now, in the Fifty-sixth Congress there are 10 contested-election cases. I wonder if any of the twenty parties to those 10 cases will agree that his case is less worthy and that his expenses ought not to be paid, if the gentleman from Virginia is allowed his entire expenditures under this bill.

I believe we should stop right here. I believe no man should ever get more than the $2,000 at present allowed by law; and this being one of those questions which we have no business to approach in a partisan way, I believe this House, without regard to party, ought to say that it will stand by the law, limiting the amount allowed to the parties to an election contest to $2,000, until that law is repealed.

Mr. GRAFF. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. JOY.]

Mr. JOY. I only desire a very few minutes to say what I have to say upon this case.

It seems to me that we are going already too far in these election cases, not only in allowing the $2,000, which is at present allowed by law in such cases, but in allowing anything at all. It is true that in almost every case where an election contest is had, the expenses largely exceed the $2,000 allowed by the statute.

I speak with more or less feeling upon this subject, for I had a contested-election case myself in the Fifty-third Congress, in which Congress there was a majority of 100 on the other side of the Chamber. My expenses, as vouched for in every instance and for every item, amounted to more than $8,500. I was the contestee, and I was elected.

You may ask if I was not unseated. That is true; but in proof of the statement that I now make, I will cite gentlemen who sit upon the other side to-day and who sat in the Fifty-third Congress, and ask them to say whether I was not elected to the Fifty-third Congress. I will leave it to them to decide. That Congress, having a majority of 100 Democrats, would only allow the $2,000, the exact amount provided by statute, although the vouchers, all certified to by the persons to whom the money had been paid, showed that the expenses which I had necessarily incurred in defending my seat against the one who sought to wrest it from me were $8,500.

Now, why shall we open the door at this late day, why shall we go back to a preceding Congress—the Fifty-fifth—and allow expenses amounting to $1,700 more than the limit allowed by law? If you are going to do that, why not go back to the Fifty-third Congress and allow me $6,500 (which I shall not ask for) which I actually expended in a contest to defend a seat in that body. My friends, it is opening the door too wide. This does not extend back simply to the Fifty-fifth Congress, but it extends back indefinitely. There is no statute of limitation to run against claims of this kind. This Congress can do whatever it pleases with reference to the expenses of contestants and contestees in election cases. The rule has been broken, has been overstepped, in two or three instances, as I am informed; in one instance in the Fifty-third Congress, where an additional amount of $2,200 was allowed.

That case is quoted as a precedent to-day, and you will find that if this bill passes all the contestants and contestees, whether sitting or not, will come, and properly come, and ask that their expenses be borne by the Government of the United States. You gentlemen who are cheeseparing about expenses on that side of the House do not come with clean hands in asking that in this case, coming up from a former Congress, we shall pay out of the Treasury $1,700 for moneys expended by the gentleman from Virginia. I have no doubt the expense was incurred, and legitimately incurred, but the time came when the law was passed to stop all this business. I will agree with the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURKE] that I will vote to cut off all expenses of contests on either side. That will stop half of the contests in this House of Representatives. My seat would not have been contested in the Fifty-third Congress if it had not been for the money that there was in it.

Now, my friends, I hope that there will be no party division upon this question. If I sat upon that side of the House, I would take the same position that I am going to take sitting upon this side. It is a question that will appeal to you. If, as some of you think, in the next Congress you shall have a majority of 50 or any majority in this body, and I come back and ask you to pay me sixty-five hundred dollars properly expended in the Fifty-third Congress in the interest of maintaining my seat, to which I was elected, will you wish to have me cite this precedent and ask that you refund out of the National Treasury and have charged up to the Democratic party sixty-five hundred dollars expended in this regard? My friends, that is a question for you to consider.

I have no objection to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] getting his money, but I ask you to remember that it establishes a precedent for this and succeeding Congresses.

Mr. GRAFF. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BOUTELL] whether there is anyone else who desires to speak on that side? I see a gentleman on that side [Mr. KITCHIN] who rises and indicates his desire to speak.

Mr. BOUTELL of Illinois. I will ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAFF] if there is anyone else who desires to speak in opposition to this measure?

Mr. GRAFF. I think not.

Mr. CANNON. When will you reach the amendable stage?

Mr. GRAFF. I suppose an amendment would be in order when the motion was made to report the bill back to the House favorably. My colleague [Mr. BOUTELL] had indicated to me that he proposed——

Mr. RICHARDSON. An amendment would be in order after the close of general debate on the bill.

Mr. GRAFF. That would be upon the motion to report the bill favorably.

Mr. RICHARDSON. No; after a request had been made to close general debate, then the bill would be open to amendment.

Mr. GRAFF. Does the gentleman from Illinois desire to use any more time?

Mr. BOUTELL of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I thought we would close this as briefly as possible, if there was nothing more to be said in opposition. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN].

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, as I understood the argument of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] just now, it was that this bill should be defeated in order to discourage contests. I believe that was the substance of his opposition. Now, it seems to me that in order to discourage contests successful contestees should be allowed their full cost and unsuccessful contestants should be limited in the cost which they recover.

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Do you think that unsuccessful contestees should not be allowed anything?

Mr. KITCHIN. No, sir, I do not. I think there is a difference in the positions of an unsuccessful contestee and an unsuccessful contestant, resulting from the nature of their cases and the expense required for their preparation. As the gentleman from Illinois well knows, frequently in these contested-election cases the evidence of only two or three witnesses may be sufficient to throw out the returns of an entire township upon some ground or other, and then the parties are put to the proof of the votes they received. If the contestant succeeds in throwing out a township, it is natural to presume that in that township there was a large majority for the contestee. Now, when it comes to the proof of the vote cast for him, the contestee must necessarily examine many more witnesses than the contestant, and his cost will of necessity be larger than that of the contestant.

Mr. MANN. Well, suppose the charge is that the contestee has been elected by fraud and the House shall so determine. Do you think that there is any more reason for paying the expenses of the contestee than for paying the expenses of the contestant when he is declared unsuccessful?

Mr. KITCHIN. I do, for this reason: I think there is a difference in principle, because the contestant, before he begins his contest, has good opportunity, of which he of course avails himself, of investigating the entire district, and he voluntarily brings the contest. Now, on the part of the contestee, he has a seat which he holds by a proper certificate of the governor of his State, the prima facie returns showing that he was elected, and it is his duty as a representative of the people to preserve their rights and to preserve his seat here. The contest is not of his choosing. He must defend, whether he would escape the contest or not.

Mr. MANN. If he is elected by fraud, of course it is of his choosing. That is the very issue that is presented; an issue from which the case can not be separated.

Mr. KITCHIN. I still think that when a contestant examines the district and finds there is fraud, and he successfully proves sufficient fraud and wins his contest, he should be paid his expenses, not exceeding the limit of the law; but if he has made a false charge of fraud upon the people of his district and he fails in his case then I doubt whether he should be paid any of his expenses. But I believe that if the contestee repels that charge and preserves his seat he should be paid the full amount that it was necessary for him to incur to preserve the certificate that had been awarded him. That is a principle that is recognized in all the courts of the land now by statute, a principle that gives to the successful litigant the expenses necessary to properly conduct the prosecution or defense.

Mr. SNODGRASS. Do not they come out of the unsuccessful litigant? Why should we pay a claim upon the General Government for these expenses?

Mr. KITCHIN. I will come to the gentleman's point. I do not agree with the gentleman from Texas or the gentleman from Illinois who have just taken their seats, that this law should perhaps be repealed; because in the ordinary courts, I will say to the gentleman from Tennessee, private rights are being litigated, rights affecting only individuals. Now, here are rights involved affecting the Government itself. I stand here not as a representative of myself alone, but as the representative of the people of my district, to take a part in the Government of the United States for them; and so, it is right not only for this proper and necessary cost to come out of the Government, but that the attorneys' fees, which are not usually chargeable in the costs of a case in the State courts, properly incurred in the defense or prosecution of a just claim to a seat in this body, should be paid out of the General Treasury as a part of those necessary costs; otherwise you might have a good case, and yet would not dare to prosecute it for fear of the enormous cost.

A man might clearly think he was lawfully entitled to his seat in this Congress; but if the majority in this House are politically against him, and he knows that the burden of that contest will come out of his own pocket, he might not take the proper steps to defend the rights of the people. I think in such cases, when they succeed, it is right and proper that they should be allowed the necessary expenses, both as to lawyers' fees and as to witnesses. I do not think, if you will use discretion and shut out unsuccessful contestants, you will have much further trouble. They are the men that you ought to legislate against. It is the unsuccessful contestant that you ought to be rigid with in the enforcement of your ideas in the matter of saving cost against the Government. When a gentleman brings an unsuccessful case here, having carefully considered it, certainly he should be limited in the amount allowed him; and if gentlemen should see fit to propose a bill repealing the law that allows unsuccessful contestants to receive as much as $2,000 for expenses, I would certainly consider it very carefully before I would oppose its passage.

Mr. Chairman, I believe that is all I wish to say upon this matter. I think this bill can be justified in principle and in precedent.

Mr. BOUTELL of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has twenty-five minutes remaining.

Mr. BOUTELL of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, the discussion of this case has taken a wide range. The law applicable to this case is very simple, and the facts are equally simple. In the sundry civil bill of 1879 a provision was inserted that no contestant or contestee in an election case should be paid in excess of $2,000 for his expenses; that these expenses must be itemized and presented to the Committee on Elections; that no witness fees should be allowed except in accordance with section 128 of the Revised Statutes, giving a witness 75 cents a day and 5 cents a mile for mileage.

Now, I do not know that the repeal of this law or the enactment of any other law would prevent the bringing of similar claims into this House. My own impression is that if a law were framed which would give to the successful party to the contest his reasonable costs and attorneys' fees, it would tend to discourage unjust and ill-founded contests and at the same time would give compensation to a reasonable amount to the man who succeeded in the contest. In reference to the establishment of precedents, it does not seem to me that the passage of this bill will establish any precedent which will bind this House. My opinion of the prudence, the sagacity, and the wisdom of this body is not so slight that I think an act of justice on its part will ever be a precedent for an act of injustice, or that the passage of a wise and prudent measure will ever be a precedent for the passage of a foolish and ill-advised measure.

Now, the facts in this case are these: The gentleman from Virginia, the claimant, Mr. SWANSON, was duly elected to the Fifty-fifth Congress and received his certificate and acted as a member.

Mr. LACEY. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. BOUTELL of Illinois. Certainly.

Mr. LACEY. Did the House adjudicate that question?

Mr. BOUTELL of Illinois. I am coming to that. A contest was brought for the seat. Now, Mr. Chairman, I risked my life in listening to the trial of this case in an underground chamber in one of the labyrinthian corridors beneath the Dome of this Capitol. I went through the record, which filled three voluminous books. I know the amount of testimony that was taken in the case. I have examined carefully all the items in this bill of expense. Something should be said in reference to the character of this district and the nature of the contest.

The district which the gentleman from Virginia represents includes seven rural and mountainous counties in southern central Virginia, the largest town being that of Danville, with a population not exceeding thirty or forty thousand inhabitants. Testimony in this case was taken in a large number of precincts, necessitating the employment of counsel at various points, and the witnesses in all cases were brought from a long distance.

Now, the items in this account are as follows: The entire account of his expenses and costs were filed with the Committee on Elections and certified by them to the Appropriation Committee, and amounted to $3,769.59. Of this amount $2,523 was for attorneys' fees, and the balance, $1,236.50, was the ordinary cost and expenses of witnesses, in accordance with section 128 of the Revised Statutes.

Now, I submit to the consideration of the House that the taking of testimony and the employment of counsel, that if the same number of counsel that was employed in this case was employed in the city of New York, in the city of Boston, or in the city of Chicago, or in any other of our large cities, it would have cost five or six times the amount of this claim. In reference to attorneys' fees—the $2,533—you can easily see how that could be made up, and in no case is an attorney's fee included in this statement to a larger amount than at the rate of $10 per day.

Mr. LACEY. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. BOUTELL of Illinois. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. LACEY. Would it not follow, if this had been a Chicago contest, that we should have to allow $12,000 for attorneys' fees?

Mr. BOUTELL of Illinois. If it was necessary and had been expended in the contested case. If it had been $12,000 in Chicago, which is not likely, it would have been double or treble that in the city of New York. I refer to this amount to show that the committee investigated this case carefully, and did not approve simply such attorneys' fees as might have been presented, but attorneys' fees in no case in excess of the rate of $10 a day for the taking of testimony; and of course it would only be in a rural district of that kind that attorneys could be employed at that rate to do this work.

Mr. GRAFF. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. BOUTELL of Illinois. Yes, sir.

Mr. GRAFF. Did the subcommittee of which the gentleman is a member reject any of the items which Mr. SWANSON had submitted in his account?

Mr. BOUTELL of Illinois. No.

Mr. GRAFF. The gentleman spoke of not taking into consideration any other services rendered than those necessary. He means that he took into consideration everything that Mr. SWANSON put into his bill and did not reduce it any.

Mr. BOUTELL of Illinois. Yes, the largest rate of charge being at the rate of $10 a day, and the record showing that the attorneys were present at all examinations.

Mr. GRAFF. How many attorneys did he have employed?

Mr. BOUTELL of Illinois. I should say nine or ten.

Mr. LACEY. How many days—what is the limit?

Mr. BOUTELL of Illinois. I think the limit was ninety days, and the testimony was taken in a large number of precincts. So I submit, Mr. Chairman, that the amount in this case is a reasonable amount, such an amount, surely, as this House would allow if there were no law like the statute of 1879. Of course all that can be said in reference to that law is that in doing what we think is substantial justice and equity in this House we enact special laws every week of our session; every pension bill that we pass in the House is in opposition to the statute law; every bill in reference to enabling aliens to make good title to land in this District is in opposition to the general statute law; and so it is in a number of other instances.

Mr. GRAFF. Will the gentleman mention any particular claims which this bill has for preference over any of the claims where the amount exceeds $2,000; is there anything about this case which peculiarly presents itself in a favorable light for special exception? If there is, I would like to have it.

Mr. BOUTELL of Illinois. I will say that the subcommittee simply had this bill under consideration, and the subcommittee simply passed upon this bill without taking thought of other bills referred to in the discussion which has taken place in this House. We had nothing else to base our opinion upon except the justice and equity of this special claim which I am arguing to the House. I submit that every measure of this kind or any other kind that comes before the House should stand solely upon its own merits.

Reference was made by the gentleman from Indiana to other bills or claims of similar nature pending before the Committee on Claims relating to cases which were before the Committee on Elections No. 3.

Now, there seemed to be some reason in referring to the fact that those claims were pending before the Committee on Claims. I drew the inference from the gentleman's remarks and also from the question of the gentleman from Illinois that there was some special favoritism in this case. I remember being present at the meeting of the Committee on Claims when the other bills were brought up; and if I recollect rightly, they were all introduced after this case had been reported; and if I remember correctly, they were all introduced by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER], who now opposes this bill; and if my memory is not at fault, they have all been referred to a subcommittee of the Committee on Claims, which subcommittee, I dare say, has had them under careful consideration. So far as I know or recollect, there were no papers or statements filed with those bills, and I submit that the considerations connected with those bills should have no weight in determining the justice of this special case.

The gentleman from Indiana referred also to the fact that the claimant's attitude in this case was not as strong as it would have been if he had been allowed to retain his seat by a vote of the House, or had allowed the contestant to obtain a vote on his case. I remember, as of course the gentleman from Indiana does, that we had this case ready for a hearing; we had all our books and records and statutes piled up on our desks one morning, ready to proceed with the case, when it was continued, so far as I know, solely at the request of the contestant. On two other occasions the case was called up, and the House refused to consider it, the last time being toward the closing weeks of the last session.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. BOUTELL of Illinois. Certainly.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Did not the gentleman vote against the consideration of this case?

Mr. BOUTELL of Illinois. I did not. I voted for the consideration.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I desire to make a suggestion about the continuance to which the gentleman has referred. The case was continued by a mutual agreement between myself, representing the contestant, and my colleague from Indiana [Mr. MIERS], representing the contestee. The continuance was by mutual agreement, upon an understanding between both the parties to the case.

Mr. BOUTELL of Illinois. In reference to that I wish to say that all I heard about the case was from the contestant himself, who came to me and said he would prefer not to have the case heard until after the primary elections in his district; and it was continued, as the gentleman states.

These, Mr. Chairman, are the facts of this case, and the law as I have endeavored to state it briefly. I submit in conclusion that this is a case which should stand solely upon its merits. If we are ever to exercise our discretion under that statute and allow a reasonable sum to the successful party in a contested-election case, this certainly is a case where we would be justified in doing so, because all these expenses are on such a reasonable basis, considering the amount of work that was done, the length of the record, and the character of the contest.

Mr. LACEY. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. BOUTELL of Illinois. Certainly.

Mr. LACEY. I understood the gentleman to speak just now of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] as being a successful contestant.

Mr. BOUTELL of Illinois. Yes, sir.

Mr. LACEY. Does the gentleman think that principle applies where the success results simply from a failure to have the case considered in the House? Here is a case where there was no judgment, no determination, by the House. The report of the committee was in favor of the other man. They determined that Mr. SWANSON was not elected. If Mr. SWANSON or his friends succeeded in preventing the consideration of the question by the House, ought we not rather to adopt the presumption that the committee who examined the case was right, instead of assuming that because the case failed ever to have a hearing the contestee was entitled to the seat?

Mr. BOUTELL of Illinois. I would be very glad to rest on the presumption that the judgment of the committee was correct, for the majority of the committee decided in favor of Mr. SWANSON.

Mr. POWERS. Was this a unanimous report from the committee?

Mr. BOUTELL of Illinois. This report from the Committee on Claims?

Mr. POWERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. BOUTELL of Illinois. No, it is not unanimous; but there is no minority report. The chairman of the committee has spoken in opposition to this measure.

Mr. POWERS. A majority report has been filed in favor of the bill?

Mr. BOUTELL of Illinois. That is the only report before the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The report of the committee was in favor of the contestant. A majority of the members filed dissenting views. The parliamentary situation was very anomalous. The Speaker of the House recognized the report made by four members of the committee as the report of the committee, because it was brought in as such. Five members of the committee filed, as I have said, dissenting views; but the record shows that the report was in favor of the contestant, although only a minority made it.

Mr. BOUTELL of Illinois. The question what was the report and what were the views of the minority was never decided. A majority of the committee were in favor of the contestee. So, Mr. Chairman, I feel that this case, in so far as the law and the facts are concerned, has been submitted to the House. It is for the House to determine whether it will consider this case, along with other cases pending of a similar character, in accordance with general principles or whether it will consider this individual case. If the House is ever to exercise its own discretion and allow reasonable costs over and above the $2,000 fixed by statute, I submit that such amount should be allowed in this case.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON].

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. Chairman, in the last House my seat was contested; and in defending my right to the seat against that contest I spent in money $3,759.69. The committee, by a majority of 5 to 4, after examining the case, determined the contest in my favor. As the gentleman from Indiana has correctly said, the case was never brought into the House. At that time we agreed to a continuance, at the request of Mr. Brown, General Walker being ill at that time.

When the question of paying contestants came before the House an effort was made to have the expenses incurred by all these gentlemen exceeding $2,000 included in the appropriation bill. A point of order being raised, the proposition was ruled out. I made no effort, I desired to make no effort, to have the provision put on in the Senate, because I always thought that an indirect and improper way to endeavor to use any influence that one might have in the Senate to coerce the House.

Since I have been a member here, my seat having been twice contested and each time my right to it sustained, I have always thought that to compel me to pay a large sum of money out of my own pocket to maintain my right to a seat to which I was entitled was an unreasonable and unjust burden. I knew no way to get this claim allowed except by presenting it to the Committee on Claims. It has been developed here to-day that there are other gentlemen situated precisely as I am—for instance, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. JOY], the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STEELE], and others. I presented this claim simply that this question might be determined as a precedent. I do not desire one dime allotted to me if the same allowance is refused to other gentlemen in the same situation with myself and having equally just claims.

I should be glad to have the law established as to whether it shall be confined to the $2,000 or not. It has been said that I presented this claim on account of personal popularity—on account of being personally liked in this House. I would scorn to accept a cent from this House, if there was one vote against it, if it was thought to be presented from any such motive or consideration as that.

Since it has been developed that there are some gentlemen who are situated precisely as I am, and since there seems to be an impression that I am trying to isolate myself from them, I desire to state here and now that if this bill should be passed by a large majority, I would not accept the money. I ask to have this bill withdrawn. If the House wants to confine payment in these cases to $2,000, I will submit to it. If the House thinks it is proper to allow the amount actually expended in other cases, I want what I expended, too. Now, I do not desire a dollar, a dime, or a cent, except what this House will give to other members similarly situated. Since some opposition has developed and some gentlemen seem to think I am trying to get what I am not willing to have other members get, I do not wish to press this claim, and I would not have it if five members of the House should vote against it.

I want to say here, in justice to myself, that in a Democratic House with over 125 majority the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. Settle], who lives in the district adjoining mine, had a contest precisely like mine. His seat was contested. That case was never considered. The question of consideration was raised every time against it, and this House, Democratic by over 100 majority, allowed the gentleman from North Carolina, whose district adjoins mine, $2,500 in excess of the $2,000. I thought if, under similar conditions, with a less voluminous record than mine, the House thought that justice should be meted out to him, and it was done by a Democratic House, that I could come here and ask to have my actual expenses paid back to me also. I voted for the gentleman's claim because I thought it was right and honest. Since these gentlemen think I am trying to get what other members are not entitled to, I now ask to have this claim withdrawn, and I would not accept a dime or a nickel of it if any of the members of the House thought I was not entitled to it. [Applause.]

Mr. OTEY. Mr. Chairman, if it is in order, having introduced this bill, I desire to withdraw the bill for the relief of CLAUDE A. SWANSON.

The CHAIRMAN. A motion to lay the bill aside with the recommendation that it lie upon the table would be in order.

Mr. OTEY. Mr. Chairman, I make that motion.

Mr. GRAFF. Pending that, if the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. OTEY] will permit a remark, I should like the privilege of saying——

Mr. OTEY. All right; I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GRAFF. I should like to say to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] that if I said anything that anybody——

The CHAIRMAN. A motion is pending before the House which is not debatable.

Mr. HAY. Regular order!

The CHAIRMAN. Those in favor of the motion——

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman, I should like to know what the motion is.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion before the House is that the bill be laid aside with a recommendation that it lie upon the table.

Mr. POWERS. The effect of that is to defeat the bill, as I understand it.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the bill was ordered to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it lie on the table.

J. A. WARE.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 4686) for the relief of J. A. Ware.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to J. A. Ware the sum of $3,718.52, the same to be in full for all claims of said Ware for extra expenditures incurred by him in the construction of the Mound City National Cemetery roadway, under his contract with the Quartermaster's Department, dated October 14, 1896, said amount being found equitably due said Ware by the Quartermaster-General United States Army, as set forth in Senate Document No. 192, Fifty-fifth Congress, second session; and the amount necessary to make said payment is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. GRAFF. Mr. Chairman, I call for the reading of the report. In connection with that I desire to say that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ROBB] reported the claim and if, after the reading of the report, he desires to say anything, I yield to him.

Mr. ROBB. I do not desire to make any statement further than is contained in the report, and will simply ask for the reading of the report and call the attention of members of the House to that. The passage of the bill is recommended by the Quartermaster-General.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the report in the time of the gentleman from Missouri.

The report (by Mr. ROBB) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4686) for the relief of J. A. Ware, beg leave to report:

Your committee have inquired into the facts relating to said bill and find that the amount asked for in the same, $3,718.52, is justly due said claimant from the Government for and on account of extra expenditures incurred by him in the construction of the Mound City National Cemetery road under his contract with the Quartermaster's Department dated October 14, 1896.

Said extra work and extra expenditures were occasioned by a flood in the Mississippi River occurring after the grading was practically completed.

This claim was submitted to the Secretary of War, and examined and reported upon by Maj. C. F. Humphrey, deputy quartermaster-general in charge of the work, and by Gen. M. I. Ludington, the Quartermaster-General of the Army, both of whom found that said contractor, J. A. Ware, had an equitable claim for the amount asked for in the bill, to wit, $3,718.52, and on the 11th of March, 1898, the Secretary of War, in a communication addressed to Hon. Garret A. Hobart, Vice-President of the United States, commended the same to the favorable consideration of Congress. All of which is set forth in Senate Document No. 192, Fifty-fifth Congress, second session, which is hereto appended and made a part of this report.

Your committee therefore recommend that the bill do pass.

Mr. GRAFF. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. CANNON. Before that is done I hope the gentleman will have read the letter contained on the last part of page 3 and the beginning of page 4. That seems to go into the question of the equity of the claim.

Mr. GRAFF. I coincide with that request.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPOT QUARTERMASTER'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., March 4, 1898.

GENERAL: I have the honor to return herewith the papers in the matter of the claim of Mr. J. A. Ware in connection with the construction of the Mound City National Cemetery roadway, under his contract with this department dated October 14, 1896, referred to this office for report by indorsement of March 3, 1898, and respectfully submit report thereon as follows:

The road is about 1 mile in length, extending from the Cache River to Mound City National Cemetery. It is built in the alluvial bottom between the Ohio and Mississippi rivers, about 5 miles from Cairo. It is all embankment, from 8½ to 15 feet high, of the clayey "gumbo" soil of the bottom, with a surface of gravel of an average thickness of 10 inches.

Under the terms of the contract the work was to have been completed by March 2, 1897, but owing to unavoidable delays from frost and bad weather the time for its completion was extended to August 21, 1897.

In February, 1897, the grading of the road had been practically completed and 943 cubic yards of gravel had been furnished and placed on the road.

About March 1, 1897, a serious flood occurred in the Mississippi Valley, and by March 3, 1897, the water at Cairo was over the bottoms and continued to rise until on March 27, when it reached 53.73 feet above zero on the Cairo gauge, or within about 3 inches of the subgrade of the road. It then began to fall and continued to recede until April 26, at which time I caused a careful survey of the work to be made, with a view to determining the exact extent of the damages thereto by the flood.

By this survey it was ascertained that 8,300 cubic yards of earthwork and 440 cubic yards of gravel would be required to repair the damages resulting from the flood.

At this time the engineer of the department was also directed to keep a detailed account of the working force of men and teams engaged in making good these damages.

On May 5 the contractor commenced to remove the logs and débris that had collected on the slopes and to drain the borrow pits, so that earth could be procured to make good the slides and shrinkage of the embankments caused by the water, which had for many days almost submerged the entire road.

It was not until May 20 that the actual work of restoration could be commenced, as the embankments were so thoroughly saturated with water that slides were continually taking place and it was necessary to allow them to dry out before putting the new material in place.

In fact, even after replacing the earthwork in these slides the sliding and settling continued from time to time, rendering it necessary in some cases to replace the same material several times. Upon final completion of the work it was found that in consequence of these continued slides and settlement 12,925 cubic yards of earth and 555 cubic yards of gravel had actually been used in making good the damages to the work.

The following is an account of the work done and expense incurred by the contractor in making good the damages resulting from the flood, viz:

Hire of foreman, 2 months, at $100	$200.00
Hire of assistant foreman, 80 days, at $2.50	200.00
Hire of laborers, 333½ days, at $1.50	500.25
Hire of teams and drivers (double), 602 days, at $3	1,806.00
555 cubic yards of gravel, at 95 cents	527.25
Add 15 per cent for use of tools, etc., and maintenance of teams and men when necessarily idle on account of flood	485.02

The contractor had 25 double teams, with necessary men to take care of them, absolutely idle, in camp on the ground, during the period from about March 1 to May 20, during which time it was not possible to do any work.

He was obliged also to keep a general foreman or superintendent during that time.

The above items are based on the daily account kept by the engineer of the department charged with the supervision of the work and are very close—perhaps below actual cost.

I am of opinion, therefore, that the contractor's bill of $3,946.34, though $227.82 more than the foregoing in the aggregate, is not in excess of what may be justly claimed.

The work was done by the contractor in a most satisfactory manner and as expeditiously as the existing conditions would permit. For the delays in its execution he was in no way responsible.

With a full knowledge of all the facts and circumstances in the matter, I do not hesitate to recommend the favorable consideration of his claim to the amount of $3,946.34, as claimed.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

C. F. HUMPHREY,

Deputy Quartermaster-General, U. S. A., Depot Quartermaster.

THE QUARTERMASTER-GENERAL OF THE ARMY.

Mr. GRAFF. Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

WILLIAM CRAMP & SONS.

Mr. GRAFF. Mr. Chairman, the next bill on the Calendar which is in order is the bill (H. R. 1605) for the relief of the William Cramp & Sons Ship and Engine Building Company, of Philadelphia. The gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. BINGHAM, who introduced the bill, is, I understand, sick and unable to be here, and under the circumstances I ask that the bill might be passed over without prejudice.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that the bill, Calendar, No. 42, H. R. 1605, be passed without prejudice.

Mr. ROBB. I understand that under that order the bill will not be called up again to-day.

Mr. GRAFF. Oh, no. I simply desire that it shall not lose its place on account of being passed over to-day.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

JOSHUA BISHOP.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 2322) for the relief of Joshua Bishop.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted etc., That the claim of Joshua Bishop for alleged items of pay due and unpaid to him for services as a lieutenant-commander, United States Navy, between the dates of September 13, 1867, and March 9, 1871, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims. Jurisdiction is hereby conferred on said court to try said cause—the statute of limitations shall not apply thereto—and to render final judgment therein, subject to the right of appeal by either party.

Mr. GRAFF. Mr. Chairman, this bill provides that the claim of Joshua Bishop for pay alleged to be due and unpaid to him as a lieutenant-commander from February 19, 1868, to February 28, 1871, be referred to the Court of Claims. There is a favorable report by the Secretary of the Navy, Hilary A. Herbert, on March 10, 1896, addressed to the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs of the Senate, and also a favorable recommendation by the Secretary of the Navy, John D. Long, addressed to the same committee.

The only waiver affecting the legal right would be the waiver of the statute of limitations. I will therefore move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

[Mr. CANNON addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. GRAFF. I desire to say that I am not in possession of the facts as to why Mr. Bishop did not present his claim before, except that on the face of the report, which shows that he was urging his claim during the past ten years. My colleague on the committee [Mr. RIXEY] made the report. It is impossible for me to give personal examination to every claim presented before the committee, but I may say this: There has been no claim passed by the committee except after full discussion in the committee after the report of the subcommittee thereon.

Now, I want to say further. This is one of those claims where there is no danger of injustice. We have a statute of limitations because the Government might find difficulty in putting in evidence in an old claim, but in this case the evidence is a matter of record as to whether this man is entitled to that pay or not; it is a question of law and fact. The facts are just as much within the reach of the Government in this case as they are within the reach of the claimant. The statute of limitations are for a large class of claims which involve facts which are peculiarly within the reach of the claimant and are hard to obtain by the Government, and in those cases it would be very unadvisable to waive the statute of limitations. But in this case, I think, the reasons presented by the gentleman from Missouri tend to show that there are special equities in this case. I should like to hear from the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. RIXEY].

Mr. RIXEY. Mr. Chairman, the only connection I have with this case is that this bill was referred to a subcommittee of which I was a member; and after the subcommittee had considered the case, they gave the bill to me to make the report. I want to say that the statement made by the gentleman from Missouri was practically correct. I do not know where the court-martial was held; but the fact is, a court-martial was ordered for the trial of Lieutenant-Commander Bishop, and in consequence of the finding of that court-martial he was dismissed or dropped from the rolls of the Navy Department. Afterwards he was either reinstated or recommissioned. He always claimed that the court-martial proceedings were irregular and illegal and that he was improperly dropped from the rolls.

The fact is that he again entered the Navy in 1871 and that he never received any pay from 1868 to to 1871. The further fact appears that for many years he has been at the doors of Congress asking an opportunity to establish the justice of his claim before the Court of Claims. It does seem to me that it comes with poor grace from Congress to say, "We will bar your right to prove your claim before the Court of Claims by pleading the statute of limitations." This man would not be allowed to plead the statute of limitations against the Government; and why should the Government assert the statute of limitations against him when he is willing and anxious to pay the costs of the proceeding in order to vindicate his character as well as his claim to this compensation?

I have very little use anyway for the statute of limitations. I do not believe it ought ever to be pleaded in the case of a man who is willing to go to court and pay the expenses of the suit. This man was dismissed from the Navy by reason of court-martial proceedings, and here is a statement showing that he always claimed those proceedings to have been illegal. He now simply asks the privilege of being permitted to present his case to the Court of Claims. He will pay the expenses. He asks nothing from the Government unless he shows a legal right to this money. He simply asks that the Government waive the statute of limitations.

This gentleman was, after the finding of the court-martial and the action thereon, reinstated in the Navy. And the Navy Department and the Government have done everything they could to correct the injustice that was done him. Now, I take it that it is as little as Congress can do to permit this man to go to the Court of Claims, the statute of limitations being waived. He does not come here, as many others do, asking an appropriation from the Treasury. He is simply anxious to maintain his case before the court at his own expense; and I think it but justice that he should be permitted to do so.

One other point. The gentleman from Illinois draws upon his imagination when he says that these claims are fostered and followed by claim agents. So far as this case is concerned no agent, no attorney, has ever appeared before the Committee on Claims. The bill was introduced by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. SALMON]. At his request it was considered by the Committee on Claims. The committee was unanimous in believing that the relief ought to be granted, and therefore a favorable report has been made. I would be glad to hear a statement from the gentleman from New Jersey who introduced the bill.

Mr. SALMON. Mr. Chairman, I shall be pleased to give all the information I can to members of the House, and especially to my friend from Illinois, upon this case. Commander Bishop, as has been said, was court-martialed in 1868 and dismissed from the service. He was before that time an officer in the Navy of the United States. He had served valiantly as a young officer in the war of the rebellion; his service was commendable in a high degree.

I should like to say to my friend from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] that, through the instigation of the green-eyed monster that sometimes aids in these matters, this court-martial was brought about and he was dismissed from the service. It was not until 1871 that he was reinstated by an act of Congress, because under the law at this time an officer who was dismissed from the naval service could not be reinstated. He was reinstated by an act of Congress in 1871. He was put to duty, and from that time until about 1875 he was on the Pacific coast or on Pacific waters, so that when he returned to the East he found that his claim, which he had always insisted to be just, was barred by the statute of limitations. He has always insisted that his dismissal was illegal and wrong.

Now, from that day to the present time Commander Bishop has been trying to have himself placed in proper light before the world. He has now grown to be a man of years. He is in the evening of life. He is to-day lying at his home in Washington upon a sick bed, and what he desires is an opportunity to set himself right before the world and to reclaim that to which he is entitled, a clear and honest reputation, which he may leave to those who may follow him when he is gone. It is not so much the money; and this bill, which has been recommended, as the report here says, by several Congresses in the past, he asks now that it be passed by this Congress to give him an opportunity to go before the Court of Claims, the proper judicial tribunal, to decide upon the justice of his claim and to set him right.

I have here in my desk a great mass of evidence in this case. I have looked it over sufficiently to find these few principal points which I have stated, and I can say conscientiously to the members of this House that I believe this to be a just claim, and that when we permit Commander Bishop to go before the Court of Claims to set himself right we are only doing an act of justice to a fellow-man, what we would have others do to ourselves, and nothing more.

Mr. RIXEY. I should like to ask the gentleman whether this claim is being pushed by any claim agent?

Mr. SALMON. I want to say that it had escaped my mind, but I intended to mention the fact that there is no agent or attorney engaged in this matter. Commander Bishop is himself a man of intelligence, and, so far as I know, has prepared these matters and presented them time after time to Congress. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], who is familiar with this case, recalls the facts of it. It has come directly to the House without passing through the hands of any agent or attorney.

Mr. CANNON. Just a word. The members of the Committee of the Whole must necessarily follow the recommendations of the several committees touching the great mass of business, or on the fly, so to speak, disagree with the committee on any particular matter that may be considered. Ordinarily my practice is to follow the recommendation of a committee, because it is not in the power of any Representative to exhaust one-tenth of the business that comes before the House for consideration. Once in a while I read a report or a bill and come to a conclusion. Sometimes I am right. Most of the time I am right, I think, if I come to a conclusion. Sometimes I am wrong. From what the gentleman says, I think this is one of the times when I am wrong.

I came to the conclusion which I reached from what was not in the bill and what was not in the report. I would have almost staked ten to one that this was an effort by the wholesale to create a precedent, which, if successful, would set aside the construction of the law touching the pay of the whole Navy. That is what I inferred from what the bill indicated; and there is so much of that kind of thing that has come under my notice. If the report had set out what the gentleman states to be the fact, why, I, of course, would not have fallen into the error. This man claims that he was not properly convicted and that an injustice has been done him, and wants to go to the court to have that question tested. That being so, the case stands or falls by itself and does not constitute a precedent. With that explanation, so far as I am concerned, I have no objection to the passage of the bill.

Mr. GRAFF. I am free to say that the report in this case was not full enough to give the explanation which my colleague desired, and the point which the gentleman makes is well taken. It is difficult sometimes to set forth fully in a report all the information that comes before the committee. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

LEGAL REPRESENTATIVES OF D. L. HUSKEY, DECEASED.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 5969) for the relief of the devisees and legal representatives of D. L. Huskey, deceased.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $139.19 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay the devisees and legal representatives of D. L. Huskey, deceased, being the balance due D. L. Huskey, as shown by the records of the Post-Office Department, for services from July 1, 1861, to January 19, 1862, as contractor on route No. 10405, Missouri.

Mr. ROBB. Mr. Chairman, I made the report in that case, and I ask for the reading of it.

The report (by Mr. ROBB) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5969) for the relief of the devisees and legal representatives of D. L. Huskey, deceased, report that they have had the same under consideration and recommend that the same do pass.

Your committee report that the facts set forth in said bill are correct; that D. L. Huskey performed services as contractor on mail route No. 10405, Missouri, from July 1, 1861, to January 19, 1862, for which he was never paid; and that there is now due his legal representatives (the said D. L. Huskey being now deceased) for such services the sum of $139.19, as is fully shown by the records of the Post-Office Department.

In this connection your committee submits a letter from Hon. O. L. Spaulding, Acting Secretary of the Treasury, referring to a communication from the Auditor of the Post-Office Department relative to said claim, which is as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., February 14, 1898.

SIR: In reply to your letter requesting to be informed as to the status of the claim of D. L. Huskey, I have the honor to state that the Auditor for the Post-Office Department reports that "the records of this office show a balance of $139.19 due D. L. Huskey, late contractor on route No. 10405, Missouri, for service from July 1, 1861, to January 19, 1862. This claim was reported to the honorable Secretary of the Treasury January 6, 1883, for an appropriation, but no provision was made by Congress for its payment.

"The records of the Confederate States, now on file in this office, do not show that Mr. Huskey was paid for mail service under his contract with the United States."

The letter of F. R. Dearing is herewith returned.

Respectfully, yours,

O. L. SPAULDING, Acting Secretary.

Hon. EDWARD ROBB, M. C.,
House of Representatives.

From this it appears that the claim was reported to the honorable Secretary of the Treasury by the Post-Office Department for an appropriation January 6, 1883, but that no appropriation was made by Congress for its payment.

Your committee is fully satisfied that the claim is a just and valid one, and recommend that the bill appropriating the money to pay it, as amended, be passed.

Mr. ROBB. Mr. Chairman, I think the report shows the merits of this claim, and I do not think it is necessary for me to make any further statement. It is recommended by the Department. I suppose there will be no opposition to it, and I move, therefore, that it be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. HEPBURN. Where is this route in Missouri—between what towns?

Mr. ROBB. My understanding is that it is in Jefferson County, Mo.

Mr. HEPBURN. Between what points?

Mr. ROBB. I am not able to state that.

Mr. HEPBURN. In what portion of the State?

Mr. JOY. Jefferson County is the county next adjoining the city of St. Louis.

Mr. ROBB. It is a short distance below St. Louis.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

WILLIAM L. ORR.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 1454) for the relief of William L. Orr.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay out of the Treasury of the United States, from any money not otherwise appropriated, sufficient to satisfy the claim of William L. Orr for services rendered the Government as second assistant engineer in the United States Navy from September, 1863, until March, 1865.

Mr. BOUTELL of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, this bill provides for the payment of Mr. William L. Orr for services rendered by him in the Navy from the fall of 1863 to the spring of 1865. He was living at Alton, Ill., in 1863, and was appointed acting assistant engineer, and his commission mailed to him. The commission never reached him. He received notice of his appointment, and was ordered to repair to St. Louis and there report, which he did, and served there until the spring of 1865.

According to the evidence, the commission miscarried in some way, and went to the Gulf Squadron. In 1865 a new commission was issued to him, referring to the old commission, which was canceled. Through his failure to be able to present his commission, or the evidence of his appointment, he never received compensation for the services from 1863 to 1865, although the Secretary of the Navy says that the records show that the service was rendered.

Mr. LOUD. I should like to ask the gentleman what proof there is that this officer was not paid?

Mr. BOUTELL of Illinois. The letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, which says that there has been no subsequent action on the claim and that it is still unpaid.

Mr. LOUD. Is that all the Secretary of the Treasury says? I should like to hear the whole report. I think we had better have the whole report read, Mr. Chairman. I can not understand how a man could serve as an officer for two or three years without getting any pay.

The report (by Mr. BOUTELL of Illinois) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1454) for the relief of William L. Orr, late an acting second assistant engineer in the United States Navy, have had the same under consideration, and after a thorough investigation of the case report the bill back with the recommendation that it do pass.

The facts in this case clearly show that William L. Orr has a just and equitable claim against the Government for services rendered as acting second assistant engineer in the United States Navy from September 4, 1863, to March 21, 1865, at which time a new commission was issued to him in place of the commission that had been issued September 4, 1863, and miscarried.

The documentary evidence that is included in this report shows that William L. Orr, while at Alton, Ill., was notified that he had been commissioned as acting second assistant engineer in the Navy, and that said commission had been sent to St. Louis, Mo., and he was ordered to report for duty to Chief Engineer King, at St. Louis.

Through some oversight or clerical error Orr's commission, instead of being sent to St. Louis, was forwarded to the Gulf Squadron at New Orleans, and notwithstanding the great amount of correspondence passing between Orr and the Navy Department, the commission was never found.

In obedience to the orders of the Navy Department, Orr reported to Chief Engineer King at St. Louis, Mo., and served continuously and faithfully under the officer's orders in the capacity of acting second assistant engineer, and as such was employed in the construction of gunboats and placing of machinery therein till March 21, 1865. During all this time Orr's pay was withheld, and he was obliged to borrow money for the support of his family at home.

On March 21, 1865, a new commission was issued to Orr, revoking the former commission that had miscarried. The terms of the new commission explicitly refer to the former commission, and acknowledge the fact that such a commission had theretofore been issued.

The proof shows that Orr never received a cent of pay from the Government from September 4, 1863, to March 21, 1865.

Orr has repeatedly sought relief at the hands of the Government for the pay withheld, but has failed to secure it. During the service mentioned he was in constant communication with the Navy Department, and subsequently he endeavored to secure said withheld pay at the hands of the accounting officers of the Treasury Department; but in each instance his claim was disallowed, on the ground that no evidence had been furnished showing the authority under which he performed the service.

In proof of his claim that the service was actually rendered, Orr submits and appends hereto—

(1) A reference to the Official Navy Register of the United States, of January, 1864, page 176, from which it appears that W. L. Orr (the claimant) was appointed acting second assistant engineer, United States Navy, September 4, 1863, and reported for duty under Chief Engineer J. W. King, United States Navy, at St. Louis, Mo., to whom he (Orr) turned over his orders.

(2) Letter from the Assistant Secretary of the Navy showing his appointment and service.

(3) Orr's own statement as to the fact of his service.

(4) Copy of second commission, dated March 21, 1865, in which first commission is specifically referred to.

(5) Letter from the Auditor for the Navy Department to the Comptroller of the Treasury showing that the claim is still unpaid.

The relief claimed to be justly due William L. Orr is stated as follows:

Pay of his grade from September 4, 1863, to March 21, 1865, eighteen months and twenty-one days, at $1,000 per annum, $1,558.31.

A similar bill has been favorably reported in previous Congresses by committees of the Senate and House.

Mr. GRAFF. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, the matter which the Clerk read did not include all of the documents which are contained in the report.

Mr. GRAFF. If the gentleman from California will yield——

Mr. LOUD. There was a portion of the report which I did not see.

Mr. GRAFF. The gentleman from California asked a little while ago whether this claimant had been paid. Outside of the facts shown by the correspondence contained in the report, if the gentleman will refer to the bill he will see that in the way the bill reads it would not procure any payment for him if it were true that he had been paid, because it leaves the adjudication of the matter and the amount to the Department. It says:

That the Secretary of the Treasuay be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay out of the Treasury of the United States, from any money not otherwise appropriated, sufficient to satisfy the claim of William L. Orr for services rendered the Government as second assistant engineer in the United States Navy from September, 1863, until March, 1865.

Mr. LOUD. Well, I want to suggest to the gentleman that the bill, according to its language, appropriates a sufficient amount of money to satisfy the claim. The bill is a little awkwardly worded. Now, if this man served during this time, there is no reason in the world why he should not have his pay. It seems to me the language of the bill would give it to him whether he served or not. It appropriates a sufficient amount to satisfy his claim.

Mr. GRAFF. Is not the evidence of his service contained in the report?

Mr. LOUD. Well, I will say to the gentleman that there seems to be evidence that he served, according to the statement of the Assistant Secretary of the Navy; but I can not understand how the Secretary of the Navy can certify that a man served as an officer in the Navy and still be unable to certify that fact to the Auditor. If he can certify that to the Auditor, then this man will get his pay without coming to Congress. There is no doubt about that.

The fact is he can not furnish proof to the Assistant Secretary that he rendered the service. It is very emphatically stated in this report that this man did serve as such officer. The gentleman well knows if the records of the Department show that he did serve, then he has a claim that the Department would allow. But your bill is written in such language that you would give this claimant the amount of his claim.

Mr. GRAFF. I have no objection to adding an amendment to the bill "upon the proof of his having rendered the service during that time and that that was unpaid."

Mr. LOUD. I think the gentleman ought to amend his bill in that particular.

Mr. GRAFF. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BOUTELL] is really in charge of this matter.

Mr. LOUD. I think the reading of the bill is a little vague in that matter.

Mr. BOUTELL of Illinois. I do not know but what the bill is a little inartistically drawn upon its face, but it is a bill that has been reported to several Congresses, it has passed the House and the Senate, and it is one of those cases which might occur in a four-years war, where a man rendered the service and lost the commission. It is fully shown in the affidavits that this service was rendered; but I am perfectly willing to amend the bill.

Mr. LOUD. I will submit to the gentleman himself if he does not think that the bill ought to be drawn in such a shape as to say that this man shall be paid for such service if it be proved that he rendered such service, but not to pay the claim?

Mr. GRAFF. I suggest to the gentleman from Illinois that an amendment be offered after the word "sixty-five," "upon proper proof being filed before the Secretary of the Treasury of the claimant having rendered such service, and the same not having been paid." That certainly would cover the objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman offer that amendment?

Mr. GRAFF. I do not like to undertake to do that. I prefer that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BOUTELL] offer it.

Mr. BOUTELL of Illinois. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman from Illinois, that the bill might be changed, perhaps, to meet the views of the gentleman from California; but such an amendment as that would simply throw this poor man out where he has been for the last thirty years. His commission miscarried, and he could not produce it.

Mr. LOUD. It is hardly possible that a man should serve two or three years without any pay.

Mr. BOUTELL of Illinois. It was only about thirteen months.

Mr. LOUD. It was to March 16, 1865, and that is more than two years.

Mr. BOUTELL of Illinois. Then he got his commission, which referred to the old commission, and continued his service to December, 1865.

Mr. LOUD. It is hardly possible that a man could have served that long in the Army without pay. I submit to you, Mr. Chairman, or any fair-minded man, that he could not have served as assistant engineer in the Army for two years and seven months without receiving any pay.

Mr. BOUTELL of Illinois. It was not as long as that. It was from December, 1863, to March, 1865, a year and six months.

Mr. LOUD. I will subtract that month and make it two years and six months.

Mr. BOUTELL of Illinois. It was a year and six months.

Mr. LOUD. A man could not live that long without pay. He could not live six months.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I think if the members will read on page 3 of the report, they will find an explanation of this case. It is apparent to me that this man received notice of appointment, but no commission was ever issued and no duties were performed; but he waited two years at home at St. Louis for the commission to be sent to him. The Auditor's statement, on the fourth page, is:

There is no evidence on the files of this office that the claimant performed the duties of an acting assistant engineer at any time during the period for which he claims the pay, or that he ever received an appointment as an acting assistant engineer prior to March 21, 1865.

It is apparent to me that he received notice that he would be appointed, but that he never actually had the appointment; that he never actually had a commission; that he never actually performed the duty, and that he never was commissioned until March, 1865.

That is the inference that I draw from his own statement made here subsequently before the committee and made part of this report—that he waited at St. Louis until March 21, 1865, when he did receive a commission. He simply received notice in September that he was to be appointed, but never was appointed.

Mr. BOUTELL of Illinois. If the gentleman from Connecticut will read the report of the Assistant Secretary of the Navy, on the bottom of page 2 of the report, he will see that that is not so. The gentleman and I could certify that there was no evidence of certain things in our office. The letter from Mr. Brown, the Auditor, says there is no evidence on the files of this office. Of course there is none, but the Secretary of the Navy, on page 2, says that he was appointed and reported for duty, and that he served.

Mr. HILL. Yes, but his own statement, over his own signature, does not agree with that.

Mr. BOUTELL of Illinois. I think it does.

Mr. HILL. This report has not been read to the House, but his own letter says:

Was retained in St. Louis from October 1, 1863, until December, 1864, on waiting orders and performing special duties under instructions of Chief Engineer King, United States Navy, superintending construction of machinery on gunboat Ozark, etc.

He further says:

Chief Engineer King wrote several letters to the Department urging that my commission be forwarded with orders; that I was rendering special service and waiting orders. One reply stated that my commission had been forwarded to Admiral D. D. Porter, and would receive orders from him where to report. Nothing further was heard from it until March, 1865; I received a duplicate commission dated March 21, 1865, ordering me to report to Mound City naval station.

I can draw but one conclusion from the gentleman's own statement, and that is that he received notice from the Navy Department that he was to be appointed an assistant engineer, but he never was appointed until March, 1865, and that he never performed the duties of acting assistant engineer, as the Auditor of the Department reports. The Auditor says:

There is no evidence on the files of this office that the claimant performed the duties of an acting assistant engineer at any time during the period for which he claims the pay, or that he ever received an appointment as an acting assistant engineer prior to March 21, 1865.

Mr. BOUTELL of Illinois. Will the gentleman look at the letter of Secretary Welles, in which he refers to his former appointment in 1863?

Mr. HILL. Yes, I understand; I understand that a great many mistakes occurred at that time, but I have no doubt that he was notified that he was to be appointed, and I have no doubt that he was not appointed until March, 1865, and there is no record in the Navy Department of any duties that he ever performed up to that time.

Mr. BOUTELL of Illinois. Well, the gentleman has a perspicacity unequaled by any other member of the House if he can draw such inferences from a fair, candid reading of these letters.

Mr. HILL. I take it from his own statement.

Mr. BOUTELL of Illinois. The Assistant Secretary of the Navy says he was appointed and ordered for duty on the Mississippi Squadron. The letter of Mr. Welles, Secretary of the Navy, states that that appointment was canceled. The commission was lost. The affidavit shows the performance of service and also the record in the Navy Department. The Auditor naturally would not have any such records in his Department.

Mr. BROSIUS. What is the amount of the claim here?

Mr. BOUTELL of Illinois. About $1,500.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, I want to state one thing further. I was in receipt a few days ago of a letter which is simply a sample of a great many that I have received since I have been in Congress. A B served as second lieutenant of a regiment and was promoted ultimately to captain.

He was off somewhere, he claims, upon active service, and did not receive that commission for three months and was not able to get it for three months after that time. Now, he comes and wants me to introduce a bill in Congress to pay him for that three months. I will venture to assert that there are many thousand cases of that kind where men want pay between the date of their appointment and the date of their commission.

Now, then, let me say in all candor to the gentleman that if this commission was ever executed, there is a record of it. The Assistant Secretary of the Navy says:

I have the honor to inform you that the records in this Department show that William L. Orr was appointed acting assistant engineer in the Navy September 4, 1863.

Are not the records accessible to the Auditor? I leave it to the gentleman himself if the Assistant Secretary of the Navy can find these facts upon the record why is it they are not accessible to the Auditor so that the claim can be audited? Of course, the record does not show it, and what the Assistant Secretary certifies to the records do not show.

Mr. BROSIUS. I would like to ask the gentleman, as this is a very stale claim, whether it has ever been before Congress and received consideration of either House?

Mr. BOUTELL of Illinois. I will say that this claim was first introduced by Hon. William R. Morrison, who knew the man personally. It has been favorably reported by several committees in both the House and the Senate, and, if I mistake not, has passed the Senate, and, I think, has passed the House. The bill was introduced once by my predecessor, Mr. Cook, and, I think, was favorably reported by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MINOR].

The bill was introduced in the Fifty-fifth Congress by Mr. Cook before his death, and I found the bill among his papers. I know the old man myself personally, and I know him to be a worthy and noble man, a man of good standing in the community. The bill was unanimously reported by the Committee on Claims at the last session, and, I think, by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MINOR]. The bill has received most careful consideration of our committee. We have written the Navy Department for all the facts, and there seems to be no dispute at all in the case.

The subcommittee and the Committee on Claims were unanimously in favor of reporting the bill. If there is any way in which, by the red tape of the Department, information can be in one branch of it that can not be had by another, and thereby deprive a man of what he is honestly entitled to, it seems to me that it is a matter for us to rectify here.

Mr. BROSIUS. Mr. Chairman, I think it is a great misfortune that Congress ever fell into the habit of considering claims of this character. They constitute a judicial rather than a legislative matter. But a great many of these very stale claims have been hanging on for a number of years. I happen to have in my hand a letter received a few days ago, which affords an illustration of the character of a great many of these claims which trouble Congress.

John Smith (and I call him John Smith because that is not his name) was collector of the port of Philadelphia in 1812. It is said that he advanced to the Government some money that was never repaid. It is also said that the matter was brought to the attention of Congress during the administration of Mr. Buchanan, and that Congress passed upon it favorably—whatever that may mean—but that since that time his heirs and representatives have heard nothing of it, and there is a desire now that Congress should take hold of this matter after the lapse of almost a hundred years. I do not know what the proof would show or what presumptions might arise from such proofs.

But I confess, recurring now to the present case, that when a man, after a lapse of thirty-five years, alleges that he has served the Government of the United States in the military branch of the service for that length of time and received no compensation—has received none for thirty-five years—there is established, I will not say an indisputable presumption, but certainly a very strong presumption, that there is something wrong about it.

Mr. BOUTELL of Illinois. I submit that the evidence here shows that the man has been trying for thirty-five years in every possible way to get this money. He has not slumbered on the claim.

Mr. BROSIUS. Well, then, does not the presumption arise—let me ask my friend—from that very fact does not the presumption arise that the matter has been considered and tested and found in some respect wanting?

Mr. BOUTELL of Illinois. If it did I should have reported unfavorably on the bill. I have no sympathy with any of these old claims. I have no sympathy with any claimant, I do not care who he is, that can not submit a good case from the record.

Mr. BROSIUS. I know that.

Mr. BOUTELL of Illinois. And the subcommittee to which I belong has absolutely refused to report any claim where evidence can not be furnished by the Department or where the Department has reported adversely.

Mr. NEVILLE. May I be allowed a suggestion?

Mr. BOUTELL of Illinois. Certainly.

Mr. NEVILLE. One of the objections raised to this bill was the proposition that this gentleman lived at St. Louis and made that his home after the proposed appointment, and that he probably never performed the service for which claim is made. I simply want to suggest that a large portion of the Mississippi Squadron was built at St. Louis——

Mr. BOUTELL of Illinois. That statement about this gentleman living at St. Louis was altogether incorrect. He lived at Albion.

Mr. NEVILLE. So I understand. He was notified to appear at St. Louis and did so.

Mr. BOUTELL of Illinois. And aided in the construction of these vessels.

Mr. Chairman, I move that the report be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

HATTIE A. PHILLIPS.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 2098) for the relief of Hattie A. Phillips.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay to Hattie A. Phillips, widow of John Phillips, deceased, the sum of $5,000, as full compensation for the services rendered by the said

John Phillips in bearing dispatches from the commanding officer at Fort Phil Kearney to Fort Laramie from December 21 to December 28, 1866, after the massacre of the United States soldiers under Brevet Lieutenant-Colonel Fetterman by the Sioux Indians, and by whose services the garrison at Fort Phil Kearney, then surrounded by said Sioux Indians, was rescued and saved from annihilation, and as full payment of all claims against the United States for loss and destruction of property belonging to said John Phillips by Indians.

Mr. FITZGERALD of New York. Was there not an amendment adopted by the committee to this bill?

Mr. GRAFF. After the bill was considered in the committee the question was raised whether interest should be allowed upon the judgment of the Court of Claims or whether the bill should recommend the payment of a specific amount. An estimate was made of the interest, and it was ascertained that, including the interest, the amount would be the same as the sum named in the bill; there would be no difference.

Mr. LOUD. The gentleman assumes that there was a judgment in the Court of Claims.

Mr. GRAFF. I do not assume it; I know it.

Mr. LOUD. Why was not that judgment paid?

Mr. GRAFF. The reason it was not paid was because it was ascertained that this John Phillips was not naturalized and, being foreign born, not a citizen.

The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] introduced the bill and is very familiar with the facts. He can give them more fully than I can, although the bill was discussed for an entire meeting of the committee and all the facts gone over.

After the claimant had recovered this judgment for $2,210, it was found that he was not a naturalized citizen, and that is the reason an appropriation was not reported by the Appropriations Committee to pay the claim.

Mr. LOUD. Why?

Mr. GRAFF. Because, as I understand, he would not have any standing in the Court of Claims.

Mr. LOUD. Why, then, did the Court of Claims entertain the suit and render a judgment if he had no standing in the court because of being an alien? Is it not a fact that what you call a judgment was simply a finding? Many members of Congress mix up the two.

Mr. GRAFF. I understand that it was a judgment, for the reason that it has been the practice of the House for many years, when a judgment was certified to it from the Court of Claims, to send that judgment to the Committee on Appropriations to be inserted in the general deficiency appropriation bill; but when the Court of Claims simply make findings of fact, they are certified back to the Committee on Claims, or whatever committee originally had the bill, and those findings of fact are simply advisory upon the committee, and they must report a bill, which must pass both Houses of Congress, treating it as an original matter; the effect of the findings of the Court of Claims being simply like any other thing which might operate to convince the committee.

Mr. LOUD. I will ask the gentleman what was the judgment?

Mr. GRAFF. The judgment was for $2,210.

Mr. LOUD. Has not the gentleman a copy of the judgment in his report?

Mr. GRAFF. No; I have not.

Mr. LOUD. Is not that one of the important factors in the case—the most important evidence there is?

Mr. GRAFF. Yes; but we are not supposed to put in all the evidence presented to the committee.

Mr. LOUD. Not the evidence, but the judgment of the court upon which you base this claim.

Mr. GRAFF. We are supposed to exercise some judgment ourselves in making the report of our conclusions to the House.

Mr. LOUD. Would you not assume that a copy of the judgment, which is not very long, would be the most important evidence that could be submitted in this case?

Mr. GRAFF. Well, without stopping to debate the question of the propriety of having it put into the report, it is sufficient to say that this claim has been reported for the last fifteen years, by committees of the House and Senate, and they have not heretofore put the judgment in the report. But I will say this, that when the matter came before the committee we discussed the nature of the claim and how it arose, and that brought up the fact that this man, John Phillips, by an act of heroism on his part, in traveling a long distance through a desolate, hostile country, in which a strong body of Indians were at war with the whites, had finally relieved and brought reenforcements, at great hardship and risk to himself, to a garrison surrounded at Fort Phil Kearney, and thus saved the garrison from certain massacre.

Afterwards these Indians bore a grudge against this man John Phillips for years, on account of his having delivered these people from them. The result was that they constantly harassed his cattle and committed depredations upon his property. Phillips was conducting a stock farm in that locality for years afterwards, and this claim grew out of that. It appeared that his having done this great service in the interest of humanity and in the interest of that surrounded garrison was the cause of these depredations being committed upon him by these Indians.

Mr. LOUD. Well, I suppose that is an assumption, at the best, after all these years, is it not?

Mr. GRAFF. Not at all. It is not an assumption.

Mr. LOUD. I should like to get at the facts about this judgment. I should like to ask the gentleman if he has ever seen it?

Mr. GRAFF. A question came up in regard to the date of the judgment, and I had a conversation with the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], because the date of the judgment was pertinent as to whether we should make an appropriation in addition to the actual amount of the judgment, and the committee hesitated to do that. That is, they hesitated to make any appropriation on account of the man's heroism, but we thought that since the man had secured this judgment in his favor, and since he had been deprived of it since that time, and because he received these injuries on account of his having served the people out there, that he ought either to have an additional amount or to have interest from the time at which the judgment was rendered. So I had the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] procure the exact date of the judgment, and I now yield to the gentleman from Wyoming for the purpose of making any statement he may desire to make.

Mr. MONDELL. I will say in regard to this case, Mr. Chairman, that the judgment was reported in House Executive Document No. 125, pages 82 and 83, Forty-ninth Congress, first session. Subsequent to the filing of the judgment in this case it transpired that John Phillips, a Portuguese, who had been an inhabitant of the Northwest for many years, had never taken out naturalization papers, and not being a citizen of the United States, the judgment was annulled.

Mr. LOUD. You say Congress could not pay the judgment?

Mr. MONDELL. I say that the judgment of the Court of Claims, under the law, was not properly rendered.

Mr. LOUD. Who determined that?

Mr. MONDELL. Well, I am not sure. I am not satisfied how that came about. The fact is that the Court of Claims, as I have already stated, transmitted to Congress this judgment among others. The record shows that it was not paid. Inquiry at the Court of Claims indicated that it was discovered that John Phillips was not a citizen of the United States, and therefore the claim was never paid. Now, if the House will allow me a moment, I will tell you something about John Phillips.

In 1866 Fort Phil Kearny, on the old Bozeman trail in Wyoming, was surrounded by 5,000 warriors of Red Cloud's band. On the afternoon of the 21st of December the garrison was attacked. Lieutenant-Colonel Fetterman, with 2 other officers and 78 men, went out to drive off Red Cloud's warriors. When 4 miles from the post they were surrounded by an overwhelming number of Indians and every man was killed. Encouraged by this massacre, the Indians came down and surrounded the post, which contained then less than 200 men and a number of women and children. Fort Laramie, the nearest garrison, was 250 miles distant. It was midwinter. The snow was from 2 to 3 feet deep on the ground.

Red Cloud's band numbered not less than 5,000 men and covered the entire country. It was absolutely necessary that somebody carry the news of the beleaguerment of the garrison to the forts on the Platte. Three different parties were sent out and their horses returned riderless. The third night after the massacre John Phillips volunteered to take the news of the beleaguerment and the imminent danger to Fort Laramie. He asked that he be given the colonel's thoroughbred horse on which to make the ride, and at dead of night he rode forth, the temperature 20° below zero and the country infested by a watchful savage foe. Secreting himself and horse by day, riding only at night, on three different occasions only escaping from bands of Indians by the fleetness of his horse, he finally reached Fort Laramie and told the story of the massacre and the deadly peril. The result was that a relieving column was sent and the garrison was saved.

For years afterwards this man was continuously harassed, his cattle killed, and his horses run off by the Indians. He suffered not only the $2,200 loss found in the judgment of the Court of Claims, but, as he claimed, nearly $6,000. When his claim was presented it was cut down to $2,200. The judgment was rendered and sent to this House. It then transpired that the man was not a citizen and the judgment was never paid. Ever since that time his friends have been before Congress endeavoring to get relief. Now, the committee ask that we pay simply the amount of the judgment and an additional amount equal to about the interest from the date it was rendered.

Mr. HILL. Who will get this money, in case it is paid?

Mr. MONDELL. His widow.

Mr. HILL. Is she living?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. HILL. When did he die?

Mr. MONDELL. He died some time ago. His ride for the relief of that garrison alone entitles him to more than this bill carries. His act was one of the most thrilling and heroic acts in all the history of the Northwest.

Mr. GRAFF. Are these things not generally known in his State by hundreds of people?

Mr. MONDELL. Not only in my State, but known all over the Union. This story has been told and sung for twenty years. The story of the relief of the garrison there is known to everybody, and we simply ask that the widow of this man be paid the sum long due him.

Mr. BROSIUS. Has this man been figuring as the hero of that story for all these years?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. BROSIUS. Why has he not been paid long ago?

Mr. MONDELL. Because Congress has not seen fit to do its duty. The bill has twice passed the Senate, and has been favorably reported in this House twice.

Mr. LOUD. I want to get back, if the gentleman will allow me, to this judgment. Has the gentleman a copy of the judgment?

Mr. MONDELL. I have not. I have a copy of the record of the House transmitting the judgment, or I can get it in a moment.

Mr. LOUD. I should like to have it. It ought to be a matter of evidence in this case, it seems to me. I do not want to reflect upon the members of the committee, especially the chairman, and the gentleman from Illinois. I regard them both as most careful men.

Mr. MONDELL. What does the gentleman wish? It would be impossible, of course, to get the judgment of the Court of Claims to-day. I can get the gentleman the document of the House of Representatives that contains the record of the judgment.

Mr. LOUD. Have you a certified copy of the judgment?

Mr. MONDELL. A copy of the judgment I have not got.

Mr. LOUD. What have you got, then?

Mr. GRAFF. Do you mean a verbatim copy of the judgment, or a mere statement?

Mr. MONDELL. The House report gives the date of the judgment and the amount.

Mr. GRAFF. I will say we had present with the members of this committee when this matter was up for consideration the House document that contained the record of this judgment.

Mr. LOUD. Even careful members of this House are sometimes deceived. I had some experience on the Committee on Claims myself, and I have given my assent to a claim which I found afterwards had no foundation, and the worse the case was, as a rule, the stronger the evidence appeared to be.

Mr. MONDELL. We have the record of the judgment having been sent to this Congress, but have not a copy of it.

Mr. BROSIUS. You mean that the report contains the record of the judgment or a statement of the fact that a judgment was rendered?

Mr. MONDELL. It was a document transmitted from the Court of Claims to this House, containing the fact or record, with a good many other claims.

Mr. BROSIUS. You mean by the record a statement of fact that the court had rendered such a judgment.

Mr. MONDELL. That is it.

Mr. BROSIUS. Have you a copy of the judgment?

Mr. MONDELL. No, sir.

Mr. LOUD. That fact ought to be easily brought before the House.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Let me call the attention of the gentleman from California to the statement made in the report in 1896, which says this:

> This claim was passed upon by the Court of Claims and the evidence was overwhelming, including the evidence of Army officers, Indian agents, special examiners, and others, and the Court of Claims allowed and entered judgment for the sum of $2,210. (See H. R. Ex. Doc. 125, Forty-ninth Congress, first session.)

I have sent for that.

Mr. LOUD. It certainly should have been a part of the record.

Mr. BROSIUS. It is in the report.

Mr. GRAFF. We had that document and all the papers in the case before the committee; but after we make a report to the House we send the document and proof back to the index clerk. We are compelled to do that.

Mr. LOUD. Is it not customary to include in your report the statement that such a judgment was rendered?

Mr. GRAFF. We have stated that fact.

Mr. MONDELL. It is stated in both reports.

Mr. LOUD. It simply refers to it.

Mr. GRAFF. We state that it was rendered. We might have given a certified copy of the judgment.

Mr. LOUD. Why, then, do the gentlemen give $5,000, when the court rendered a judgment of $2,000, if a judgment was rendered?

Mr. MONDELL. The amount we propose to give now is the amount of the original judgment, with interest.

Mr. LOUD. Oh, well; I have never known Congress, in the limited time I have been a member, pay any interest on claims; and I hope they will not begin that practice now.

Mr. OTEY. You have on judgments, have you not?

Mr. MONDELL. Now, Mr. Chairman, in the first place, the judgment of the Court of Claims was for nothing like the amount that this man lost. His claim was for over $6,000 originally. The Court of Claims pared it down twenty-six years ago to $2,200. Twenty-six years ago! And all this time he has been waiting for the payment. He had served his country as a scout; he had been in the country for many years prior to the time of his loss, but like a great many other men who went into that region as young men, having no opportunity to take out naturalization papers, it was not done.

Mr. LOUD. Does not the gentleman know if he served in the regular United States Army that it would not have been necessary, or he would have had no great amount of trouble if it was necessary, to get them?

Mr. MONDELL. I know the Court of Claims holds that service in the United States Army does not necessarily constitute citizenship. I know he voted for years and years and performed all the duties of a citizen, but still he was not a citizen according to the Court of Claims.

Mr. BROSIUS. I do not see in the report how this loss was sustained.

Mr. MONDELL. The loss was a loss during a raid of the same tribe of Indians that surrounded the post at the time he carried the news out.

Mr. BROSIUS. How long after?

Mr. MONDELL. Well, I do not know just how long afterwards.

Mr. BROSIUS. What property was destroyed?

Mr. MONDELL. Horses and cattle.

Mr. BROSIUS. Taken by the Indians?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. LOUD. Is John Phillips living now?

Mr. MONDELL. He died some years ago; his widow still lives.

Mr. BROSIUS. Let me make an inquiry. I do not know what the precedents are in these matters. This man continued to reside in that part of the country after the heroic instance that the gentleman has related?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. BROSIUS. Was he engaged in farming?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. BROSIUS. And some Indians came along and stole his property?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. BROSIUS. Does that create any liability against the Government of the United States?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes; under our law it creates a liability, and the liability was recognized.

Mr. BROSIUS. And the judgment of the Court of Claims was based upon that liability?

Mr. MONDELL. Entirely.

Mr. BROSIUS. I think the gentleman has fortified and reenforced the case very much, but I want to ask one further question. Do I understand the law to be that if I go into an Indian country to reside and conduct my operations and an Indian steals my horse, the Government of the United States is liable to pay for that horse?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes; providing the Indian who steals your horse does not belong to a tribe which is at war with the United States. If the tribe is at war with the United States, the Indian may steal your horse and destroy your property without the Government being liable.

Mr. BROSIUS. That is what I supposed. Were not these Indians at war with the United States?

Mr. MONDELL. As evidenced by the judgment of the Court of Claims, the tribe was not at war with the United States.

Mr. GRAFF. That was one of the conditions precedent that was proved.

Mr. MONDELL. Our country has been overrun time and time again with Indians at war, and we never got anything for the loss we sustained.

Mr. LOUD. I think, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman ought to withdraw the interest on this judgment, if there is a judgment, which is a little misty, but I will take the gentleman's word for that. If the gentleman gets a judgment after this twenty-six years, I think the woman is doing pretty well.

Mr. MONDELL. I do not think that is a very good argument, that because the Government failed to pay its debt for twenty-six years, therefore it is under no obligation to pay the interest.

Mr. LOUD. Let me say to the gentleman that during my experience in Congress I never have known the Committee on Appropriations to refuse to pay a judgment, and I think if he will get back to the time that this matter came before Congress, he will find some reason existing why none of this claim should be paid. Now, in view of the lapse of time, the lapse of conditions, I think if this woman can get the amount of this judgment she is doing mighty well.

Mr. MONDELL. I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that there is no question at all relative to this judgment except the one of citizenship. That was the only question on which payment of the judgment was suspended.

Mr. LANDIS. A mere technicality.

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. GRAFF. Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, I want to make one further suggestion to the House. I do not think the gentleman ought to press the full amount of this judgment with interest.

Mr. GRAFF. I will say to the gentleman from California that it seems to me this claim is absolutely defensible from the standpoint of legality, and in addition to that it presents claims in the direction of heroism and from every other direction.

Mr. BROSIUS. Was the report of the committee unanimous?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes; and after a full discussion. We went into discussion especially about the services that the scout had rendered and with reference to the reasons why the destruction of the property occurred by the Indians. It was done by the same tribe, for the reason that there was a constant hostile feeling by the people of this tribe on account of the fact that John Philips had delivered the garrison out of their grasp.

Mr. LOUD. John Philips is dead, and you can not reward him.

Mr. MONDELL. The fact that John Philips died while the United States denied him justice is no good reason why we should not give his widow what belonged to him.

Mr. BROSIUS. I do not think that should cut any figure; if John Philips is entitled to it, I think his widow ought to have it. Besides, I think I will vote for it to encourage heroism. [Applause.]

Mr. LOUD. Let me say once more, Mr. Chairman, to the gentleman, I do not want to appear as the only obstructionist, and I have great faith in the judgment of the gentleman from Wyoming; but you are establishing a precedent here to-day in paying interest that you can not afford to stand by. Since I have been in Congress, I never yet voted to pay interest on a claim, and I do not think there is a gentleman here on the floor that can point to a case where Congress has allowed interest upon a claim, and I hope the gentleman will withdraw that part of it.

Mr. MONDELL. In reply to the gentleman from California, I desire to say that I would hesitate very much to recommend interest as interest. I think I would refuse to vote and refuse to support, on the recommendation of my committee, the allowance of interest, even on a judgment where it was found necessary to come before the Committee on Claims to secure relief, because the precedents are nearly all against it. But in this case there was something else besides a purely legal liability.

The story, by the correspondence here, by the Army officers who were upon the scene, giving it just exactly as it occurred, shows a very exceptional case of bravery, and with great results. There were helpless women in that beleagured fort surrounded by five or six thousand Indians, and this man volunteered his services, and how he ever escaped from those howling Indians surrounding that fort and got miles away for the purpose of getting to the nearest railway station to telegraph for assistance almost passes understanding, but he did it. He went out and risked his life that others might live; and I say that is the noblest thing a man can do.

Mr. LOUD. If he had stayed there his life would still have been at great risk. The question was between staying there and dying, and going out and perhaps living.

Mr. GRAFF. Well, that would be hoping against hope. I have too good an opinion of the gentleman from California to believe that he would seriously urge such a suggestion as that.

Mr. BROSIUS. Besides, I think the gentleman from California can be relieved by reference to this report. It does not seem to report in favor of any interest at all. It is simply a report in favor of the claim of $5,000.

Mr. GRAFF. The report recognizes the interest and also the element of heroism, and specifically draws the distinction, so that this case can not furnish a precedent.

Mr. BROSIUS. I infer, however, from the report, that while the interest was considered in arriving at a conclusion as to the amount which should be allowed, you did not find a certain sum and then compute interest on it?

Mr. GRAFF. No, sir; we did not allow interest.

Mr. BROSIUS. Because such a sum would be different from the sum you have reported. As a matter of fact, you have reported in favor of a given sum as due to this widow.

Mr. GRAFF. I will say to the gentleman from California that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY] says that he has a copy of the judgment.

Mr. LOUD. I will not question that.

Mr. GRAFF. There may be some legal insufficiency about the form of the judgment to which my friend from California might object.

Mr. LOUD. After twenty-six years, I think we should view with a little suspicion a claim that was not paid when all the facts were fresh in the minds of the persons concerned.

Mr. FITZGERALD of New York. I should like to say to the gentleman from California that the reason this case was taken into consideration by the committee was that if the man had been a citizen the claim would have been paid under the judgment of the court. In view of his great heroism it was considered that he should not be allowed to suffer by reason of the fact that he was not a citizen; that he had won the rights of a citizen by his gallantry, by the loss of his blood.

Mr. LOUD. I am afraid that the alienism is a little bit smoky; but I quit. [Laughter.]

Mr. GRAFF. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported favorably.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. DALZELL having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 2612. An act to remove the charge of desertion against Frederick Schulte or Schuldt; and

S. 885. An act for the relief of Mary A. Coulson, executrix of Sewell Coulson, deceased.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed Senate concurrent resolutions of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

Senate concurrent resolution 35:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to have a survey made and submit a report and an estimate for deepening and properly improving the Mispillion River, Delaware, in accordance with recommendations heretofore made by the War Department.

Senate concurrent resolution 15:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 10,000 additional copies of the last annual report of the Commissioner of Pensions for the use of the Bureau of Pensions.

W. W. RILEY.

The committee resumed its sitting.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 1806) for the relief of W. W. Riley.

Mr. GRAFF. I think this bill has already passed the House. I believe it was taken up by unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the bill will be passed over without prejudice until it is ascertained whether it has already been passed.

CLARE M. ASHBY.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 445) for the relief of Clare M. Ashby, widow of W. W. Ashby, late United States consul at Colon.

Mr. OTEY. This is a bill for the relief of the widow of W. W. Ashby, who was drowned while serving as consul at Colon. In the Fifty-fifth Congress a bill was presented for her relief; but in error it was presented for the full amount of the salary. This bill is for the balance of one year's salary. I do not know that it is necessary to read the whole report; but I can say it has been the custom in cases of this kind to pay the balance of the year's salary; and the balance in this case was $2,866.66. Allow me to cite some of the precedents:

By act of March 3, 1879, Mrs. Taylor, the widow of Bayard Taylor, who died while minister to Germany, was allowed the sum of $7,000, to compensate his estate for extraordinary expenses and losses incurred in consequence of his death.

By joint resolution approved July 28, 1882, Mrs. Hurlburt, widow of General Hurlburt, who died while minister to Peru, was allowed one year's salary and legal allowances, after making necessary deductions. This bill provides for paying to the widow of Mr. Ashby only the remainder of one year's salary.

Joint resolution approved July 28, 1882, gave Mrs. Kilpatrick, widow of General Kilpatrick, who died while minister to Chile, one year's salary and legal allowances after making proper deductions.

Joint resolution approved July 1, 1882, gave Mrs. Garnett, widow of Rev. H. H. Garnett, who died while minister to Liberia, one year's salary.

There are other precedents which it is hardly necessary for me to recite. This bill provides for paying only what is usual in these cases.

Mr. LOUD. Has the gentleman any reference to a case where Congress has ever made this allowance to the widow of a consul?

Mr. OTEY. No, sir; most of the precedents I have here are the cases of ministers.

Mr. LOUD. What are the others that are not among the "most?"

Mr. OTEY. I do not see any cases of consuls.

Mr. LOUD. I thought not.

Mr. OTEY. They are all ministers. I will read what the Third Assistant Secretary says in regard to it. I do not know that it makes any difference whether a man was a minister. This man was in the diplomatic service. Since the gentleman raises the question about consuls, I will say that I do not know that there are any precedents particularly stating that the beneficiary was a consul. I do not see any in this report. This is what Mr. Cridler, Third Assistant Secretary of State, says in his letter:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, January 27, 1899.

SIR: Referring to the Department's letter to you of January 21, 1898, and your recent visit to the Department in connection therewith, I have now, agreeably to your request, to acquaint you with the purport of a dispatch from the vice-consul of the United States at Colon, No. 2, of January 18, 1898, in regard to the drowning of William W. Ashby, late consul of the United States at that port. The facts are as follows:

On Sunday afternoon, January 16, Mr. Ashby, accompanied by Dr. F. W. Hafemann, German consul, and Mr. D. G. Mott, master mechanic of the Panama Railroad, left Colon in a small boat to visit Mr. Mott's cocoanut plantation, situated on what is known as Toro Point, across the bay from this point. The trip over was made all right, but in returning from the shore, near Point Toro, the boat was capsized and all the occupants were thrown out in the water. Although a moderate breeze was blowing at the time of the accident, the sea was rough and breaking very heavily on the jagged reefs which line the coast, and being unable to secure assistance at the time, all the occupants of the boat except the captain, who was thrown on the reef and badly hurt, were either drowned or killed by being thrown against the coral rocks. The accident was witnessed by one person only, the assistant keeper of the "Punta del Toro" light-house, who, at the time, was in the lamp room of the tower preparing to light the lamp. Being fully half a mile from the place where the accident occurred, and having no means of rendering assistance, he was forced by circumstances to see the occupants of the ill-fated boat drown.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant.

THOS. W. CRIDLER,
Third Assistant Secretary.

Mr. CANNON. Does the gentleman from Virginia think it is a safe precedent to pay the balance of a year's salary or a whole year's salary to the widow of a consul who dies in the service? There is no law for it, as the gentleman is aware. Otherwise there would be no necessity for the reporting of this bill.

Mr. OTEY. Nor is there any law for paying ministers, or there would be no necessity for special bills.

Mr. CANNON. That is true; but from the small number of cases that the gentleman refers to I take it that the practice of paying the widows of ministers is by no means universal. But is not the precedent one to be honored in the breach rather than in the observance? I am not speaking merely for the purpose of obstructing. I know it is perhaps ungracious, where a sum is to be devoted to somebody who needs it, to make objection, but after all I dislike very much to vote for the extension of precedents that it seems to me are not commendable. We have the precedent here with reference to the House and Senate. If one of our members dies, the rule is that the widow gets the balance of the salary, not exceeding $5,000. There is no law for it, but it is a practice that has grown up and continued for almost a century.

In the last ten years we have taken to extending it to employees of the House and Senate. If one of them dies, we bury him at the public expense and, if I recollect aright, give the widow six months' salary. With this great army of officeholders, two or three hundred thousand, more or less, throughout the country, where we all break our necks almost, figuratively speaking, to get the office and draw the salary while we live, I fear the results of the precedent of paying the salary after death.

Mr. OTEY. In reply to the gentleman's question, I can only answer in the language of the Third Assistant Secretary:

The Department does not recall a case where Congress has provided an allowance to the widow of a consul who died while in the public service.

If you will consult Senate Report No. 238, Forty-ninth Congress, first session, you will find a correct list, up to that date, of widows of deceased diplomatic agents who have received, upon Congressional sanction, various sums, representing either a year's salary or a portion thereof.

The Department knows of no sufficient reason why Mrs. Ashby should not share in the same equitable treatment.

And I know of none, why he should not so share. The committee found no other reason. The committee were unanimous in their report on this question. Mr. Ashby was drowned shortly after he went to his post of duty and he left a widow. It has been the custom to pay other diplomatic agents as high as a year's salary and allowances. The first bill introduced for Mr. Ashby's widow was that, but this bill provides only for paying the remainder of his year's salary. The Third Assistant Secretary, the official with whom we had dealings, stated in his letter that he saw no reason why this case should be barred from the same privileges.

Mr. CANNON. Would my friend vote for a general law paying the widows of consuls who die in the service and the widows of other Government officials a year's salary?

Mr. OTEY. All Goverment officials?

Mr. CANNON. Well, I will restrict it to consuls first.

Mr. OTEY. Yes; I would.

Mr. CANNON. Well, where would my friend draw the line? Would he say also the vice-consuls, secretaries of legations, clerks in foreign offices, and the consular clerks? all of them having quite as much duty to perform as the consul.

Mr. OTEY. I do not know exactly how far I would go, when you come to all of those.

Mr. LOUD. You would go far enough to include this case, would you not?

Mr. OTEY. I would go far enough to include this case, and I have no more personal interest in it than the gentleman has, if he means to imply anything of that sort.

Mr. LOUD. Oh, no; I do not intimate that you have any personal interest in it.

Mr. OTEY. I thought I would make that clear, in view of the gentleman's remark.

Yes; I would vote for it, because this case has been before our committee and they have considered it thoroughly and reported it unanimously, and if you will bring every single one of the cases before a committee and get a unanimous report in favor of it, letting each case stand on its merits, then I would not vote against the recommendation of the committee in such a case. I do not know that I would vote for a general law to pay Tom, Dick, and Harry—everybody who died in the service. This is a case which has some special features about it. The facts have been stated.

Mr. CANNON. I have nothing further to say about it. I only wanted to express my views about it.

Mr. OTEY. Did the gentlemen ever vote to pay the balance of a year's salary to the widow of anybody who died in the service?

Mr. CANNON. I have no recollection about that. I presume that I may have voted on the cases of these parties who were in the diplomatic service.

Mr. OTEY. Is there any reason why you should vote differently in the case of a minister and in a case of a consul?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, yes.

Mr. OTEY. Why?

Mr. CANNON. Those who are in the diplomatic service are charged with an entirely different class of duties. The consul is a mere business agent. He goes to the place for the salary. He is connected merely with business matters. He is in no wise in the diplomatic service, not so much so as our officers of the Army and Navy who are abroad.

Mr. OTEY. But he can not die any more than the other man.

Mr. CANNON. That is right.

Mr. OTEY. And both are in the service of the country.

Mr. CANNON. Certainly; but in the meantime the man who dies at home and does not have the good luck to be business agent for the Government, leaves a widow who does not get the pay, and she helps to pay the taxes to pay the other widow.

Mr. OTEY. This man did not die at home.

Mr. CANNON. I understand that. I will say to my friend that I care nothing about the amount involved in this bill, but I see no reason why, if this precedent is established, we should not go back and pay the widows of all consuls who have died in the service, and go forward and pay the widows of those who may die; and what I fear is that this constitutes a precedent that will open the door to such claims.

Mr. OTEY. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

And then, on motion of Mr. GRAFF, the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HEMENWAY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 5196, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with the recommendation that it do lie on the table; also that the committee had had under consideration the bills H. R. 4686, H. R. 2322, H. R. 5969, H. R. 1454, H. R. 2098, and H. R. 445, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with the recommendation that they do pass.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 5196) for the relief of CLAUDE A. SWANSON.

Mr. GRAFF. Mr. Speaker, I move that that bill do lie upon the table.

The motion was agreed to.

The following bills, reported from the Committee of the Whole, were severally considered, ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, read the third time, and passed:

A bill (H. R. 4686) for the relief of J. A. Ware;

A bill (H. R. 2322) for the relief of Joshua Bishop;

A bill (H. R. 5969) for the relief of the devisees and legal representatives of D. L. Huskey, deceased;

A bill (H. R. 1454) for the relief of William L. Orr; and
A bill (H. R. 445) for the relief of Clare M. Ashby, widow of W. W. Ashby, late United States consul at Colon.

SENATE BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills and joint resolutions of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees as indicated below:

S. 2280. An act granting a pension to Horatio N. Cornell—to the Committee on Pensions.

S. 1619. An act granting an increase of pension to Ella Cotton Conrad—to the Committee on Pensions.

S. 950. An act granting a pension to Sarah Ann Fletcher—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 1242. An act granting an increase of pension to Adele W. Elmer—to the Committee on Pensions.

S. 2020. An act granting a pension to Sarah E. Fortier—to the Committee on Pensions.

S. 2552. An act granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth Overby Williams—to the Committee on Pensions.

S. 1803. An act granting an increase of pension to Richard L. Titsworth—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 259. An act granting a pension to Lizzie Breen—to the Committee on Pensions.

S. 1552. An act granting an increase of pension to Helen L. Dent—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 2612. An act to remove the charge of desertion against Frederick Schulte or Schuldt—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

S. 885. An act for the relief of Mary A. Coulson, executrix of Sewell Coulson, deceased—to the Committee on War Claims.

Senate concurrent resolution 35:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to have a survey made and submit a report and an estimate for deepening and properly improving the Mispillion River, Delaware, in accordance with recommendations heretofore made by the War Department—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Senate concurrent resolution 15:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 10,000 additional copies of the last annual report of the Commissioner of Pensions for the use of the Bureau of Pensions—to the Committee on Printing.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills and joint resolution of the following titles:

S. 2354. An act enlarging the powers of the Choctaw, Oklahoma and Gulf Railroad Company;

S. 2270. An act declaring Cuivre River to be a navigable stream; and

S. R. 91. Joint resolution authorizing the printing extra copies of the publications of the Office of Naval Intelligence, Navy Department.

HATTIE A. PHILLIPS.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 2098) for the relief of Hattie A. Phillips.

Mr. GRAFF. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill (S. 197) for the relief of Hattie A. Phillips, which is precisely like the House bill, and which has passed the Senate and come to our committee since we reported the House bill, be substituted for the House bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAFF] asks unanimous consent that the Senate bill be substituted for the bill reported from the Committee of the Whole, it being identical. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill (S. 197) for the relief of Hattie A. Phillips was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

The bill H. R. 2098 was ordered to lie on the table.

On motion of Mr. GRAFF, a motion to reconsider the votes by which the several bills were passed was laid on the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. REEDER, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. GAMBLE, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

And then, on motion of Mr. PAYNE (at 4 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Acting Secretary of War, renewing recommendation for the passage of an act in relation to the publication of advertisements for contracts—to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue relating to an appropriation for the purchase of books—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of State, transmitting further information in regard to the complaints of the German Government in relation to certain customs regulations of the United States Government—to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. BOREING, from the Committee on Printing, to which was referred the concurrent resolution of the House (H. C. Res. 16) for printing 10,000 copies of the work entitled The Louisiana Purchase, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 698); which said concurrent resolution and report were referred to the House Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the concurrent resolution of the Senate (S. Con. Res. No. 6) to print for the Bureau of the American Republics 2,500 copies of the Annual Report of the Director of the Bureau of the American Republics, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 699); which said concurrent resolution and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. CURTIS, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 3369) to put in force in the Indian Territory certain provisions of the laws of Arkansas relating to corporations, and to make said provisions applicable to said Territory, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 700); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. RUSSELL, from the Committee on Ways and Means, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 2114) to constitute South Manchester, Conn., a port of delivery, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 701); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 1905) granting an increase of pension to Lillian Capron, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 702); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. BOREING, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 2331) granting an increase of pension to Festus Dickinson, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 703); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 7624) granting an increase of pension to Pleasant H. McBride, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 704); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS INTRODUCED.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. LENTZ: A bill (H. R. 9632) to prevent robbing the mail, to provide a safer and easier method of sending money by mail, and to increase the postal revenues—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. WATERS: A bill (H. R. 9633) for the erection of a public building at Santa Barbara, Cal.—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. LACEY: A bill (H. R. 9634) to set apart certain lands in the Territory of Arizona as a public park, to be known as the Petrified Forest National Park—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. CUSHMAN: A bill (H. R. 9635) establishing lighthouse and fog signal in State of Washington—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

SATURDAY, March 17, 1900.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

By unanimous consent, Mr. SLAYDEN obtained leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of C. C. Cresson, Fifty-fifth Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

PURCHASE OF CERTAIN LANDS IN THE DISTRICT OF ALASKA.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 2757) to authorize the purchase of certain lands in the district of Alaska.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Karluk Packing Company, claiming under amended survey No. 24, in the district of Alaska, or its successor in interest, may purchase the land embraced in said survey at $2.50 per acre, being the price fixed by section 10 of the act of Congress approved May 14, 1898, entitled "An act extending the homestead laws and providing for right of way for railroads in the district of Alaska, and for other purposes," and upon such payment patent shall issue as in other cases.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MADDOX. Reserving the right to object, I would like to have the gentleman explain the bill.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, the full import of this bill is very well set out in the report of the committee, which I send to the Clerk's desk and I ask that the Clerk read it.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the report in the gentleman's time.

Mr. KAHN. I wish to say the report is unanimous.

The report (by Mr. BURKE of South Dakota) was read, as follows:

The Committee on the Public Lands, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 2757) to authorize the purchase of certain lands in the district of Alaska, report the same favorably and recommend its passage.

From the evidence submitted to the committee it appears that the Karluk Packing Company, an association of citizens of the United States, and its predecessors in interest, have been in continuous occupation for more than twenty years of a portion of the narrow strip of land, from 70 to 350 feet in width, known as Karluk Spit, on Kodiak Island, and lying between the open waters of Shellikoff Straits and the Karluk River, and comprising a little less than 20 acres; that the company has erected extensive salmon canneries and necessary warehouses and other buildings thereon which were of the value of $250,000 at the time of the official survey of its claim in 1892, and before the year 1898 its plant had been enlarged and increased by additional canneries and buildings, involving an approximate total expenditure of about $500,000, such buildings and improvements occupying practically the whole of the ground embraced within its present claim, and all being used each season for canning and curing salmon.

The company engaged from season to season in canning and packing salmon, relying upon its title by possession in the absence of any legislation by Congress permitting the purchase of the fee until the passage of the act of March 3, 1891, which provided that citizens of the United States or corporations thereof "now or hereafter in possession of and occupying public lands in Alaska for the purpose of trade and manufacture, may purchase not exceeding 160 acres, to be taken, as near as practicable, in a square form of such land at $2.50 per acre."

The land is a long, narrow strip, and therefore can not be taken in a square form, and was occupied before the passage of the act of March 3, 1891.

Thereunder, and in November, 1891, due application was made by the company for the survey of its claim; such survey was made in the season of 1892, but developed conflicts with several other claimants, who thereafter conveyed their interests to the Karluk Packing Company, resulting in amended survey No. 24, of the Karluk Company's claim as now made, which was on May 2, 1893, approved by the United States surveyor-general of Alaska, and on May 14, 1895, by the Commissioner of the General Land Office. The Commissioner's letter of approval of that date to the United States surveyor-general states:

"This office, recognizing the Karluk Packing Company's possessory right to the land embraced within the lines of the amended survey No. 24, and their ownership of the improvements thereon, the conflicts having been eliminated as evidenced by the deeds of transfer and relinquishment before mentioned, and the Karluk Packing Company amended survey No. 24, now appearing as the only and sole applicants for the land, you are notified that the amended survey No. 24 is hereby accepted, and you are authorized to file the triplicate plat in the United States district land office. * * * You are directed to notify the parties in interest of the acceptance of this survey."

Under the act of 1891, upon notice of the Commissioner's approval of the survey, the claimant was required to publish newspaper notice for six weeks that on a day named therein proof of possession and application to purchase would be submitted before the United States local land officers at Sitka by named witnesses, and to post similar notice upon the land so claimed and in the local land office. Of such notice any adverse claimant was required to take cognizance. Owing to the shortness of the season (which extends in that latitude from about May to October) notice of the approval of its survey did not reach the Karluk Packing Company until too late to make such publication during the season of 1895. But in the season of 1896 such notices were so published and posted, but on the date named for taking its testimony at Sitka, in October of that year, its witnesses failed to then appear, solely because of the distance from its location on Karluk Spit to Sitka, being some 900 miles by sea, and there being no regular communication by steamer.

The witnesses did so reach the local office on November 13, 1896, and the final proof was then submitted but not accepted by the local officers, solely because of the delay, but the matter was submitted by them to the Commissioner for his action. That officer, on March 1, 1897, accepted the reason shown by the company for the delay, but required a new publication and posting of notices before allowing entry. This again compelled postponement of the giving of the required new publication of notice until the season of 1898, when, after due publication and posting of notices, final proof was again submitted before a United States commissioner on Kodiak Island (the law having been in meantime changed to so permit) and then mailed to the United States local land officers at Sitka, by whom it was never received, nor has it since come to light.

While the company was thus proceeding to complete title under its approved survey, and while the law of 1891 clearly recognized its claim as so surveyed and accepted by the commissioner, the final payment and entry was delayed by the circumstances stated, and which were beyond its control until, in the meantime, Congress passed the act of May 14, 1898, which for the first time restricted the area of claims then pending under the former act of 1891 to 160 rods of water front.

This limitation put the Karluk Packing Company in a hard situation. The extent of water front upon this narrow spit fronting the Shellikoff Straits exceeded this new statutory limitation by some 60 rods, and the frontage of its claim on the Karluk River was also about 160 rods. Its extensive improvements occupy almost the entire area of its claim, representing, as stated, an expenditure of some $500,000, and all made prior to the passage of the act of 1898, and any curtailment of its claim to the new limitation of 160 rods as the entire water front thereof would necessarily compel it to abandon some of its canneries, warehouses, and other improvements which it had placed thereon in entire good faith under the former law of 1891, which contained no such limitation, and leave them liable to appropriation by some newcomer who had not expended a dollar thereon.

In this situation the company has appealed to Congress for equitable relief and asks by pending bill to be permitted to purchase and receive patent for the ground embraced by its approved and accepted survey under the act of 1891, and known as amended survey No. 24.

In the opinion of your committee such relief should be accorded as asked. The equities of the case are plain. The company has had for over twenty years the prior and exclusive possession; is engaged in the meritorious business of producing an article of food supply extensively used in the United States and exported to other countries as well. It can not remove its valuable plant and improvements; it should not be asked to surrender any part thereof to strangers, and the area of its claim (20 acres) is far within the maximum of 160 acres allowed to be entered under the act of 1891. Right of entry to those in actual possession, and especially in protection to their improvements made in good faith, has been the uniform policy of land legislation since the earliest days and has express sanction in both the Alaska acts of 1891 and 1898. Recognition of the equities of present case is in entire accord with that uniform established legislative policy.

The wisdom of the general law in limiting the shore front of claims as expressed in the act of 1898 is undoubted. The present instance is, however, peculiar, and presents a case of extreme hardship under the general law which should be relieved when, as appears, the claim was initiated and has been maintained in good faith for over twenty years; was pressed for final adjustment under the act of 1891, which contained no such limitation; when the survey was approved by the Land Department at Washington as in full accord with that law, and when final entry thereunder was prevented only by a series of delays and mishaps which the company could not control.

The evidence submitted before the committee, and now upon its files, shows clearly that the Karluk River is not a navigable stream in any proper general sense, because accessible by reason of its shallow waters only to the use of rowboats and small flatboats in conveying the fish to the canneries, while the shore fronting the sea or the Shellikoff Straits can not be used for wharf purposes, because in times of northeast gales the waves are driven high upon the spit and sometimes even across it.

As the act of 1898 contains the limitation of shore frontage only upon navigable waters, it is manifest to the committee that the excess thereover found in present case is far more apparent than real in every practical sense.

It further appears that some 600 men are employed at these canneries in each season; that an expensive salmon fish hatchery, involving an original cost of $40,000, is maintained by these parties on the Karluk River wherefrom millions of salmon are annually spawned and sent down to restock the fish supply in the adjacent waters, and being the only hatchery thus maintained in Alaskan waters by private enterprise.

Mr. MADDOX. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. Is there any other claimant to this land?

Mr. KAHN. Not that I know of. I believe there were some adverse claimants who disposed of their title to the Karluk Packing Company before the amended certificate was filed.

Mr. MADDOX. And you have the unanimous report of the committee.

Mr. KAHN. That is my information.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The committee examined the matter very thoroughly. Pictures were presented of the buildings constructed by this company and which they have occupied for a great number of years. To deprive them of it would deprive them of thousands and thousands of dollars. In view of the fact that they located under the impression that they were entitled to this land, and the fact that they have gone on and established a large plant there, involving the loss of hundreds of thousands of dollars to remove it and let the land be open to entry by somebody else, it is nothing but fair that they should be allowed to have this land. They will have to pay $2 per acre for it.

Mr. LACEY. I would suggest to the gentleman from Georgia that under the act of 1898 they could hold this land without any trouble. Excepting for the fact of that being a narrow strip, they could take the 160 acres. Their frontage is perhaps a quarter of a mile wider than the act of 1898 permits. When they took the land they took it under the act of 1891, some years after that and before the act of 1898. So that under that act they have occupied a little wider frontage, not near as much land as the act of 1898 would legalize to them. I would suggest that there ought to be an amendment to the bill, which I will call attention to at the proper time. The act of 1898 reserved a strip of 60 feet around the shore for highways, and there ought to be an amendment providing that the bill conform to this survey No. 24—the bill refers to the certificate by number—so that it shall not take in this highway.

I find on examining the original survey, which we did not have before us when we examined this bill in committee, it would give the fee simple to the highway to the Karlup Company if this reservation be not made. I shall offer an amendment, with the consent of the gentleman in charge of the bill, to make the bill conform to that.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Would it interfere with any necessary wharves being erected there?

Mr. LACEY. The wharves are already built by this company.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. If this bill passes, it would become private property.

Mr. LACEY. I would like to say to the gentleman from Georgia that this does not change the policy of Congress about this matter.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Should there not be a reservation in this bill?

Mr. LACEY. I have prepared an amendment that the right of way reserved under said act, approved May 14, 1898, shall not be included in said patent, and will offer an amendment which will reserve this 60 feet.

Mr. MADDOX. Under that statement, and the amendment the gentleman proposes to offer, I shall not object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LACEY. I offer an amendment, to add at the end of the bill the following language.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That the right of way reserved under said act, approved May 14, 1898, shall not be included in said patent.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to said amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. KAHN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

REPRINT.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a reprint of the bill (H. R. 6071) to amend the postal laws relating to second-class mail matter. It is entirely exhausted, as I am informed.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment joint resolution and bill of the following titles:

H. J. Res. 204. Joint resolution to provide for the removal of snow and ice in the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia; and

H. R. 2000. An act for the relief of Thomas Paul.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments a bill of the following title:

H. R. 9080. An act appropriating for the benefit and government of Puerto Rico revenues collected on importations therefrom since its evacuation by Spain, and revenues hereafter collected on such importations under existing law.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. BAKER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 4648. An act granting an increase of pension to William G. McLain.

A. F. FLEET.

Mr. BRICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill S. 427, reported favorably to this House by the Committee on Military Affairs.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 427) for the relief of A. F. Fleet, superintendent of the Missouri Military Academy, Mexico, Mo.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to relieve A. F. Fleet, superintendent of the Missouri Military Academy, Mexico, Mo., from all money responsibility for so much of the ordnance and ordnance stores issued to said academy under its bond dated August 13, 1892, as was destroyed by fire on September 24, 1896.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MCCLELLAN. I would like to have an explanation of the bill.

Mr. BRICK. Mr. Speaker, I will briefly explain the purpose of the bill. The Missouri Academy, located at Mexico, Mo., was founded in 1890, and on September 24, 1896, was destroyed by fire originating from the electric lights. The cadets were transferred at once to the Culver Military Academy in Indiana, and the two schools were united under the control of the Missouri Academy superintendent, Col. A. F. Fleet. During the six years of its existence the Missouri Academy had in attendance 624 cadets, and since the union of the two academies the Culver Academy has had 688 cadets, or a total attendance of exactly 1,312, and the Culver Military Academy is to-day, I am informed—and I make the statement upon that information—the largest school of its class in the United States. In the Missouri fire 115 Springfield cadet rifles and equipments, charged by the Ordnance Department to the academy at $2,066.90, were also lost. These rifles had been in use four years before they were received by the academy, and were consequently less valuable than when first issued.

The superintendent, A. F. Fleet, prays Congress to authorize the Secretary of War to relieve him from all money responsibility for so much of the ordnance and ordnance stores issued to said academy as was destroyed by fire on September 24, 1896, on the following grounds. And I give as reasons for that that the ordnance stores and the ordnance were destroyed without any fault of Colonel Fleet or the other officers of the academy; that these patterns of cadet rifles have largely gone out of use, having been entirely superseded by other improved patents, so that if the rifles had not been destroyed they would have been of little more use to the Government now than that amount of old iron. They would merely have brought a nominal price. Now, Congress has recognized the value of these schools in various instances. It costs perhaps $5,000 to run a cadet through West Point. Here are over 1,000 cadets that have been put through this school without expense to the Government of the United States, and in times of war, for all military purposes, there are a thousand men educated as they would have been at West Point without expense to the Government.

For these reasons, and for the reason that the guns would be of no value if they had not been destroyed, and because of the great value of the services of this institution to the United States of America without any expense to the United States, I ask for Colonel Fleet that he be relieved from something that happened without any fault of his. There were twelve commissioned officers in the Spanish war who came from Colonel Fleet's academy. The committee unanimously report in favor of this bill, and in all fairness I feel he should be relieved.

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Indiana yield to the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. COWHERD. I thought the gentleman had concluded. I wish to say that I hope there will be no objection——

Mr. RICHARDSON. If the gentleman from Missouri will pardon me, I want to ask the gentleman from Indiana if this bill has been reported by the appropriate committee of the House; has it been considered by the committee?

Mr. BRICK. It has been considered by the Committee on Military Affairs and favorably reported to the House by that committee.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I will say to the gentleman from Tennessee that there was a unanimous report from the Committee on Military Affairs. This does not affect the Culver Military Institute. It only relieves Colonel Fleet of his liability, and the War Department has recognized his standing and his character by issuing additional ordnance on his bond at the new institute. I think the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BRICK] has made a fair statement of the case. There was absolutely no difference of opinion in the Committee on Military Affairs. If the War Department had the power to relieve him of liability, it would do it.

Mr. COWHERD. Will the gentleman from Indiana yield to me for a moment?

Mr. BRICK. Certainly.

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Speaker, I hope there will be no objection to this measure on this side of the Chamber. The fire that destroyed the school was a sudden and disastrous one, without opportunity to save any portion of the property contained in it; some barely escaped with their lives, and it was without fault of the superintendent or the authorities of the school.

Mr. BRICK. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK].

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I want to indorse everything that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BRICK] and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COWHERD] and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] have said about this bill. This school was in my Congressional district. Professor Fleet is a man of the highest character, and this bill has been reported favorably, unanimously, by two committees of the House and passed the Senate once. Everybody conversant with the school knows that the facts set out by the gentleman are absolutely true, and I hope the bill will pass without any division.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and being read the third time, it was passed.

On motion of Mr. BRICK, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. BRICK. Mr. Speaker, I move that House bill 5547, on this same subject, lie on the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana moves that the House bill similar to the one just passed lie on the table. Without objection, that will be done. [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. LIVINGSTON, until March 28, on account of business of the Industrial Commission.

To Mr. POWERS, for one week, on account of important business.

To Mr. FARIS, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

EULOGY ON THE LATE SENATOR HAYWARD.

The SPEAKER. The hour of 1 o'clock was set apart for eulogies on the late Senator HAYWARD; and as there is nothing more pending before the House, without objection, the exercises will be taken up at this time.

There was no objection.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer the following resolutions, and ask that they be adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That it is with profound sorrow and regret that the House has heard of the death of Hon. MONROE L. HAYWARD, late Senator-elect from the State of Nebraska.

Resolved, That, as a mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, the business of the House be suspended to enable his friends to pay proper tribute of regard to his high character and distinguished worth.

Resolved, That the House communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased with the action of the House thereon.

Resolved, That, as an additional mark of respect, the House, at the conclusion of these ceremonies, do adjourn.

The resolutions were agreed to.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Nebraska, Mr. ROBINSON, is not able to be present to-day, and I ask unanimous consent that permission be given to him, and to such other gentlemen as would like to avail themselves of the privilege, to print their remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska asks unanimous consent to permit members to print remarks on the pending order. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. Speaker, in beginning my remarks I desire to read a little from the Congressional Directory of the first session of the Fifty-sixth Congress:

MONROE LELAND HAYWARD, Republican, of Nebraska City, was born in Willsboro, Essex County, N. Y., December 22, 1840; enlisted in the Twenty-second New York Infantry at the beginning of the civil war, and was afterwards transferred to the Fifth New York Cavalry; discharged in December, 1862, owing to disability arising from sickness; on returning home entered Fort Edward Collegiate Institute, where he completed his education; in the meantime his father had removed to Wisconsin, and he followed; studied law at Whitewater, Wis., and removed to Nebraska in 1867, settling at Nebraska City, where he has resided ever since and practiced his profession; was a member of the State constitutional convention in 1873; filled out a term on the district bench by appointment of the governor in 1886; was the Republican candidate for governor in the fall of 1898, and was defeated by 3,000 votes; was elected United States Senator, to succeed WILLIAM VINCENT ALLEN, March 8, 1899.

His term of service will expire March 3, 1905.

That is briefly the life of our late beloved Senator from Nebraska as the compiler wrote it.

But that was written while the Senator was yet alive and among us. Now it does not satisfy us. We would know more of him. We would go into detail; follow his life more closely and from it draw inspiration and hope.

When that was written we did not need more, we did not want more; for he was himself to all who knew him—the revelation of his own life and character, most reliable and instructive and impressive.

His life, like a book, could not be published until the last chapter was written, for it was growing better and broader and more beautiful all the while. But he has gone from among us. The deeds of his life are now history, and what may be said of him will need no revision for subsequent data.

We have set apart this day for eulogy upon his life and character, and when those who wish shall have spoken, we shall adjourn this House out of respect to his memory.

The biography which I have just read is but a paragraph. It covers but a small part of one page of the book. All men's history can be told in about equal time, while they live. The little and the great alike need but small space and little of printer's ink to satisfy their fellow-men.

But how different after death. So long as a man lives we are content with a modicum of information about him, comparatively speaking. We like to know from whence he sprung, his source, and in some instances his resources, what he is capable of doing, what he has accomplished, and what he is now. From a laboring man applying for employment to a Presidential candidate the category varies but little. Hence his birthplace, his acquired titles, and his politics are about all the Clerk has put in the Congressional Directory.

But that is not sufficient now. It does not satisfy us. There is a longing to know more of him. We want to know not merely where he was born and when, but what made him Senator. Ah! more yet than that; we not only would know what made him Senator HAYWARD, but what made him the great-hearted, noble-minded, and beloved Judge HAYWARD, as we knew him so long.

These latter traits made him Senator. The office added nothing to his "parts," nor indeed to the affection of his constituents. The office was but the expression of that affection.

Those of us who knew Senator HAYWARD (and I regret that you did not all know him well) realize that no biography, of whatever dimensions, will ever do justice to his character and ability, and that no eulogy will compute the good that he has accomplished.

The choicest things in a great man's life can never be written. They assume forms for which the human language has no words delicate enough to describe.

There is a power of presence indescribable in a truly great man, and while understood and appreciated, it can not be told. There are no words for it.

By this power of presence or personality in a man, indescribable, and its influence for good, I speak of the influence which Lowell meant when he said:

> The very room, coz she was in, seemed warm from floor to ceiling.

I speak of the power of the presence alone of Napoleon, which the Duke of Wellington said "equaled forty thousand men." I speak of the presence of a godly man, though he say not a word. I speak of the air surrounding a great man, the potent force, the "still small voice" of living and doing and walking and acting that can not be told.

Nevertheless it is there and, like the subtle aroma of the rose, permeates the entire community in which he is, and all men and things are better and sweeter because he lives.

Most books are read by scanning the title page, perhaps, then glancing at the introduction, and, possibly, casually looking over the index. There are few books that stand this test sufficiently to warrant further consideration.

Bacon says:

> Some books are to be tasted, others are to be swallowed, and some few are to be chewed and digested.

And as with books, so with men. Not all will sustain extended biographies. The deeds of life have not merited it, nor will the resulting benefits to the world warrant it.

If biography is ever beneficial and worthy of reading, if the deeds and motives are ever worthy of example, we may well give ear to the life and acts and motives of our late Senator.

Extend his biography, and you have the history of Nebraska. Extol his virtues, and you have noble example. Recite his deeds, and you get inspiration. The world is better because he lived. He did something for his State, his country, and humanity.

He came to Nebraska the year that the State came into the Union of States. As Nebraska assumed the responsibilities of statehood he donned the toga of a Nebraska citizen. Nebraska was a young State, and he was a young man. Nebraska grew, and he developed with her. He endured the cares and vicissitudes of the new country and waxed strong in their midst. He and the State grew together.

Senator HAYWARD was never for a moment a blank in Nebraska affairs. The State needed his counsel and his indomitable energy every moment. He was not an "officeholder" nor, indeed, an "office seeker;" but the story of the State could not be written with him left out. He framed her constitution as a member of the convention. He counseled in her legislation. He interpreted her laws as judge. He broke her boundless prairies and turned them into a cornfield unsurpassed in the world; he developed her industries; he brought to every question and condition thrift, energy, integrity, perseverance, and industry.

With these qualities he mastered the problems that confronted the new State, and instead of chaos and uncertainty set up law and order. And with these instruments of peace and tranquillity he brought to her fame and respect abroad; security and confidence at home.

He was always a conspicuous figure in Nebraska. From the time of his arrival in the State he was associated with and in competition with the strongest men intellectually. He settled in Nebraska City, where have lived many of the strongest men, not only in our State, but in the nation.

He had for his contemporaries at home such men as O. P. Mason, late chief justice of our supreme court and a man of giant intellect; Senator Tipton, who but recently died in this city, acknowledged to be one of the strongest men who ever sat in the American Senate, and Senator Van Wyck, who doubtless many here now will remember. Hon. J. Sterling Morton, of whom all Nebraskans are proud as the Secretary of Agriculture in Mr. Cleveland's Cabinet, also lives in the same city, and has been his neighbor and contemporary for more than a quarter of a century.

Mr. Morton and Mr. HAYWARD did not always agree in politics. Against each other there was waged the bitterest warfare politically. Each, the leader of his own party, of course received full front the onslaughts of the other. Each had been the candidate of his party for the highest gift within the elective power of the people of the State; but, to the glory of both, in 1898, when Judge HAYWARD was the candidate for governor, Mr. Morton threw aside all political prejudices, sunk old animosities beneath his great love of home and State and the vital principles for which Mr. HAYWARD stood, and, leaving behind him political traditions, supported Mr. HAYWARD.

It is pleasant to recall that these two great leaders, for a quarter of a century, of opposing forces, always personal friends, should stand shoulder to shoulder, heart to heart, and, from the same platform, battle for the same principles and truths and candidates in the last political conflict that Senator HAYWARD should be permitted to enter.

Senator HAYWARD was not well known in Washington, at least in Senatorial circles. We regret that it is so. We are proud of him in Nebraska, and every man in the Senate would have been proud of him as a colleague. But he never occupied a chair as Senator. The silent reaper, Death, cut him off from the world before he was permitted to enter this Capitol as a Senator. He was not permitted to adorn yonder splendid Chamber. His voice had no opportunity to give utterance to his wisdom nor to express his kindliness of heart.

As a Senator he is not judged, either here or at home, and as a Senator we shall not speak of him. For, exalted as that position is, it did not make him great. He was exalted in public opinion before he became Senator. He was a strong man and beloved without the title. The position was but a golden remembrance from his loving fellow-citizens.

He stood high as a lawyer and as a judge. He ranked well as a business man. He was quick of perception, keen in discerning, and of good judgment. His counsel was sought in all affairs as worthy of consideration.

He was a student. His life was one of work. His was an active disposition. No stuffed countenance of feigned learning was his; no assumed "parts;" no arrogated greatness to which he was a stranger. But what he appeared to be he was, and what he was was apparent—a strong-minded, cultured, unassuming man.

He was not a wit. He was not a "brilliant" man as commonly expressed, resplendent in the effulgence of natural abilities alone. That was not the impression he made. His was the trained mind. His was wisdom wrought out with sledge-hammer blows in imperishable steel. His years of careful research and experience had developed a giant intellect. His contact with the world had molded and shaped that intellect into an instrument of power and beauty. His mind was a gem of matchless worth; yet it was dressed and polished only as a pebble wasned down the dancing, chattering brook, by constant collision with the débris by the wayside.

A strong mind, a firmness of purpose, a quickness of resolution, a never-ending devotion to what he laid his hands to, made his attacks irresistible and his defense impregnable.

With these qualities he wrought for the world and humanity, and for this he is loved. It is always by what men accomplish that they are measured; for what they do that they are loved or despised. Men are not measured by what they are capable of doing, but rather by what they do.

I once heard a preacher say "There are many untaught Jenny Linds on Nebraska prairies." But he uttered only half a truth, and he could not prove that half a truth sufficiently to give the world credence in his statement. And the "just as good" theory neither detracts a whit from her glory nor even dims the luster of the splendor of the matchless warbler of "Home, Sweet Home."

Intentions and possibilities are excuses. Doing and accomplishing defend themselves. The heroes of all ages and all people have been those who have done something for their fellow-men, and by it have won their admiration; men whose energy shirked no responsibility imposed by instinct, and whose instinct was fraternal.

This doing for our fellows may not always consist in saving a nation, nor of leading successful armies. It may not be accomplished in the halls of Congress nor from the pulpit. It may be little or great, but in the measure of it is man loved.

Senator HAYWARD'S life is a rebuke to those men who seem to think that thrift and frugality, or rather the fruit of thrift and frugality, is a stamp that distinguishes an enemy of human kind. He was a successful man in business. While the Eastern press, in many instances, has largely overestimated his fortune, nevertheless he was, for the Middle West, considered a well-to-do man.

But no one ever impugned his motives on that account. He came honestly by what he had. It was the fruit of his toilsome effort.

The good that such men do is immeasurable when compared with the utterances of those whose only aim in life is to array unfortunate humanity and worthless humanity against the imaginary bugbear of capital. Capital is the fruit of head and hand. Motive is of the heart and makes neither rich nor poor, but in both alike is good or bad.

These manipulators of popular passion depreciate every quality of energetic, conservative, industrious living. Such men in few instances do much of good for their locality or mankind in general. They are sterile and create nothing. They are simply circumstances. They just stand around.

I like more the man who "inspires the heart;" "incites to better deeds;" and whose counsel and sayings lift humanity up out of the quagmire of gnarling.

It is not difficult to be a "kicker." It is not hard to be a lawyer "who sits on the court-house steps and criticise the Supreme Court decisions." It is easy to tell how to better things. It is easier to condemn than to bless. It is easy to tell what ought to be done for the State, but it takes effort to do something for the State.

As I have said before, Senator HAYWARD wrought for the State. He was a successful man and a true man.

The qualities of a true man are many, but Senator HAYWARD had them. He had energy, and that was necessary, for the sluggard impoverishes himself, foregoes the assistance of his neighbors, and merits the disrespect of all men.

He had method, and without it energy results in much lost motion. He gave to everything application and faithfulness, and it was because of these qualities of a true man that he was successful; for, to use some one else's words—

> The great highroad of human welfare lies along the old highway of steadfast welldoing; and they who are the most persistent and work in the truest spirit will invariably be the most successful.

He was attentive, punctual, and industrious, and "success is more often on the side of the industrious." He was honest in business and honest in the social world. These are the qualities of a true man. He possessed them, and his success was an index that he did possess them, and not the brand of tyranny and oppression.

He was a veteran of the civil war. His comrades loved him. They had pinned their faith to him. They believed in him. They depended upon him for assistance and looked forward with fondest hopes to the time when he should come on to Washington to assume the more active duties of his office. For they believed that he would solve some of the difficulties that stand between them and the Government's generosity in their declining years.

He knew that "the pension roll was a roll of honor." He knew the heartaches and the suffering and the trials that it took to entitle one to a place thereon.

He is dead. Our people mourn because of his death. Our State has lost a splendid citizen and an important factor. The nation is deprived of a valuable counselor; but humanity has left his noble example as an inspiration and hope for coming generations.

Mr. MERCER. Mr. Speaker—

As, long ago, that home-returning band
Of Greeks, victorious o'er outnumbering foes,
The last hard mountain won, saw sweet repose
And safety on the distant ocean strand,
So he at last attained what he had planned,
Triumphant over hate and envy rose,
And saw admittance to the seats of those
Most honored of our nation, in his hand.
But rest and ease were not for him to ask;
He would be building still with them that build;
He sought the cross, now that he had the crown.
And as he dressed him to his lofty task,
With manhood's aspiration unfulfilled,
Death stretched a grisly hand and struck him down.

"United States Senator-elect MONROE LELAND HAYWARD died at Nebraska City on the morning of Tuesday, December 5, 1899, aged 59 years. He was born at Willsboro, Essex County, N. Y., December 22, 1840."

Senator HAYWARD's youth was spent on a farm. He received a common-school education, and was also permitted to attend seminaries of learning and select schools at intervals. He made the best possible use of all his advantages.

Early in 1861 he enlisted in the Twenty-second New York Volunteer Infantry. In October of that year, however, he became a member of the Fifth New York Cavalry. With that he served in the Shenandoah Valley during the summer of 1862. He did special courier service for General Banks during that year and also participated in each of the battles of the Banks-Jackson campaign.

In the autumn of 1862 his health was completely broken down. Therefore he was discharged from the Army and returned to civil life. Then he commenced the struggle for completing his education and also entered upon the study of law. By teaching district schools and by manual labor he subsisted himself and became a student at Fort Edward Institute, remaining until he graduated with honor. He worked his way through college by teaching mathematics, by bookkeeping, and by strenuous efforts, manual and mental. Self-reliance and self-denial made him sturdy and efficient.

Directly after graduating he began, at Fort Edward, N. Y., in the office of Judge Wait, to read law. He subsequently completed his legal studies at Whitewater, Wis., and was admitted to the bar in 1867. Then he located permanently at Nebraska City.

Senator HAYWARD, from the beginning to the end of his useful life, carried determination and persistent industry into all his enterprises and undertakings. Every task which confronted him was tackled with a persistent pluck that could result only in achievement.

The citizens of Nebraska City, Otoe County, and the State have honored him by assigning him to various positions of trust and responsibility. He was a member of the board of education for this city. He was a delegate in the constitutional convention of 1875. He was many times chairman of the Republican State convention.

In private and domestic life he was a model of fidelity, industry, and temperance. His love of home and family (which is primary patriotism) was only equaled by his love of his country and its institutions.

In 1898 he was chosen by the Republican party of the State as its candidate for the position of governor. He made a strong and very effective canvass, speaking in nearly every organized county of the Commonwealth. The labors then performed did much to undermine his robust and powerful physique.

Being defeated by Governor Poynter, he at once became, by pressure of his friends and admirers, the candidate of the Republican party for a place in the United States Senate, and was, after many ballots, finally chosen to that honorable position by the legislature of Nebraska in March, 1899.

It seems cruel that just as a man has entered upon a field of usefulness and eminence toward which his ambition and efforts have long been directed he should be stricken down and all the hopes of his friends shattered. His death, deplored by family, friends, and neighbors as a personal sorrow and irreparable loss, is a State and national calamity.

His steady fidelity to those principles of finance which alone can give an unfluctuating purchasing power to American currency would have made him a prominent and efficient member of the Senate.

But "Death opens the gate of Fame and shuts the gate of Envy after it."

These words appeared in the Conservative, a paper published in Nebraska City, the home of Senator HAYWARD, and were written by the editor, Hon. J. Sterling Morton, formerly Secretary of Agriculture.

I think it fitting that what I have to say be introduced by the words just read, because they come from a friend and neighbor of many years and from a man who was thoroughly acquainted with the late Senator HAYWARD in all his walks in life. Senator HAYWARD and myself moved to Nebraska in 1867, he locating at Nebraska City, in Otoe County, while I followed my parents to Brownville, about 23 miles south. While a boy in my teens I met Senator HAYWARD in his office in Nebraska City, and from that time until the day of his death my acquaintance with him was close and my friendship for him of the strongest kind.

As a private citizen, Mr. HAYWARD always took an interest in the affairs of the community in which he resided. He was public-spirited and always ambitious that the city of Nebraska City should rival all other towns in the State in point of importance both as to population and industries. He always took an interest in any new enterprises which were suggested for the benefit of the city, and contributed often in a financial way to the upbuilding and growth of different institutions. He came to our State as a Republican in politics, but never took an active part except to further the interests of his friends and associates. His Republicanism was of the stalwart brand, and whether as a delegate to a convention or as presiding officer of it he did all he could to uphold that kind of Republicanism. Aside from serving his constituency in the State constitutional convention and acting for a time as district judge, to which he was appointed as successor of Judge Mitchell, a neighbor and friend, till the Republican party in our State nominated him for the office of governor in the year 1898, he never was a candidate for office. He rather seemed to shrink from the trials and tribulations following in the wake of office-seeking and office-holding, and was content to be an humble member of the party and contribute his share toward its success.

The Republican press of our State in the year 1898 advocated him as a suitable man to be made the member of Congress from the First district in our State, and in the alternative that he stand as a candidate for governor. He resisted this pressure for some time, till finally it became so great that he was compelled to surrender to it, and then it was he gave up the idea of standing for Congress and announced to his friends he would accept the nomination for governor if tendered him. The Republican press of Nebraska and the Republicans generally had made his canvass for the nomination so complete that when the convention met he was nominated by acclamation and by unanimous vote of all delegates present.

The campaign which followed was a memorable one, and the fact that the legislature which was elected at this time was Republican and that the opposition majority on governor was reduced to the small figure of about 3,000 is due more to the magnificent campaign made by Senator HAYWARD than by the efforts of anyone else in our State. He traveled from one end of our Commonwealth to the other, visited almost every county, addressed hundreds of meetings, and conducted himself in such a gentlemanly and dignified manner as to command the respect of people of all parties, and could that campaign have lasted another thirty days I have no doubt but that the success he was making when election day came would have resulted, so far as himself was concerned, differently, and that he would have been declared governor of our State by a majority of the voters thereof. He overtaxed his strength in this campaign and his death is undoubtedly due to the overexertions thereof.

When our legislature convened, being Republican in both branches, attention of the members, especially the Republican members, was called to the magnificent campaign just waged by Senator HAYWARD, and the legislature was asked by the Republicans throughout the State and by the Republican press to select him as Senator in the United States Senate. The legislators took up this recommendation, coming as it did unsolicited from Senator HAYWARD, and after a struggle of many days he was finally elected the Senator from our State. But the contest, both in the campaign for governor and in the struggle for the Senatorship, weakened his physique to such an extent that death claimed him before he could take the oath of office. He died, as he lived, among his friends and neighbors at Nebraska City, at the home he loved so well, surrounded by his family and intimate friends. His death not only removed from our State a statesman and an estimable citizen, but it deprived the Republican party of the influence and strength of a Senator in the Senate of the United States.

Although he had been elected for several months the election came after the Fifty-fifth Congress had adjourned and too late for him to file his credentials in the Senate in open session and receive the oath of office. In the meantime his illness weakened him so rapidly that he was carried away a few hours after the Fifty-sixth Congress convened in session and too late for him to take the oath of office in that Congress. In this respect his case is almost without precedent; in fact I do not recall any precedent of this character. In this connection I am reminded that since Nebraska was admitted into the Union our people have elected ten different citizens to the United States Senate and only four of them are living to-day; and remarkable as it may seem, three of the men died in the year 1899.

I might add that during the same year a member of Congress elected to the Fifty-sixth Congress also died before he could serve his constituents in the active work of his office. In reviewing the record in this respect I notice that since Nebraska was admitted into the Union 27 men have been elected Representatives in Congress, 7 of whom have passed away. Of the 27 elected, one of them, the late T. M. Marquette, of Lincoln, served as Representative in Congress only two days. The brevity of his term was due to the fact that Nebraska had just been admitted into the Union, and only two days of the Congress to which he was elected remained after the State was admitted. Representatives Laird, Welch, and Greene all died while serving a term in Congress.

Senator HAYWARD had many strong points in his character, which always appealed to the masses when made known to them. He was an unassuming gentleman. He did not belong to the skyrocket class. He was not meteoric at any time. He was a good lawyer, full of the knowledge of his profession and at the same time full of hard common sense. He thoroughly investigated subjects and situations before committing himself, and then after he took a stand he did not change his views. He never played to the galleries. He was not in the habit of going on dress parade, politically speaking, in order to catch the plaudits of the crowd. His judgment was sound and his opinions were always reliable. His advice was a criterion by which most anyone could guide his steps either in the practice of law or in the duties of citizenship.

He detested hypocrisy in every form. Perhaps one of the strongest points about Senator HAYWARD was his love of family and home. He was an ideal husband and father, and this fact impressed itself upon his friends and neighbors wherever his presence went and wherever his influence was felt.

He had a happy family, a contented family. Senator HAYWARD, by his industry and economy, had accumulated a goodly share of this world's goods, and he always delighted in placing it at the disposal of his wife and children. In this respect he teaches us a lesson, which is indeed a most valuable one, that love of family and home is really the corner stone of our best civilization. It is always a check upon the bad influences of life and at the same time it makes the foundation of one's upbuilding so strong and secure that the man who was as strong in it as Senator HAYWARD need have no fear of the average dangers which beset mankind in this changing life of ours. Senator HAYWARD served his country in time of war, and perhaps there learned many lessons which proved of value to him in after years. In war he was the same plain, unassuming man that he was in peace, but he was just as good a soldier as he was a citizen and lawyer.

During the campaign of 1898 in our State the old soldiers flocked to his standard irrespective of party, and some of the most interesting scenes I observed during that campaign grew out of the renewal of friendships between HAYWARD and some of the boys in blue who had followed him side by side in many a hotly contested field. It seems they knew him well in those trying times, had seen his courage and his manhood tested in all kind of fires, and were glad of the chance which had finally come to them to place upon his head the distinguished crown of governorship or Senatorship. The old soldiers in Nebraska irrespective of party voted for him, and I think to this fact is due in the main the splendid result he obtained on election day.

Senator HAYWARD has passed away, but the lessons learned from his life by the people of our State will live forever. We hope to profit by the good example he set for us, and in the days to come we will ever remember his precepts and his teachings as well as the manner in which he exemplified them.

Mr. Speaker, I think it but proper and fitting that I conclude these remarks by adding to them the resolutions passed by the Bar Association of Otoe County, Nebr. For over thirty years Mr. HAYWARD, as a practioner, and Judge HAYWARD, as a judge, either practiced law or dispensed it, and these resolutions show the respect and confidence in which he was held by the members of that bar.

The resolutions are as follows:

Judge Paul Jessen, chairman of the committee, read the resolutions prepared by the committee.

MONROE LELAND HAYWARD.

Whereas it has seemed meet to an overruling Providence to remove from our midst, and from his scenes of usefulness, our brother, Hon. MONROE L. HAYWARD, cut down in the prime and vigor of life and at the beginning of an extended career of honor, usefulness, and fame:

Resolved, That it is fitting that his brethren of the bar of Otoe County unite in the expression of our profound sorrow at what is a calamity to our city, an irreparable loss to our citizens, and a personal loss to those who have been associated with him daily, in the practice of our chosen profession for a long series of years, and that we make a matter of record in the forum where many of his successes were achieved, a tribute of his brethren to his long and useful service as a lawyer, a legislator, and a judge; his great powers, his honest record in public and private affairs, his loyalty to his friends and to his nobility of character, all which go to make his name and fame the heritage of our community, and have endeared him to the people of the State and to his brethren of the bar.

Resolved, That in his life and record we recognize in our deceased brother great power as a close analytical reasoner, both upon the principles of law as well as in the domain of fact, before the juries of the country. Without claiming to be possessed of great eloquence, as that term is usually understood, he was easily the strongest member of the bar of the county, if not in the State, in his discussion of facts, in his presentation of the salient points of his case, and in the skill with which he carried conviction to the minds of those whom he was trying to convince, and his successes in that forum attest his preeminent ability. In the discussion of legal propositions he was clear, logical, and convincing, displaying great acumen and analysis and a happy faculty in the application of legal principles to the facts as they developed.

He was a man of great force of character, great kindness of heart, in that he was always willing to assist the distressed with his purse or advice, and he was of unquestioned integrity.

As the judge of this court he displayed the essential qualities of strict impartiality, fearlessness in his decisions, being always guided by what he believed to be right, and solicitous only that impartial justice be done between the contending parties. His insight into the merits of cases was intuitive, and he rarely erred in arriving at a just decision in any cause submitted to his judgment. He knew the law, and exposition of it adorned his opinion, unobscured by those special and personal influences which always surround a subject in controversy.

He lived among us for years, and left upon the records the imprint of his strong individuality. He was a safe and conscientious counselor, faithful to his clients and zealous in defense of their rights, and no man among us had in a larger degree the confidence and respect of the whole community.

His gifts were varied and many. He successfully conducted great financial enterprises, and he understood and was versed in the laws governing trade and commerce and the true principles underlying our financial system. He never sacrificed his honest convictions in the hope of selfish gain nor agreed with the mistakes of the majority, but strenuously combatted their fallacies and errors.

He was an open, honest, indefatigable opponent and a true and loyal friend. He knew his foes and they also knew him. His integrity was never doubted; he was above the suspicion of corruption; he neither bought nor sold, and he has left to his family the legacy of a good name and untarnished reputation.

The success he achieved in the political field was great, but his methods were clean and honest, and no suspicion of bribery or wrongdoing clouded the ultimate success, and the great pity is that, standing upon the threshold of a new and more influential career, he should be stricken down before he had the opportunity of demonstrating his capabilities and force in the new field. To have achieved the goal of his ambition and then to have the cup snatched from his lips as he was about to quaff the wine of success, is a forceful and sad reminder of the fleeting character of earthly honors and of the emptiness of human ambition.

Resolved, That we condole with his family in their great loss as we grieve for our own personal and professional loss in his untimely decease, and that we report these resolutions to the court from a desire to testify to our affection and make a record of our appreciation of his eminent qualities of head and heart that distinguished our departed brother, and request that they be spread at length upon the records of this court and made a part thereof.

It is further ordered that a certified copy of these resolutions, under the seal of the court, be furnished the family of the deceased.

PAUL JESSEN.
E. F. WARREN.
W. C. SLOAN.
JOHN A. ROONEY.
D. T. HAYDEN.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, it was not my good pleasure to enjoy an extended personal acquaintance with the late Senator from Nebraska. Living in an adjoining State, I knew of him and his work, and was therefore greatly pleased last year during the summer to have the privilege of spending some four or five days with him and becoming in a limited degree acquainted with the man and his characteristics. From that brief acquaintance I feel persuaded that the country at large has lost a valuable counselor in the higher branch of the National Congress.

I met him in Montana, traveled on the same car with him through the Dakotas, and spent a few days with him in one of the Dakota towns. He impressed me as a man of strong, splendid physical characteristics, possessed of a mind to correspond with his body. As one of his colleagues has said, he was not a man of great brilliancy of mind, but a man rather of splendid judgment, of untiring energy, and of unswerving honesty. And from what acquaintance I had with him at that time, I looked forward in anticipation that in the broader field opening before him he would add to the already splendid reputation he had attained in his State as an upright citizen, as a safe counselor, as an incorruptible judge, and as a man upon whose judgment all of his acquaintances and friends could rely.

It was to me a matter of personal sorrow that I could not meet him here in Washington and that he could not enter upon the career to which the people of Nebraska had called him.

I can not add anything to what has been said. I can only say that in my judgment the nation at large has lost one of its most useful citizens, that the members of his family have lost a devoted husband and father, and the State of Nebraska a citizen who has done so much for the State in the past and whose record will be entwined with the best years of his State up to the time when death claimed him and he laid down to an eternal rest.

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, I would briefly, though earnestly, render tribute to the life, the works, and the worth of MONROE L. HAYWARD, late a Senator from Nebraska.

Favored by only a slight acquaintance with him for several years, yet I came to know the measure of the man, his intents and purposes. His was the life of a true American; his ambitions and aspirations, his hopes, and desires were of and for his home and his country. The persistent pursuit of purpose, the fidelity to friends, faith, and party, together with the strict integrity of his manhood's years, bespoke the fact that in childhood and youth he had had the sweet, the tender, and the watchful care of a good mother.

In that little hamlet in New York State this boy and youth had a brave, safe, wise counselor and guide. Who among us can make proper estimate of the great value of the impressions made by the mother on the son, or of their far-reaching influences upon his after life? The filial lessons learned about the family hearth are never forgotten, and the maternal impressions left upon the plastic mind can never be wholly effaced.

What a world for good does not the glorious motherhood of America now control.

Read all the languages of earth,
Compare each with another;
Did ever one a word give birth
Like that dear and loved word—mother?

We first hear of him when, in his twentieth year, at the breaking out of our great civil war, he enlisted in his country's service. His was the will to do and to dare; on his country's altar he laid his all; in the defense of our flag risked his life. Never before then had this world witnessed such unselfish patriotism, such grand sacrifices to principle, or such heroic devotion to his country and flag as was displayed by those heroes, the noble volunteers of 1861 to 1865.

The irksome duties of the camp, the watchful guard kept day and night, the long and tedious march through storm and mud, the bivouac in snow and rain, the struggle with disease on cots of pain or with brave foes upon the battle line defending flag and country, are my highest conception of true patriotism.

Then came the news, war has begun,
Brothers engaged in bloody fray:
The advances, the charge, a battle won,
The shallow trench, the mangled son,
The humble prayer, "Thy will be done,"
And bowed heads turning gray,
The hospital, the prison pen,
The skeletons that once were men,
The unmarked graves in shadowy glen,
Come back to us to-day.

One-third of a century ago MONROE L. HAYWARD struck out for himself. To carve out a home and a future he sought the boundless prairies of the West. He became a pioneer, and in 1867 located at Nebraska City, in my State.

Even then the buffalo and Indian roamed at their own sweet will over those great plains, now covered by rich fields and gardens, with thriving towns and villages, peopled by a generous, a happy, an intellectual, and a patriotic people.

To the pioneers who in the past through countless trials and hardships blazed the way for a home, church, school, and the press, we owe a profound and lasting gratitude.

Senator HAYWARD began the practice of the law, and by close attention and constant application he took a high place in the profession in our State. On our level and fertile prairies, with vision unobstructed so far as the eye can reach, men's minds broaden, their sympathies expand, and humane aspirations and hopes have boundless range. Senator HAYWARD advanced; he entered the judiciary; he became district judge.

He succeeded financially; for that country he became a wealthy man, yet not at the expense of conscience.

The following incident, told by his tried friend, Dr. Whitten, of Nebraska City, illustrates the character of the man:

Mr. HAYWARD had rented a farm to a poor though honest farmer for a cash rent per acre, money to be paid after the marketing of the crops. Just as all was ready for harvest, by a storm of hail they were beaten to the ground. The honest tenant came to HAYWARD and proposed to mortgage his stock, implements, and furniture to secure the debt, that he might have an opportunity to raise another crop. But Mr. HAYWARD said, "I have only lost the interest on the money that I have invested in my farm, while you have lost your seed and all your year's labor. You do not owe me anything." And he aided the farmer in making another crop.

Senator HAYWARD'S ambitions were for his family and country. His family relations were tender and true, and in the sacred precincts of the family circle his great wealth of affection was freely shown, and he was at once the protector, counselor, companion, and friend.

That he succeeded, the happy home he built, the reputation he sustained, the friends he made, and the honors we accord him to-day doth well attest. The world is better because he lived; he quitted himself like a man and left an example worthy of emulation by all men.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. Speaker, Senator MONROE L. HAYWARD was a prominent character in the history of Nebraska. After having served his country as a volunteer in the dark days of the civil war he came to our State to establish a home and to practice his profession. For years he was a leading member of the bar and was honored by being appointed to a position on the bench. In 1898 his party called upon him to lead in the campaign, and he made a fair and vigorous canvass for the governorship. The legislature having been carried by his party, he was elected to the Senate of the United States, but Providence saw fit to call him before he entered upon his active duties. Senator HAYWARD was a man of broad and liberal conduct toward those who differed with him upon public questions. I met him frequently during the campaign of 1898, and in no instance did he depart from the kindly and courteous manner that always possessed him. When the news of his death reached me, I felt that not only had the State lost an able citizen, but it was a personal loss to me; for while differing politically, I had come to look upon him as a warm friend.

When on occasions like this we remember the one who has fallen in our midst and who no more will share our responsibilities and labors, it is but natural and fitting that our review of his life should be fraught with the utmost feeling of tenderness. Death is a fact the knowledge of which in its mysterious potency does much to influence the action and shape the destiny of men. As we pause in remembrance of the years of unrelenting toil and unyielding perseverance of effort, fed by the hidden spring of manly determination and absolute adherence to a great purpose, culminating in lofty character, broad intellectual capacity, and the greatest of all genius, the ability to accomplish by real labor, we wonder how the fact of death, which seems to rob us of all the qualities and attainments of our departed colaborer, can be reconciled with the best and truest end of man.

We see one after another of those whose work seems only partially done, whose purposes are not fully accomplished, and whose lives give promise of much that will be useful and beneficial to their fellow-men, stricken down by the ruthless hand that neither pities nor tarries, and we are tempted to believe that all the toil of preparation, the store of wisdom, and the power of accomplishment are in the fact of death lost to us forever. But not so. A truer philosophy and a calmer reason comes to our aid, and a voice cries out within us in spite of our fears, in spite of our doubts and forebodings, that neither death nor any principle, power, or law can destroy and obliterate the character and influence of man. Towering above all other elements, whether inherent or attained, man's moral nature is his most valuable estate. His moral purposes find expression in his actions, and actions repeated become habits. Habits, whether good or bad, in course of time ripen into principles which are the elements entering into the construction of character, which is immortal. No thought ever dies. The influence of no act ever ceases. The power of no example is ever lost. The energy of pure principle is a living force that no power can destroy, and the character builded of such principle can know no death.

We share to-day the common sorrow that this bereavement brings. Our sympathy is extended to the home from which husband and father is missed and mourned. We appreciate the loss to the community of one whom many delighted to honor. We realize in some measure the loss of a State bereaved of her chosen representative, as also the loss of the nation, one of whose chief council has fallen. Still, in the midst of sorrow and the memory of loss, we are assured that in recounting the forces and elements that make for elevation, progress, and an ideal civilization nothing is or can be lost.

MONROE L. HAYWARD lives! In thought, purpose, and character, in energy and influence, he lives and can not die. While we wait our time to meet the same grim messenger that he has met, while we endure the doubts and fears attendant upon death's relentless agency in changing relation and environment, while we bow of necessity to death's demand upon the flesh, we exult in the fact that is an intuition—the untaught language of our inner nature—which speaks to the world, saying that to man in moral nature and achievement there is no death. In this confidence we approach the future with the prayer—

O Thou of soul and sense and breath,
The ever present Giver,
Unto Thy mighty angel, Death,
All flesh Thou dost deliver;
What most we cherish we resign,
For life and death alike are Thine,
Who reignest Lord forever!

Mr. NEVILLE. Mr. Speaker, I should not feel that I had performed my duty as a representative of Nebraska if I failed to use this opportunity to express the great sorrow felt by all Nebraskans by reason of the death of Senator MONROE L. HAYWARD.

My personal acquaintance with him extended over only a few years, but there was nothing hidden in his character, and an acquaintance with him of however short duration revealed as a part of his great individuality the three striking qualities of love, justice, and charity toward his fellow-beings.

I knew of him as one knows the illustrious persons of any State or country long before it was my pleasure to know him personally.

From the members of his political party, which differed from mine, I heard of him as one demanding honesty of purpose and faithful performance of pledges as a prerequisite to party success or his support. He was not an office seeker, but at all times possessed the confidence of the members of his party throughout the State, constantly declining political honors in favor of his fellow-workers, yet universally mentioned as the ideal standard bearer when the task in hand appeared to be herculean.

After his party had for a few years occupied a degraded position in his State, resulting from a criminal and convicted leadership, and while a felon's cell still held the spoilsmen, Judge HAYWARD was called to the helm and landed his party with a majority in the legislative branch, and for this service he was rewarded with the high office of United States Senator.

From the members of the legal profession, who are best qualified to determine judicial character, I learned that he was a laborious, able, and just judge, always impartial in his rulings, correct in his legal conclusions, genial to the officers of his court, obliging to the witnesses and litigants, and merciful to the convicted unfortunates.

His ability, temperate and frugal habits, and industry enabled him to acquire sufficient of this world's goods for the comfort of his own family and to largely accommodate his needy neighbors, and it is said of him, to his great credit in this day and age, that when a debtor sought of him an extension of time, he got not only the extension asked, but along with it more money to tide him over his perplexity.

Coming into manhood in a period in our history when the great question of human liberty was about to dismember man's ideal government, he enlisted, in 1861, in the Twenty-second New York Infantry Volunteers, and, being transferred to the Fifth New York Cavalry, served his country until sickness and disability caused by exposure in active army campaign compelled his discharge.

Those of us who were near his age and who with him were enthused by patriotism inspired by our country's call and danger can realize what must have been his chagrin when notified that he was not physically able to longer battle in the ranks for a united country.

Words in eulogy, no matter how numerous and high sounding, can only interest those who could not know him personally. To his acquaintances his greatness was beyond the descriptive powers of combined language. Word painting can in no sense condole the bereaved family surviving. To them stern reality was ineffaceably lodged when the heart of their loved protector ceased to beat, and their only solace is the knowledge that the inestimably good must in the future be rewarded with greater opportunities.

Day after day, year after year, and century after century the minister has said to the mourning throng, "It is God's will;" and with as much uniformity the mourning widow, while shaking her head in agonizing dissent, has murmured to herself, "Why is it I?" forgetting for the time being that I, we, and all are recorded to suffer when God's will discerns less use for our protectors here than in the great realm to which we are all heir. We are too apt to feel that this one of the trials through which all must pass in fulfilling the decree of God has come to us too soon and that it would have pressed more lightly upon other shoulders. Yet upon calm reflection we must see that the hope of long life to us and our dear ones is equally and from the same cause and with the same right the hope of the entire human family.

Let us hope in this instance that God's mercy will aid recuperating nature, and that the desolate widow, with the advantages obtained by contact with such a noble husband, may live long to continue the life work so well carried forward by both.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BOUTELL of Illinois). And now, as a further mark of respect to the deceased, and in accordance with the resolutions which have been adopted, the House will stand adjourned until 12 o'clock noon on Monday next.

Accordingly (at 1 o'clock and 32 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. HOAR, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2352) to authorize the judges of the district courts of the United States to appoint stenographic reporters, fix the duties and compensation thereof, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments.

Mr. PRITCHARD, from the Committee on Patents, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2839) for the relief of Hyland C. Kirk and others, assignees of Addison C. Fletcher, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 794) referring to the Court of Claims the claim of William E. Woodbridge for compensation for the use by the United States of his invention relating to projectiles, for which letters patent were ordered to issue to him March 25, 1852, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

REPORT ON FOOD ADULTERATIONS.

Mr. PLATT of New York. I am directed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. MASON] on the 2d instant, to report it with an amendment in the nature of a substitute, and I ask for its present consideration.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

The amendment of the Committee on Printing was to strike out all after the word "Resolved" and to insert:

That there be printed for the use of the Senate 2,500 copies of Senate Report 516, first session Fifty-sixth Congress, being the report of and testimony taken by the Committee on Manufactures on the adulteration of food products.

Mr. COCKRELL. Does that include the testimony that has been taken recently?

Mr. PLATT of New York. No; it does not.

Mr. COCKRELL. I thought the first resolution—the one proposed to be amended—provided for printing the testimony recently taken.

Mr. PLATT of New York. No; it does not.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the first resolution be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. MASON on the 2d instant, as follows:

Resolved, That 5,000 copies of the testimony taken before the Committee on Manufactures of the Senate relative to adulterated foods, together with the report of the committee submitted thereon, be printed for distribution under the rules of the Senate.

Mr. COCKRELL. Has that document been already printed?

Mr. PLATT of New York. Yes; it was printed in the usual way, the ordinary number of copies.

Mr. COCKRELL. This is simply for a reprint?

Mr. PLATT of New York. That is all.

Mr. HARRIS. There have been a number of copies of the testimony taken by the committee all during the summer and fall printed for the use of the committee, but not the number prescribed here, that are desired for distribution. The committee was engaged all during last summer and fall and even during a part of this winter in taking testimony.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is exactly what I wanted to know. I have had applications for copies of the report and the testimony.

Mr. HARRIS. As I understand it, the resolution proposes to have additional copies printed for the use of the Senate.

Mr. COCKRELL. Of the pending report?

Mr. HARRIS. Of the pending report—the report of the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on Printing.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

AMENDMENT TO INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas submitted an amendment providing for the appointment of a commission in each town in the Choctaw, Chickasaw, Creek, and Cherokee nations of Indians, to consist of one member to be appointed by the executive of such nation, one member to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior, and one member to be selected by the town or city council, intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

CIVIL GOVERNMENT FOR ALASKA.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 3419) making further provision for a civil government for Alaska, and for other purposes; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

GOVERNMENT OF PUERTO RICO.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I submit an amendment intended to be proposed by me to the bill (H. R. 8245) temporarily to provide revenues for the relief of the island of Puerto Rico, and for other purposes. I ask that the amendment lie on the table and be printed.

I desire to give notice that on next Thursday, at the conclusion of the morning business, I shall submit some remarks on the same and upon the pending legislation.

The amendment was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed, as follows:

Amend section 10 so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 10. All articles coming into the United States from Puerto Rico, or going into Puerto Rico from the United States, shall be admitted free of duty; but this act shall not be construed as extending the Constitution of the United States, or any part thereof, over Puerto Rico, and it is hereby declared that the Constitution of the United States is not extended over Puerto Rico."

HEARINGS BEFORE COMMITTEE ON INDIAN AFFAIRS.

Mr. THURSTON. I present hearings taken before the Committee on Indian Affairs and the subcommittee having in charge the Indian appropriation bill. I move that the hearings be printed as a document for the use of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

LOAN OF NAVAL EQUIPMENT TO MILITARY SCHOOLS.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I desire to ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1023) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to loan naval equipment to certain military schools.

The Secretary read the bill; and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with an amendment, on page 1, line 12, after the word "for," to insert "conducting upon some body of water suitable for such drills;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized, upon the application of the governor of any State having seacoast line or bordering on one or more of the Great Lakes, to direct the Secretary of the Navy to furnish to one well-established military school in that State desiring to afford its cadets instruction in elementary seamanship one fully equipped man-of-war's cutter for every 20 cadets in actual attendance and such other equipment as may be spared and be deemed adequate for instruction in elementary seamanship: Provided, That the said school shall have adequate facilities for conducting upon some body of water suitable for such drills cutter drill and shall have in actual attendance at least 150 cadets in uniform receiving military instruction and quartered in barracks under military regulation, and shall have the capacity to quarter and educate at the same time 150 cadets: And provided further, That the Secretary of the Navy shall require a bond in each case in double the value of the property for the care and safe-keeping thereof and for the return of the same when required.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to have just a short explanation of the bill, and while that explanation is being made to have such order in the Senate that we can hear it.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. The bill simply authorizes the Secretary of the Navy to furnish to schools founded for naval instruction men-of-war's cutters, of which there is a considerable surplus in the Navy Department, the cutters to be used for educating the cadets; instructing them, in the language of the bill, in elementary seamanship.

Mr. COCKRELL. The very point I wanted to know was whether the cutters would have to be built for this purpose or whether they are already in existence and are simply to be loaned.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. They are already in existence. It has been the custom for years to loan them to military institutions. There is a very large military academy in Indiana which can not, under existing law, avail itself of the privileges which other schools enjoy. This bill simply authorizes the Secretary of the Navy to put schools similarly situated to that upon the same footing as all other military or naval schools. The school in Indiana is located on an interior lake, and under existing law the power to permit the use of the cutters is restricted to schools which are located upon the Great Lakes or in States having a seacoast line.

Mr. COCKRELL. How would the cutter, if it is an interior lake, be gotten there?

Mr. FAIRBANKS. They are but small boats, only about 20 feet long, and can be hauled readily on railroad cars. They are comparatively small boats.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8347) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. CULLOM. I ask that as the reading of the bill proceeds the amendments made by the committee may be acted upon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with; that it be read for amendment, and that the committee amendments be first acted upon. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The order is made.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill. The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the subhead "Clerks and messengers to committees," on page 5, line 7, after the word "Retrenchment," to insert "Enrolled Bills, Geological Survey, Railroads, Pacific Railroads, Pacific Islands and Puerto Rico, Philippines, Relations with Cuba, Interoceanic Canals;" in line 12, after the words "Woman Suffrage," to insert "and;" in line 13, after the word "Mining," to strike out "and Construction of Nicaragua Canal;" and in line 16, before the word "dollars," to strike out "two thousand two hundred and twenty" and insert "seventeen thousand eight hundred and sixty;" so as to make the clause read:

each; clerks to committees on Woman Suffrage and Mines and Mining, at $2,100 each; in all, $117,860.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 17, before the word "clerks," to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "twenty-two," and in line 19, before the word "dollars," to strike out "forty-five thousand" and insert "thirty-nine thousand six hundred;" so as to make the clause read:

For 22 clerks to committees, at $1,800 each, $39,600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Office of Sergeant-at-Arms and Doorkeeper," on page 6, line 20, to increase the number of laborers from 25 to 41, and in line 24, to increase the total appropriation for "Office of Sergeant-at-Arms and Doorkeeper" from $125,224 to $136,744.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, line 10, to reduce the number of annual clerks to Senators who are not chairmen of committees from 35 to 30, and in line 12, to reduce the appropriation for annual clerks to Senators who are not chairmen of committees from $52,500 to $45,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "For contingent expenses," on page 9, line 3, to increase the appropriation for folding speeches and pamphlets from $4,000 to $6,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, line 13, to increase the appropriation for miscellaneous items, exclusive of labor, from $25,000 to $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, line 1, to increase the appropriation for repairs of Maltby Building from $1,000 to $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Congressional Directory," on page 11, line 2, before the words "Joint Committee," to strike out "present;" so as to make the clause read:

For expenses of compiling, preparing, and indexing the Congressional Directory, to be expended under the direction of the Joint Committee on Printing, $1,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "House of Representatives," on page 14, line 3, after the word "Pensions," to insert "Insular Affairs," and in line 7, before the word "thousand," to strike out "fifty-five" and insert "fifty-seven;" so as to make the clause read:

Clerks and messengers to committees: For clerk to the Committee on Ways and Means, $3,000; assistant clerk, $1,600; messenger, $1,200; janitor, $720; clerk to the Committee on Appropriations, $3,000; assistant clerk and stenographer, $2,000; messenger and assistant clerk, $1,200; clerks to Committees on Accounts, Agriculture, Banking and Currency, Claims, District of Columbia, Elections, Foreign Affairs, Interstate and Foreign Commerce, Indian Affairs, Invalid Pensions, Judiciary, Merchant Marine and Fisheries, Military Affairs, Naval Affairs, Post-Office and Post-Roads, Public Buildings and Grounds, Public Lands, Rivers and Harbors, War Claims, Pensions, Insular Affairs, and clerk to continue Digest of Claims under resolution of March 7, 1888, at $2,000 each; and for assistant clerk to the Committee on War Claims, $1,200; in all, $57,920.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Library of Congress," on page 20, line 13, to strike out "Executive department" and insert "General administration;" in line 14, before the word "thousand," to strike out "five" and insert "six;" in line 17, before the word "hundred," to strike out "nine" and insert "one thousand two," and in line 20, before the word "hundred," to strike out "fourteen thousand six" and insert "fifteen thousand nine;" so as to make the clause read:

To enable the Attorney-General to employ such assistant attorneys, agents, stenographers, and experts to aid the United States attorney for said court as may be necessary to conduct the business of the Court of Private Land Claims during the fiscal year 1901, $8,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 130, line 7, to increase the salary of commissioner in Yellowstone National Park from $1,000 to $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 130, line 19, after the word "dollars," to insert "1 clerk, at $1,600, 1 clerk, at $1,400;" in line 21, before the word "clerks," to strike out "five" and insert "three;" in line 25, after the word "dollars," to strike out "2 laborers" and insert "1 assistant messenger; 1 laborer;" and on page 131, line 3, before the word "dollars," to strike out "forty-three thousand eight hundred and eighty" and insert "forty-four thousand five hundred and forty;" so as to make the clause read:

Court of Claims: For salaries of five judges of the Court of Claims, at $4,500 each; chief clerk, $3,000; assistant clerk, $2,000; bailiff, $1,500; 1 clerk, at $1,600; 1 clerk, at $1,400; 3 clerks, at $1,200 each; 1 messenger; 1 stenographer, $1,200; 3 firemen; 3 watchmen; 1 elevator conductor, $720; 1 assistant messenger; 1 laborer; and 2 charwomen; in all, $44,540.

The next amendment was, on page 131, after line 3, to insert:

To defray the cost of the employment of auditors in the Court of Claims, to be disbursed under the direction of the court, $8,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 132, line 18, after the word "service," to strike out:

For the purpose of carrying into effect the provisions of this section the head of each of the Executive Departments of the Government is hereby directed to certify, from time to time, to the Civil Service Commission the names of all persons employed in his Department, or any of the branches of the public service subordinate thereto, permanently incapacitated from any cause from performing the public service in which he is engaged, and upon receipt of said certification the Civil Service Commission shall strike the names of said persons from the classified service.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

Mr. CULLOM. The Committee on Appropriations have some additional amendments, which I desire to move, that have not been included in the bill as printed. On page 36, line 21, I move to strike out the word "three" and insert "four;" so as to read "4 clerks of class 4."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CULLOM. I ask that when the different amendments which are offered are adopted the clerks be authorized to change the totals.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, that will be done in all cases.

Mr. CULLOM. On page 75, line 18, in the provision in respect of Oklahoma Territory, after the word "location," I move to insert:

Provided, further, That said legislative assembly shall not make any appropriation or enter into any contract for a permanent capitol building.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CULLOM. On page 78, after the word "dollars," in line 3, I move to insert "2 chiefs of division, at $2,000 each."

Mr. COCKRELL. Where does that come in?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On page 78.

Mr. CULLOM. After the word "dollars," in line 3, page 78. It has reference to the Adjutant-General's Office.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CULLOM. I desire in the same line to strike out "twelve" and insert "ten;" so as to read "10 clerks of class 4." That will reduce the number of clerks. The total may be changed by the clerks.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CULLOM. On page 87, line 14, after the word "copyists," I move to insert "20 copyists, at $840 each."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CULLOM. On page 87, line 15, I move to strike out "1 assistant messenger" and insert in lieu thereof the words "3 messengers."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CULLOM. In line 16, page 87, I move to strike out "two" and insert "three," and to change the total in lines 16 and 17.

Mr. PETTIGREW. What page is that?

Mr. CULLOM. Page 87.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is proposed to strike out "2 laborers" and insert "3 laborers?"

Mr. CULLOM. Yes; that is all.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CULLOM. I do not see the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], who is a member of the committee, present, and in his absence I will move the amendment myself. On page 88, line 1, after the word "three," I move to insert:

One electrical expert and draftsman, $1,600.

Mr. COCKRELL. Where is that to come in?

Mr. CULLOM. Page 88.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Page 88, line 1, after the word "three."

Mr. CULLOM. I move to insert "1 electrical expert and draftsman, $1,600."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CULLOM. On page 88, lines 4 and 5, the total should be changed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The total will be changed.

Mr. CULLOM. On page 93, line 21, after the word "dollars" where it first occurs, I move to insert "2 copyists, at $840 each."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CULLOM. In line 23, on the same page, the total should be changed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The total will be corrected.

Mr. CULLOM. On page 96, line 9, I move to strike out "fourteen" and insert "twenty;" and after the word "watchmen" to insert "1 conductor of elevator, at $760;" so as to read "20 watchmen; 1 conductor of elevator, at $760."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator please restate the amendment?

Mr. CULLOM. Page 96, line 9, strike out "fourteen" and insert "twenty;" so as to read "20 watchmen."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first "fourteen" or the last "fourteen?"

Mr. CULLOM. The first "fourteen."

Mr. COCKRELL. Before the word "watchmen?"

Mr. CULLOM. Yes; the first "fourteen." Then after "watchmen" I move to insert "1 conductor of elevator, at $760."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CULLOM. I now yield to the Senator from Michigan [Mr. McMILLAN].

Mr. McMILLAN. On page 6, line 20, I move to strike out "forty-one" and insert "forty-nine;" so as to read: "49 laborers."

Mr. CULLOM. I agree to that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. The total will have to be changed.

Mr. CULLOM. The clerks are correcting the totals.

Mr. COCKRELL. In line 21, after the word "each" and before the semicolon, I move to insert "which shall be immediately available."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CULLOM. I have no further amendments to offer.

Mr. MORGAN. I offer an amendment to come in on page 7, line 12. I move to strike out "six" where it occurs in that line and to insert "eight." I want to take a moment to state my reason for offering the amendment.

The purpose of the amendment is to increase the salary of the first assistant in the document room from $1,600 to $1,800. George H. Boyd is the man who is employed as first assistant, and he has been there for many years. He is very useful to the Senate. His labors are very important. Mr. Boyd does more work for the Senate than almost any man connected with the body as an employee except Mr. Amzi Smith. He does it in splendid style, and has been doing it since he was almost a child, and his compensation is not adequate.

Mr. CULLOM. I make no point of order against the amendment.

Mr. MORGAN. All right. I merely wanted to say that much about it.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Shall the amendments be concurred in in gross?

The amendments were concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is open to amendment in the Senate.

Mr. DAVIS. On page 46, line 12, I move to strike out the word "two" and insert the word "four;" so as to read "$1,400."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 46, line 12, strike out the word "two" and insert "four;" so as to read "$1,400."

Mr. CULLOM. We gave that clerk $1,200.

Mr. DAVIS. But it is not as much as was estimated for and recommended by the Department, which was $1,400. I introduced an amendment announcing my intention to make this proposition. I have sent for the printed amendment; it is not here, but that is the substance of it. I wish the Senator would accept it. It applies to just one man.

Mr. CULLOM. We have increased his salary $200.

Mr. DAVIS. But it was not increased to the amount which was estimated for by the Department.

Mr. CULLOM. Of course, and there are a thousand cases in the bill where more was estimated for than they get.

Mr. DAVIS. This is just one case. I have a special communication from Mr. Ellis H. Roberts, the Treasurer of the United States, which I ask may be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The communication will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE TREASURER OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., March 14, 1900.

DEAR SIR: Will you kindly hear Mr. Frank M. Barnes for a few moments? He is the compositor and pressman in this office mentioned in my letter, Document 123, House of Representatives. Your amendment of February 24 covers his case exactly. The committee's change does him much less than justice. His services are worth more rather than less than those of the pressmen who are to be raised to $1,400. I trust your amendment will prevail in its entirety.

Yours, very truly,
ELLIS H. ROBERTS,
Treasurer of the United States.

Hon. CUSHMAN K. DAVIS, United States Senate.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope the Senator from Minnesota will not ask for that increase. We have increased this man's salary $200, which is as much as we did for anybody who is a clerk in one of the Departments. Every other clerk will think he is wronged if we do this.

Mr. DAVIS. But I understand that the committee have increased another class of men in this particular division of the Department to $1,400. They have increased Mr. Barnes to but $1,200, and Mr. Roberts, the Treasurer, says that Mr. Barnes is entitled to the same compensation that those men are to receive.

Mr. CULLOM. We have not increased the pay of any clerk more than $200. Some of the $1,800 clerks have gone to $2,000, and become chiefs of divisions. Some of the $1,600 clerks have gone to $1,800; some have gone from $1,400 to $1,600, and some from $1,200 to $1,400. We have increased the pay of this man from $1,000 to $1,200, and I hope the Senator will not press the amendment.

Mr. DAVIS. I feel like taking the sense of the Senate on the question.

Mr. CULLOM. I do not want to raise a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. DAVIS. Can a point of order be raised when I offered an amendment to this effect which was referred to the committee?

Mr. CULLOM. I do not know that it can. I presume that it is not subject to a point of order.

Mr. DAVIS. I should like to have a vote on the amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. I only desire to add a word to what was said by the Senator from Illinois. There are three of these people in the Treasurer's office. Two of them are receiving $1,200 now, and this gentleman is receiving $1,000. We increased them all $200 each. Whatever the United States Treasurer may say, these people have never had the same compensation, and we have increased them exactly in the same proportion. Now, if we increase this salary to $1,400 the others will come back next year and say they ought to receive $1,600. We have preserved precisely the same ratio as that which has uniformly prevailed in the Department as respects these people.

Mr. DAVIS. The point in my mind is that Mr. Roberts, the Treasurer, says this man's services are worth $1,400, and he ought to receive that compensation.

Mr. CULLOM. We let them go up by degrees. I hope the amendment will not be agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. PETTIGREW. In line 10, page 5, after the words "interoceanic canals," I move to insert "transportation and sale of meat products."

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills:

A bill (S. 746) to authorize C. R. Dobbins to accept a gold watch awarded to him by the government of the Dominion of Canada in recognition of his humane and gallant services to the shipwrecked crew of the British schooner Ashton, at Weymouth, Nova Scotia;

A bill (S. 1740) to authorize C. E. Marr and E. H. Pierce to accept silver watches awarded to them by the government of the Dominion of Canada in recognition of their services in rescuing British sailors;

A bill (S. 114) to constitute South Manchester, Conn., a port of entry; and

A bill (S. 3138) to provide for necessary repairs to the steamer Thetis for service as a revenue cutter.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6627) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901, and for other purposes, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. BARNEY, Mr. McCLEARY, and Mr. BELL managers at the conference on the part of the House.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Claims:

A bill (H. R. 1454) for the relief of William L. Orr;

A bill (H. R. 4686) for the relief of J. A. Ware; and

A bill (H. R. 5969) for the relief of the devisees and legal representatives of D. L. Huskey, deceased.

The bill (H. R. 2757) to authorize the purchase of certain lands in the district of Alaska was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The bill (H. R. 2322) for the relief of Joshua Bishop was read twice by its title.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. COCKRELL. That bill, I think, went to the Committee on Naval Affairs before.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill relates to a lieutenant-commander in the United States Navy. The Chair is inclined to think it ought to go to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. COCKRELL. In the last Congress it was reported favorably by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. MCENERY]. I think he was then a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs, as he is now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be referrred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

FORT HAYS MILITARY RESERVATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 68) granting to the State of Kansas the abandoned Fort Hays Military Reservation, in said State, for the purpose of establishing western branches of the Kansas Agricultural College and of the Kansas State Normal School thereon, and for a public park.

The amendments were, in line 7, page 1, to strike out "a western branch" and insert "an experiment station;" in line 1, page 2, to strike out "western branches" and insert "an experiment station;" in line 2, page 2, after "and" insert "a western branch of;" in line 5, page 2, after "States" to insert "Provided further, That the provisions of this act shall not apply to any tract or tracts within the limits of said reservation to which a valid claim has attached, by settlement or otherwise, under any of the public-land laws of the United States."

Amend the title so as to read: "An act granting to the State of Kansas the abandoned Fort Hays Military Reservation, in said State, for the purpose of establishing an experiment station of the Kansas Agricultural College, and a western branch of the Kansas State Normal School thereon, and for a public park."

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments made to the bill by the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 16th instant approved and signed the joint resolution (S. R. 75) to print 31,000 copies of the eulogies on Garret A. Hobart, late Vice-President of the United States.

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6627) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901, and for other purposes, and asking a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. BAKER. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments and agree to the request of the House of Representatives for a conference.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. SHOUP, Mr. QUARLES, and Mr. TALIAFERRO were appointed.

SPANISH CLAIMS COMMISSION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 8245) temporarily to provide revenues for the relief of the island of Puerto Rico, and for other purposes.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, unless the Senator from Ohio wishes to proceed with that bill this afternoon, I should like to have the pending order temporarily laid aside without losing its precedence, so that the Senate may proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 2799) to carry into effect the stipulations of Article VII of the treaty between the United States and Spain, concluded on the 10th day of December, 1898.

Mr. FORAKER. That is a matter which will take only a short time.

Mr. DAVIS. I did not hear the Senator.

Mr. FORAKER. It is a bill——

Mr. DAVIS. It is a bill reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations to create a commission to adjudicate upon the claims which we have assumed under the treaty of Paris.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. FORAKER. I understood that there were one or two Senators who wished to speak to-day upon the Puerto Rican bill. I interrupted the Senator only to inquire whether the bill he desires to call up is likely to take much time.

Mr. DAVIS. I should think not. Still, I do not know. Of course if any Senator has given notice of his intention to speak, I shall withdraw my suggestion.

Mr. FORAKER. Very well; under the circumstances I will yield.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of a bill which will be read in full to the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill (S. 2799) to carry into effect the stipulations of Article VII of the treaty between the United States and Spain concluded on the 10th day of December, 1898; and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

Mr. DAVIS. I offer an amendment to come in on line 17, page 3, section 5; which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PERKINS in the chair). The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the words "United States," in line 17, on page 3, section 5, it is proposed to insert "including the sum of $3 per day, which the courts of the United States are now authorized by section 21 of the act of May 28, 1896, to allow to commissioners."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS. I offer an additional amendment, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 6, section 13, line 23, it is proposed to strike out:

That the claimant or the United States shall have the same rights of appeal from any final award of the commission exceeding the sum of $5,000.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

That either the claimant or the United States may appeal from any final decision of the commission allowing or rejecting any claim where the amount in controversy is more than $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS. I offer another amendment, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 6, in section 11, line 15, before the word "damage," it is proposed to strike out "immediate" and insert "direct;" so as to read:

That the award in favor of any claimant shall be only for the amount of the actual and direct damage which said claimant shall prove that he has sustained.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS. There has been considerable criticism, and several suggestions have been made in regard to this bill, that the allowance of two appeals, one to the court of appeals and thence to the Supreme Court of the United States, was unnecessary and too onerous. I shall not present amendments myself to meet those objections, although several of them have been suggested to me; but I deem it fair to advise the Senate that a great deal of criticism has been made upon the bill in that respect. My own personal opinion is that one appeal to a court of appeals would be sufficient; but I do not myself feel warranted, under the instructions of the Committee on Foreign Relations, to make a motion for that change in the bill.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Minnesota to state to the Senate in some general way what sort of claims are likely to come up under this bill? What are the classes of claims referred to in the treaty of Paris under the seventh article? I will read the whole of the seventh article, as it is only a few lines in length:

ARTICLE VII.

The United States and Spain mutually relinquish all claims for indemnity, national and individual, of every kind, of either Government, or of its citizens or subjects, against the other Government, that may have arisen since the beginning of the late insurrection in Cuba and prior to the exchange of ratifications of the present treaty, including all claims for indemnity for the cost of the war.

Of course we are dealing here only with the claims of citizens of the United States against the Government of Spain. The article goes on to provide:

The United States will adjudicate and settle the claims of its citizens against Spain relinquished in this article.

Now, what is the nature of those claims, so far as they have been brought to the attention of the Senator or to the attention of his committee?

Mr. DAVIS. Well, Mr. President, the nature of those claims is various. As disclosed by the record of them in the Department of State—and the record has been accumulating since 1895, when the insurrection broke out—they embrace claims against Spain for the destruction of property represented by United States investments in Cuba, which Spain, under the treaty of 1795 and by the general principles of international law, was obliged to use due diligence to protect.

Mr. HOAR. Are there any claims for the destruction of vessels or the detention of vessels, the breaking up of voyages?

Mr. DAVIS. None that I am aware of, although there may be. Then, there are claims for personal wrongs, cruelties to American citizens. There is notably the claim of Mrs. Ruiz, the wife of Dr. Ruiz, who, it is claimed, was tortured and massacred by the Spanish authorities while in prison. It is exceedingly difficult to specify the character of these claims distributively; but it is enough to say—it must be enough to say, and it is as much as any man can say—that they embrace the entire scope of any claims the United States may have made against Spain if article 7 had not been entered into for injuries to the property or to the persons of American citizens. The bill has been very carefully drawn in view of the indeterminate nature of these claims. Of course, the commission will have to consider any claim that any one chooses to bring before it by way of petition.

As I said a moment ago, the committee has attempted to draw this bill very carefully, so as to protect the Government in that respect by appeal and by procedure.

Mr. HOAR. I put my question with three ideas in view. One was as to the rather harsh provision for barring claims forever. These claims are all to be forever barred unless presented within six months' time of the first meeting of the commission, and there is no provision for any advertisement of the first meeting of the commission, and there is no time fixed for it by the bill.

Mr. DAVIS. It must be within thirty days.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator says it must be within thirty days, and that partly answers the question; still it seems to me the provision is harsh in the case of persons who are citizens—and a number, it may be, are citizens of the United States on the Pacific coast, or wherever else on the face of the earth the United States may extend, as to which nobody knows as yet—a person may be insane or under guardianship, or they may be ignorant or poor persons. It seems to me that a perpetual bar, especially when the commission itself may be continued from time to time for years and do its work of hearing these claims, is rather harsh.

Then, another suggestion which occurred to me——

Mr. DAVIS. Let me first answer that.

Mr. HOAR. Certainly.

Mr. DAVIS. The Senator has kindly consented that I may answer that observation, which was——

Mr. HOAR. If I may add one sentence before the Senator answers, I wish to say that I have been here, and I suppose the Senator has in part, when we have had the old Alabama claims under consideration; and we have had several other classes of claims where special tribunals have been established for their adjudication. Congress has been beset, behind and before, after the conclusion of the time fixed by those statutes, much more liberal than this, with applications for special legislation to enable persons to bring in their claims after the claims were barred by the statute. That was not the only case with the Alabama claims, but we have had several other classes of claims of the same kind.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, in view of the indeterminate amount of these claims and of the history of preceding commissions, the committee were of opinion that it was best within limits to fix a time in which the commission should perform its work and also a time within that time when claims to be adjudicated should be presented to it. The time fixed for the commission to complete its work is two years, subject to extension by the President in case of necessity.

In regard to the time of filing claims, it was deemed very material and very desirable that within six months from the organization or meeting of the commission everybody should have his claim in, so that adjudication could proceed upon the entire amount of claims; otherwise the thing would drift along under the time given to file claims up to very nearly the expiration of the life of the commission, as intended by the bill, and then at a late day claims would be filed, thereby making necessary the successive and indeterminate continuation of the commission.

The fact is, as I am informed, and I think reliably informed, that substantially all the claims that will be brought for adjudication before this commission are already on file in the State Department. They amount to some eighteen or twenty million dollars as the aggregate of damages claimed. Of course we all know that the bringing in of claims in cases of this kind by no means indicates the true liability of the United States. So we thought, everything being considered, it was best to fix a limit to the commission; and in order to secure that time limitation for its action, we fixed a limitation of the time within which claims should be submitted to it, namely, six months from the date of the organization of the commission.

If there should arise any special case of hardship, insanity, infancy, or anything of that kind, which has prevented, through inadvertence, the claimant getting in within six months, I have no question that as a special matter Congress would treat it very liberally; but I think the advantages are very considerable—in fact, almost decisive—of fixing a time when these claims shall, in the manner provided by this bill, be laid before the commission, so that the adjudication shall proceed; otherwise, when the two years elapse, you will find within a few months or weeks of the time we shall have to extend the life of the commission again.

Mr. HOAR. I would suggest to the Senator whether it would not be more reasonable, and whether, on the whole, it would not come within the principle on which he is acting, if it should be said that the claims shall be forever barred, provided that—the commission will sit for two years at any rate—within six months thereafter good cause shall be shown to the commission why any claimant has not at an earlier period presented his claim, the commission should have a discretion to receive it within a further period of six months?

Mr. DAVIS. I am not at all strenuous about that. I will accept such an amendment.

Mr. HOAR. That would relieve the hardship. I never heard before, in any legislative proceeding whatever, of so short a period of limitation as this, and I will venture to suggest we shall have countless applications to Congress for special relief, unless we insert some provision of this kind.

Mr. DAVIS. I shall not object to an amendment of that character.

Mr. PETTUS. I desire to ask the Senator from Massachusetts a question. Has it not oftentimes been decided that as between individuals these very short statutes of limitations were unlawfully passed even when they were enacted by competent authority?

Mr. HOAR. Certainly, I so understand; and especially when we consider that, reversing the case, the United States, as a matter of general policy, does not allow any limitation to its claim against the citizen. I will venture to prepare an amendment to that part of the bill. I move at the close of section 9 to insert:

Provided, That the commission may receive claims presented within six months after the termination of said period if the claimants shall establish to their satisfaction good reasons for not presenting the same earlier.

Mr. DAVIS. That amendment is accepted, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to have that amendment read at the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Reporter will read the amendment.

The Reporter read the amendment submitted by Mr. HOAR.

Mr. DAVIS. That is simply that the six months' limitation stands in general; and in exceptional cases, upon good cause shown, as I understand it, another six months is given.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. I want to ask the Senator from Minnesota in regard to section 11, as to the cases of claims for the destruction of property, plantations, sugar establishments, etc. Is it reasonable to make a universal rule that no interest shall be allowed?

Mr. DAVIS. I think, Mr. President, that such a universal rule is reasonable in actions of tort; and this is analogous to such an action. In an action of tort at common law interest is never allowed. The fact is we are perplexed, and have been here session after session, importuned in every conceivable way by claimants for interest upon claims against the Government. As to whatever damage has been suffered, whatever reasonable and immediate damage a claimant can prove himself to have sustained, the court can take into consideration all of the elements of compensation which will go to make him whole. After doing that and giving the court the wide range of discretion always confided to courts and juries in cases of torts or quasi torts, then to allow a computation of interest from a certain date upon a claim of that kind seemed to the committee entirely unreasonable. Hence we were careful, and shall be strenuous in insisting that it shall stand as a feature of this bill, that interest shall not be allowed upon a claim or an award at the very basis of which lies such a widespread discretion as to what shall be or what shall not be permitted as cumulative to the exercise of that discretion.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Will the Senator from Minnesota allow me to add a word to what he has so justly said?

Mr. DAVIS. Certainly.

Mr. WOLCOTT. The question of interest is not of such great importance with this bill, but everybody who is familiar with Congressional legislation knows that long after every Senator here is dead and forgotten claims will come before this body and acts of Congress be asked for the payment of some claim arising under this bill, and good cause shown why the claim was not filed before this commission. If we once open the door in the original bill for the payment of interest, we shall pay enormously in the years that are to come.

The Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS] suggested the impropriety of a statute of limitations. There is none against the Government in fact, but we limit this to two years, when everybody knows that year after year and year after year there will be claims of enormous amounts sought to be pressed through Congress for damages that were suffered from the commencement of the Spanish insurrection until date.

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President, the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT] is mistaken. I made no objection to a statute of limitations. I made objection to an extremely short limitation.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I beg the Senator's pardon. I misunderstood him.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I intended when I raised this question to submit it, as I did, as a question for the consideration of the committee; but I am bound to say that I do not think that the suggestion that somebody hereafter may make a reasonable or an unreasonable claim against the Government is a very good cause why we should not settle as nearly just a rule as we can settle. In the first place, I do not think these claims will come in; certainly not after the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT] is forgotten, for he never will be forgotten while human history lasts.

These people are entitled to interest against Spain. In all public international torts interest is allowed in all claims presented.

Mr. DAVIS. Was interest awarded against England in the Alabama claims?

Mr. HOAR. Yes; it was undoubtedly taken into account, and there was something left afterwards. More than the amount involved in the actual cases presented was allowed.

Mr. WOLCOTT. May I ask the Senator from Massachusetts a question?

Mr. HOAR. I will yield if the Senator merely wants to ask a question.

Mr. WOLCOTT. It is only a question.

Mr. HOAR. Is it in relation to the matter that I was going to ask the Senator?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Not at all; but I want to call the attention of the Senator to the fact that this is an act of grace. It is not a matter of legal right, and the question of interest here is upon a different footing from that in a legal claim. Does not the Senator think so?

Mr. HOAR. No; I do not think so. I do not think it is an act of grace; but it is a matter of right. If an American citizen has a good claim against Spain, he is entitled as a matter of right—it is the citizen's right—to have that claim enforced, if necessary, until the Army has used up its last man and the Navy has fired its last gun.

We are for our convenience to get a cession of territory, or whatever motive entered into this transaction. A man who had a claim for an injury done him by Spain twelve months before, who had had his plantation burned, for instance, would, by all fair and just considerations, be entitled to have the interest paid until he got his money. Now the United States comes in and says we will get more territory, or some other equivalent, and we will arrange with Spain that that claim we will give up and pay the citizen ourselves; we will pay half of it, or a part of it, and no more. I do not think that is just; but I do not propose to make a division of the Senate on that question, because I know that there are so many complications and so many various views about allowing interest in such cases that it would probably delay the passage of a very just and humane and proper bill, but I do not give up my opinion about it.

Mr. President, I want to make one other suggestion to the Senator, which I think he will accept, in all probability, after what he has said. I suggest whether it would not be well to confine the appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States upon questions of law as made up on the record? The Senator suggested his own individual view that two appeals were unnecessary. There may be some very important questions of public law involved in this matter, in which we might like to have the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States, and not that of a local court of appeals.

I would say on page 8, lines 1 and 2:

> The court shall hear and determine such appeals only upon the issues of law presented by the record upon the merits.

That might possibly require the direction that the court should record its decision on the questions of law. Whether that be necessary or not, I am not sure, but it seems to me that it would be a fair solution of this difficulty.

Mr. COCKRELL. I intend to move to strike out all of the provisions authorizing an appeal to the Supreme Court. I do not think it ought to be allowed, and I do not think there is any necessity for it.

Mr. DAVIS. Will the Senator suspend that motion for a moment until I can answer the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes.

Mr. DAVIS. The amendment suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], that the appellate court, whether the Supreme Court or the court of appeals, or both, shall consider only questions of law is entirely against the theory of the bill in that respect, which was that those courts should each examine the questions both of law and of fact, as in an admiralty case or as in an equity case. The history of commissions in this country has taught us too well——

Mr. HOAR. I speak only of the second appeal after the appeal——

Mr. DAVIS. To the Supreme Court?

Mr. HOAR. To the Supreme Court, which is substantially given this whole jurisdiction. It considers nothing but questions of law.

Mr. DAVIS. Then, if the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] should prevail, that suggestion would fall. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. COCKRELL. On page 7, section 13, line 9, I move to strike out:

> From the final judgment or decree of the said court of appeals either party may appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. DAVIS. I have no objection to that. So far as the committee is concerned, the amendment is accepted.

Mr. HOAR. That removes the whole trouble.

Mr. DAVIS. That removes the whole trouble.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. In section 13, page 7, I move to strike out all after the word "appeals," in line 19, down to and including the word "States," in line 20; so as to read:

> The appeal to the said court of appeals shall, as to each appeal, be taken within sixty days, etc.

Mr. DAVIS. I have no objection to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. In section 13, page 7, I move to strike out all, commencing with line 23, down to and including the word "merits," in line 2, on page 8, as follows:

> The return in case of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States shall consist of a certified copy of the entire record of said court of appeals, and the Supreme Court shall hear and determine such appeals upon the issues of fact and law presented by such records upon the merits.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. On page 7, section 13, after line 22, I propose to add:

> The decisions and judgments of said court of appeals in all cases appealed to said court shall be final and conclusive.

Mr. DAVIS. That is accepted.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. In section 14, page 8, line 16, I move to strike out the words "or by the Supreme Court of the United States;" so as to read:

> And in every case of final award by said commission, or final judgment or decree, on appeal, by the said court of appeals, where the same is affirmed, etc.

Mr. DAVIS. That is accepted.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. That makes it all right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Chair understand the Senator from Massachusetts to offer an amendment?

Mr. HOAR. No; the amendments offered cover what I had in mind.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RAILWAY ON WEST MOUNTAIN, HOT SPRINGS, ARK.

Mr. BERRY and Mr. WOLCOTT addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. BERRY. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (H. R. 2956) to extend the time for the completion of the incline railway on West Mountain, Hot Springs Reservation. It is a very short bill and will take only a few moments.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I give notice to the Senate that after this bill is passed I shall ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. BERRY. I hope the Senator will allow this bill to be passed.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Very well.

Mr. FORAKER. I wish to have the Senate take up the unfinished business for an hour, at any rate, and I had agreed with a Senator who wanted an executive session that we would at 4 o'clock have an executive session. Will not that be soon enough?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I did not know of any such understanding or agreement. I do know that the discussion of the matter which calls for an executive session will take an hour or two, and I had understood that the first available moment was to be taken for it. If the Senator from Ohio, who is upon the Committee on Foreign Relations, is of opinion that the public business requires an open session until 4 o'clock, I shall not press the matter.

Mr. FORAKER. I wished very much to have the bill which is the unfinished business read again for amendments, not to be debated, in order that there might be a reprint of it for the convenience of the Senate. I thought that might be done by 4 o'clock.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield to the Senator's suggestion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 2956) to extend the time for the completion of the incline railway on West Mountain, Hot Springs Reservation, which will be read for information.

The Secretary read the bill, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT ATLANTA, GA.

Mr. CLAY. I ask the Senator from Ohio to yield to me to call up a bill.

Mr. FORAKER. I do so.

Mr. CLAY. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3149) for the erection of a public building at Atlanta, Ga.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to acquire additional land adjoining the post-office and custom-house building at Atlanta, Ga., and to enlarge said building, at a total cost not to exceed $500,000.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to be informed by some authority on this class of subjects—a member of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds—whether any public-building bills have passed both Houses, and if not, whether the committee expect that public-building bills will pass both Houses at the present session. I ask this question because I have one bill relating to my own State in which I have very great interest, and about which I wish to be vigilant, if that is the case.

Mr. WARREN. I may say that the information of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds is that the House has not passed any one of these bills. The Senate has passed several. The House, I think, is considering the subject of grouping certain classes together.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MILITARY POST AT SHERIDAN, WYO.

Mr. WARREN. With the courtesy of the Senator from Ohio, I desire to call up the bill (S. 1475) to complete the establishment and erection of a military post near the city of Sheridan, in the State of Wyoming, and making appropriation therefor.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Secretary of War to complete the establishment and erection of a military post near the city of Sheridan, Wyo., at the site heretofore selected by the Major-General Commanding the Army and approved by the Secretary of War, and $100,000 is proposed to be appropriated for continuing the work of constructing the necessary buildings, quarters, barracks, and stables for the post established under the provisions of the bill.

Mr. BATE. I should like to be informed as to this bill.

Mr. WARREN. It is a bill which has been reported from the Military Affairs Committee.

Mr. BATE. That is what I wanted to know.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM LAPOINT.

Mr. ROSS. I ask the Senator from Ohio to yield to me that I may call up a bill.

Mr. FORAKER. I yield.

Mr. ROSS. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3148) to correct the military record of William Lapoint.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Secretary of War to correct the military record of William Lapoint, late private in Company C, Third Vermont Volunteers, by removing the charge of "desertion" and substituting "absented himself without proper authority," etc.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9080) appropriating, for the benefit and government of Puerto Rico, revenues collected on importations therefrom since its evacuation by Spain, and revenues hereafter collected on such importations under existing law; asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. CANNON, Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts, and Mr. MCRAE managers at the conference on the part of the House.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. 309) granting a pension to James M. Kercheval;

A bill (H. R. 524) granting an increase of pension to Andrew J. Davis;

A bill (H. R. 854) granting an increase of pension to John J. McCormick;

A bill (H. R. 2000) for the relief of Thomas Paul;

A bill (H. R. 2477) granting an increase of pension to George H. Pennington;

A bill (H. R. 2749) granting a pension to Susan Garrison;

A bill (H. R. 3067) granting an increase of pension to Melvina Bottles;

A bill (H. R. 3071) granting an increase of pension to John F. Nelson;

A bill (H. R. 3072) granting an increase of pension to William W. Wharton;

A bill (H. R. 4416) granting an increase of pension to Henry Geeson;

A bill (H. R. 5156) granting an increase of pension to Frances C. Kirby;

A bill (H. R. 5299) granting an increase of pension to Joseph McCune;

A bill (H. R. 5309) granting a pension to Malinda Jones; and

A bill (H. R. 6575) granting a pension to Matilda G. Higbee.

PUERTO RICAN REVENUES.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives on the Puerto Rican appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9080) appropriating, for the benefit and government of Puerto Rico, revenues collected on importations therefrom since its evacuation by Spain and revenues hereafter to be collected on such importations under existing law, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate accede to the request of the House of Representatives for a conference on the bill and amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. ALLISON, Mr. HALE, and Mr. COCKRELL were appointed.

TIMBER ON PUBLIC MINERAL LANDS.

Mr. SIMON. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate for the present consideration of the bill 2866, permitting citizens of the United States, bona fide residents of the States of California, Oregon, and Washington, to fell and remove, for building, agricultural, mining, and other domestic purposes, timber growing or being upon the mineral lands of the United States in the States aforesaid.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Mines and Mining, with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That section 8 of the act entitled "An act to repeal timber-culture laws, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1891, as amended by an act approved March 3, 1891, chapter 559, page 1093, volume 26, United States Statutes at Large, be, and the same is hereby, amended as follows: After the word "Nevada," in said amended act, insert the words "California, Oregon, and Washington."

Mr. COCKRELL. I should be greatly obliged if the Senator from Oregon would read the act which it is proposed to amend. This is an amendment of it, and it simply proposes to add certain words. We have not the act before us. I will have it in a moment. I should like to hear the Senator read it.

Mr. SIMON. I will state for the information of the Senator from Missouri that in all the mining States of Montana, Idaho, Wyoming, and in every other mineral State other than California, Oregon, and Washington, which through some inadvertence were admitted when the act was passed, the law authorizes bona fide residents and citizens to fell and remove for building, agricultural, mining, and other domestic purposes timber growing upon mineral lands, and it is sought by this bill simply to give the States of California, Oregon, and Washington the same rights that the other mineral States now have.

There is a general provision in the act referred to giving authority to all mining districts, but the Department have held that that is not broad enough to cover the three States named. This matter was considered very carefully by the Committee on Mines and Mining, of which the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] is chairman, and there can not be any possible objection to it it seems to me.

Mr. COCKRELL. I wish the Senator would turn to the statute.

Mr. SIMON. I have not the statute here.

Mr. COCKRELL. I wish the Senator would show where the amendment will come in. It does not say where it is to come in. I want to see how the statute as amended will read.

Mr. SIMON. The only amendment there is is to add the names of the three States. The Senator will find a number of States named in the act, and it is proposed to add after those States the States of California, Oregon, and Washington. If the Senator has the statute, he will see it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PERKINS in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Mines and Mining.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to extend the provisions of section 8 of the act entitled 'An act to repeal timber-culture laws, and for other purposes,' approved March 3, 1891, concerning prosecutions for cutting timber on public lands, to California, Oregon, and Washington."

JOSEPH BACIGALUPPI.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I ask the Senator from Ohio to yield to me that I may ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill.

Mr. FORAKER. I yield.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (H. R. 5139) for the relief of Joseph Bacigaluppi.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments, on page 1, line 4, after the name "Bacigaluppi" to insert "Margaretha Riehl, alias Margaret Riehl, Christiana Dengler, John A. Narges, and Smith Lee, all of the District of Columbia, and of Francesco Perna, of Montgomery County, State of Maryland;" and on page 2, line 2, after the word "remitted," to strike out—and that the title to such real estate be, and the same is hereby, vested in said Joseph Bacigaluppi as fully in every respect as though he had been a citizen of the United States at the time the same was purchased by and conveyed to him—

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That all real estate lying in the District of Columbia heretofore purchased by and conveyed to Joseph Bacigaluppi, Margaretha Riehl, alias Margaret Riehl, Christiana Dengler, John A. Narges, and Smith Lee, all of the District of Columbia, and of Francesco Perna, of Montgomery County, State of Maryland, be, and the same is hereby, relieved and exempted from the operations of an act entitled "An act to restrict the ownership of real estate in the Territories to American citizens, and so forth," approved March 3, 1887; and that all forfeitures incurred by force of said act in respect to such real estate be, and the same are hereby, remitted.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of Joseph Bacigaluppi and others."

CONTINENTAL FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY AND OTHERS.

Mr. ALLEN. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 227) for the relief of the Continental Fire Insurance Company and others.

The Secretary read the bill, and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to cause the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to reopen and reexamine the refunding claims of the Continental Fire Insurance Company, the Eagle Fire Insurance Company, the City Fire Insurance Company, the Commercial Mutual Insurance Company of the State of New York, the Maryland Fire Insurance Company, the Western National Bank, the Merchants' National Bank, the Chesapeake Bank of the State of Maryland, and the Eastern Railroad Company of the State of Massachusetts, for taxes erroneously paid by them and now on file in his office, and to examine and allow such amounts as he may find the companies and banks have paid as a duplicate tax upon the same identical income or profits, or taxes in excess of the amount legally due, and to transmit his allowances to the proper accounting officers of the Treasury for certification to Congress, in compliance with the second section of the act of Congress approved July 7, 1884.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ESTATE OF T. C. FINNEY, DECEASED.

Mr. TURLEY. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2268) to carry into effect a finding of the Court of Claims in favor of Pamella B. Finney, administratrix of T. C. Finney, deceased.

The Secretary read the bill, and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It recites that the Court of Claims found that T. C. Finney, late of Shelby County, Tenn., was loyal to the United States throughout the civil war and that stores and supplies of the value of $6,900 were taken from him by and for the use of the Federal Army and never paid for, and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay $6,900 to Pamella B. Finney, administratrix of T. C. Finney, deceased.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT BOISE CITY, IDAHO.

Mr. SHOUP. I ask the Senator from Ohio to yield for the consideration of a short bill. I do not think there will be any discussion whatever upon it.

Mr. FORAKER. If it will not lead to any discussion, I will yield.

Mr. SHOUP. I ask the Senate to consider the bill (S. 2388) to increase the limit of cost for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building at Boise City, Idaho.

The Secretary read the bill, and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to increase to $300,000 the amount heretofore fixed as a limit of cost for the purchase of a site and the erection of a building for the use and accommodation of the United States post-office, court-house, surveyor-general's offices, district land offices, internal-revenue office, and other Government offices in the city of Boise City, Idaho.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

M. M. DEFREES.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. If the Senator from Ohio will permit me, I should like to call up a bill.

Mr. FORAKER. I yield to the Senator from Indiana and also to the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR], but I hope that I I shall not be asked to yield further, because time is rapidly passing.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. The bill is a brief one and will not lead to any debate. I ask for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1772) for the payment of the claim of M. M. Defrees for the construction of a sewer adjacent to the lands of the United States known as the "Arsenal grounds," in the city of Indianapolis, Ind.

The Secretary read the bill, and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to appropriate $4,494.56, in full for the payment of the claim of M. M. Defrees, of Indianapolis, Ind., for the construction of a sewer, known as "Pogues Run interception," on Hanna street, in the city of Indianapolis, adjacent to the lands of the United States known as the "Arsenal," that sum under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Indiana being a lien on said lands.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT BURLINGTON, VT.

Mr. PROCTOR. I ask unanimous consent that the bill (S. 3024) for the erection of a new public building at Burlington, Vt., be now taken up for consideration.

The Secretary read the bill, and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, line 6, after the word "post-office," to strike out "custom-house;" so as to make the section read:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be erected a suitable building, with fireproof vaults therein, for the accommodation of the United States courts, post-office, and other Federal offices at Burlington, Vt.

The plans, specifications, and full estimates for said building shall be previously made and approved according to law, and the expense of said building shall not exceed the sum of $200,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, page 2, line 1, after the word "custom-house," to strike out "Provided, however, That the Secretary of the Treasury may sell the land now owned by the United States and used as aforesaid and purchase a site for the building herein authorized if no additional expense to the Government is thereby incurred" and to insert "unless a site acceptable to the Secretary of the Treasury be provided free of cost to the United States;" so as to make the section read:

That said building shall be erected on the site of the public building in said Burlington now used for a post-office and custom-house unless a site acceptable to the Secretary of the Treasury be provided free of cost to the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REVENUE CUTTER FOR ST. MARYS RIVER, MICHIGAN.

Mr. McMILLAN. I ask unanimous consent to call up a bill.

Mr. FORAKER. I understand that it will not take much time.

Mr. McMILLAN. No; it will not take much time. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 2683) to provide for the construction of a revenue cutter for use in St. Marys River, Michigan.

The Secretary read the bill; and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments, in line 3, before the word "thousand," to strike out "fifty" and insert "seventy-five;" in line 6, after the word "construction," to insert "or purchase;" and in line 7, after the word "of" where it occurs the third time, to insert "a vessel to be used and equipped as;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $75,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the construction, or purchase, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, of a vessel to be used and equipped as a revenue cutter of the third class for service on the St. Marys River, Michigan, for the purpose of protecting the revenue and enforcing the rules of navigation on said river.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LOUIS A. YORKE.

Mr. HALE. I ask leave to call up the bill (S. 3441) for the relief of Louis A. Yorke. It is a bill which has passed the Senate three times.

Mr. FORAKER. I yield to the Senator from Maine if there is to be no debate; but I desire after that bill is considered to proceed with the unfinished business.

Mr. HALE. I am much obliged to the Senator. It will take only a moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It authorizes the President of the United States to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint Louis A. Yorke a paymaster in the Navy as of the date he was wholly retired. But he shall not receive or be entitled to any pay, compensation, or allowance whatever prior to appointment under this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RIDA B. HASKELL.

Mr. FORAKER. Before calling up the unfinished business, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 1804) granting an increase of pension to Rida B. Haskell.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 9, before the word "dollars," to strike out "seventy-five" and insert "fifty;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Rida B. Haskell, widow of Joseph T. Haskell, late brigadier-general, United States Volunteers, and lieutenant-colonel Seventeenth United States Infantry, war with Spain, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GOVERNMENT OF PUERTO RICO.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8245) temporarily to provide revenues for the relief of the island of Puerto Rico, and for other purposes.

Mr. FORAKER. The purpose of calling up the unfinished business at this time is to ask that certain proposed amendments may be agreed to, in order that the text of the bill may be corrected and that we may have a reprint of it when we come to consider the amendments which will be controverted. I do not expect at this time to ask consent to any amendments except only those which may be adopted without any dispute. If there is objection to any amendment that I propose, I will ask that it be passed over upon objection being made.

The first amendment that I desire to call attention to is one proposed to section 3, on page 4, line 16. I propose to amend by inserting after the word "citizens" the following:

Of Puerto Rico, and as such entitled to the protection.

So that as amended——

Mr. COCKRELL. In what line is the amendment?

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator kindly indicate the page and line?

Mr. FORAKER. Yes, sir. On page 4, line 16.

Mr. COCKRELL. What section?

Mr. FORAKER. Section 3. The proposed amendment is to insert, after the word "citizens"——

Mr. COCKRELL. What bill has the Senator?

Mr. FORAKER. I have bill 8245 with the Senate committee's substitute. This is the provision of the bill that fixes the civil and political status of the inhabitants of Puerto Rico. As the bill was reported from the committee it provided that certain inhabitants, who were described, should be deemed and held to be citizens of the United States. The amendment proposed is to insert, after the word "citizens," the words "of Puerto Rico, and as such entitled to the protection;" so that the clause would read:

Shall be deemed and held to be citizens of Puerto Rico, and as such entitled to the protection of the United States.

Mr. BACON. I understood the suggestion of the Senator from Ohio to be that he wishes to have only those amendments acted upon that will be consented to.

Mr. FORAKER. That is all. If there is objection, I will pass over this amendment.

Mr. BACON. I do not give my consent to the amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let me take that down. After the word "citizens" you propose to insert what words?

Mr. FORAKER. "Of Puerto Rico"——

Mr. CLAY. And to strike out the words "of the United States?"

Mr. FORAKER. No, I do not strike out the words "United States." I propose to make the clause read: "Shall be deemed and held to be citizens of Puerto Rico, and as such entitled to the protection of the United States."

Mr. BACON. I understand the Senator does not wish to have an amendment acted on to-day if it is to be debated.

Mr. FORAKER. No, we will not debate the amendments now.

Mr. BACON. Then let this amendment go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proposed amendment being objected to, it will be passed over for the present.

Mr. FORAKER. That being the case, I now propose to strike out, at the end of line 25, on page 4, the word "in," and to insert in lieu thereof the words "as such." That is the provision of the bill which creates——

Mr. COCKRELL. Let us see how that clause would read if amended.

Mr. FORAKER. I am going to read it as it will stand if amended:

And they, together with such other citizens of the United States as may reside in Puerto Rico, shall constitute a body politic under the name of The People of Puerto Rico, with governmental powers as hereinafter conferred, and with power to sue and be sued as such.

That would be the end of the section as I propose to amend it.

Mr. COCKRELL. What do you do on page 5?

Mr. FORAKER. On page 5, I was about to say, I further amend by striking out lines 1, 2, and 3. I do not think there will be any objection to that amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. You propose to strike out the word "in" and then down to the words "United States," in line 3, on page 5, and to insert in lieu thereof what words?

Mr. FORAKER. After the words "be sued" I propose to insert the words "as such."

Mr. MORGAN. You do not strike out "in."

Mr. FORAKER. Yes; I strike out "in."

Mr. COCKRELL. They are not going to sue then, anywhere?

Mr. FORAKER. They will sue in any court with jurisdiction under the clause as we propose to amend it.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, if the Senator from Ohio will pardon me, that of itself might not be an objectionable amendment; but if it is, as I think it would necessarily be, taken in connection with the amendment previously suggested by the Senator, then it would be open to objection. In other words, the amendment previously proposed by the Senator, to which I made objection, inserted words which practically struck out all provision making the Puerto Ricans citizens of the United States. It endeavored to interpolate the words "citizens of Puerto Rico, and as such entitled to the protection of the United States." It seems to me that the amendment suggested by the Senator would necessarily have some reference to the status as it would be fixed by that amendment, if adopted.

Mr. FORAKER. No. If the Senator will allow me, I can understand how that may have struck the Senator's mind; but the two amendments had no reference to each other at all in the mind of the party proposing them.

If the Senator will look at the three lines proposed to be stricken out by this amendment at the top of page 5, he will see that there is an error in the provision that is there made; and it was to cure that that this proposed amendment is offered. The provision as it now stands in the bill is "to sue and be sued in the courts of the United States in all cases in which such courts have jurisdiction, where one of the parties is a State or Territory of the United States."

I was having in mind when I drafted the bill the constitutional provision as to the right of a State suing in the Supreme Court of the United States; but when I came to look at it, I discovered what I ought to have known without looking, that Territories are not empowered to sue at all. The provision is only with respect to the Supreme Court. I thought the entire purpose was subserved by simply giving them the power to sue and be sued as a body politic; and then it would be a question of jurisdiction. They can sue in any court that has jurisdiction of the subject-matter.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I think the construction made by me is one capable of being taken in the case of that amendment; but I submit to the Senator that if that is the purpose and limit of it, I should have no objection.

Mr. FORAKER. That is the sole purpose. We had no other.

Mr. BACON. And the limit?

Mr. FORAKER. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the amendment of the Senator from Ohio will be agreed to.

Mr. FORAKER. I propose to amend, in line 4, section 4, on page 5, after the word "ordinances," by inserting the words "of Puerto Rico;" and in the same line, after the word "force," by striking out the words "in Puerto Rico."

The only purpose of this amendment is to transpose the words "of Puerto Rico" and to correct the phrase.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the proposed amendment?

Mr. COCKRELL. How would the bill then read?

Mr. FORAKER. It would then read:

That the laws and ordinances of Puerto Rico now in force shall continue in full force and effect.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is right.

Mr. FORAKER. This refers to the laws of Spain which are already in force there. There will not be any laws of our enactment. The words "of Puerto Rico" are simply descriptive of the laws. I have no objection to the words "now in force" being retained.

Mr. BACON. As I understand the Senator's suggestion, that is intended to have reference solely to the laws which were in existence when Puerto Rico was a part of the territory of Spain?

Mr. FORAKER. Solely. The Senator will see by reading the next two or three lines that it could not have any other reference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be agreed to, if there be no objection.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that the amendment may be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 5, in section 4, line 4, after the word "ordinances," it is proposed to insert the words "of Puerto Rico;" and after the word "force," in the same line, to strike out "in Puerto Rico;" so that if amended it will read:

That the laws and ordinances of Puerto Rico now in force shall continue in full force and effect, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BACON. I want to suggest to the Senator whether possibly language might not be inserted there which would make the intention beyond the possibility of question? The use of the word "now" might possibly mislead. I suggest that the Senator use words which will indicate the intention to have reference to the Spanish laws in Puerto Rico which existed prior to the treaty of peace.

Mr. FORAKER. If the Senator will allow me, the title of the laws is "The Laws of Cuba, Puerto Rico, and the Philippines." That is the technical name of the laws now in force.

Mr. BACON. I only made the suggestion.

Mr. FORAKER. If the Senator thinks, after looking it over, that the language is not sufficiently clear, I shall have no objection to an amendment to it; only, I think he will find that it is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is no amendment now pending, the previous amendment having been agreed to.

Mr. FORAKER. As a further amendment, I move to strike out the whole of section 5 and to insert in lieu thereof what I send to the desk to be read.

I will state that section 5 provides for the extension of the laws of the United States relating to commerce, navigation, etc. They are already extended. I will say by way of explanation, by another clause of this bill, which extends all laws not locally inapplicable.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out section 5, as follows:

SEC. 5. That the laws of the United States relating to commerce, navigation, and merchant seamen are hereby extended to and over Puerto Rico, and the Commissioner of Navigation may make such regulations as he may deem expedient for the nationalization of all vessels owned by the inhabitants of Puerto Rico on the 11th day of April, 1899, and which continued to be so owned up to the date of such nationalization, and the coasting trade between Puerto Rico and any other portion of the United States shall be regulated in accordance with the provisions of law applicable to such trade between any two great coasting districts;

And in lieu thereof to insert:

SEC. 5. That the Commissioner of Navigation shall make such regulations, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, as he may deem expedient for the nationalization of all vessels owned by the inhabitants of Puerto Rico on the 11th day of April, 1899, and which continued to be so owned up to the date of such nationalization, and for the admission of the same to all of the benefits of the coasting trade of the United States, and the coasting trade between Puerto Rico and the United States shall be regulated in accordance with the provisions of law applicable to such trade between any two great coasting districts.

Mr. FORAKER. That is, in the United States.

Mr. BACON. "Trade coasting?"

Mr. FORAKER. No; "great coasting districts." The statute on that subject divides the United States into three great coasting districts.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the amendment be again read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will again read the amendment.

The Secretary again read the amendment of Mr. FORAKER.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FORAKER. The Senator from Alabama suggests that there be added at the end of what I have proposed the words "of the United States." I have no objection to that.

Mr. ALLEN. I should like to ask whether any order has been made by which the amendments of the committee should have the right of way?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will inform the Senator that the bill, being the unfinished business, was taken up in its regular order, and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] stated that he would propose certain amendments to the bill on behalf of the committee; that the amendments which were objected to would go over, and that those which were not objected to would be adopted, so that the bill could be printed as amended.

Mr. ALLEN. Ordinarily, as I understand, it is customary for the Senator in charge of a bill to ask and obtain leave that the committee amendments be first considered. Has such as order as that been made in this case?

Mr. FORAKER. Yes; as to the original text.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Unanimous consent was given, the Chair will inform the Senator from Nebraska, that that course should be pursued.

Mr. ALLEN. I wanted to call the attention of the Senator from Ohio in that connection to section 3. I do not know that it is in order to do so now. That section defines the citizenship of the island of Puerto Rico.

Mr. FORAKER. If the Senator will allow me, that section was passed over a while ago under the objection of some Senator.

Mr. ALLEN. Very well. I think possibly, then, what I desire to say ought to be submitted in connection with that objection.

Mr. FORAKER. That may be.

Mr. ALLEN. I wanted to direct particular attention to this language. Speaking of the people of that island, the bill says:

And they, together with such other citizens of the United States as may reside in Puerto Rico, shall constitute a body politic under the name of The People of Puerto Rico, with governmental powers as hereinafter conferred, and with power to sue and be sued, etc.

What is to be the character, if any, of the government of Puerto Rico? What is to be its classification? Is it to be a district, a colony, a Territory, a State, or a mere province or dependency?

Mr. FORAKER. It is not by the language of this bill given any name except the name of Puerto Rico.

Mr. ALLEN. I observe that.

Mr. FORAKER. That is to say, it is not called a district; it is not called a Territory; it is not called any particular kind of a political subdivision.

Mr. ALLEN. I observe the absence of classification, and I do not know whether it was the result of accident or design.

Mr. FORAKER. It was the result of design.

Mr. ALLEN. I think that is true, probably.

Right here, Mr. President, I want to protest, as one Senator, that we ought not to run away from the question of settling the political status and the classification of that island. I doubt if there can be found in the history of the United States a bill drawn exactly as this bill has been drawn. The island is to be a political entity known as the people of Puerto Rico. What relation do those people hold to the United States? What is the island of Puerto Rico; that is, what is its relation to the United States? Certainly, Mr. President, if we want to follow precedents it must be a Territory, unless we follow the late precedents in the cases of Alaska and the Sandwich Islands.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me just a moment, I think he was not in the Chamber when this bill was taken up for consideration under an agreement that we would consider this afternoon only such amendments and provisions of the bill as there would be no debate about, the idea being simply to get some phrases corrected and some minor amendments made that we thought no one would object to. It was also taken up under an agreement that at 4 o'clock—which is only five minutes off—other business should be transacted. I do not want to interfere with the Senator addressing the Senate at his pleasure, and at whatever length he pleases, but I should like to have these amendments acted upon if he has no special objection.

Mr. ALLEN. I certainly will not violate any unanimous-consent agreement, and shall gladly oblige the Senator from Ohio, as I know he would oblige me.

Mr. FORAKER. I am much obliged to the Senator from Nebraska.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would state that there is an amendment pending which has not been agreed to nor passed over. Is there objection to the amendment?

Mr. FORAKER. I ask that it be again stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It was to add to the new section inserted as section 5 the words "of the United States."

Mr. FORAKER. That was agreed to, I believe, without objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is not aware that it was agreed to. Is there objection to the amendment?

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I rise for the purpose of asking a question for information. Section 5, which is proposed to be stricken out, is one which extends the navigation laws of the United States to Puerto Rico. That is the broad intention of it, as I understand?

Mr. FORAKER. Yes, sir.

Mr. BACON. Now, the amendment proposed is one which has the purpose of extending the registration laws to vessels owned in Puerto Rico at a certain date. As to that, I should suppose there would be no objection. The question I wish to ask the Senator from Ohio is—it is very difficult to understand the purport of an amendment simply from hearing it read from the desk—whether or not the additional language, other than that to which I have just alluded with reference to the registration of vessels, is intended to accomplish the same result as that which is now accomplished by section 5, or whether it proposes in any manner to change the section?

Mr. FORAKER. It is precisely the same as before. I will say to the Senator from Georgia that section 12 of this bill extends all the laws of the United States not locally inapplicable to Puerto Rico, and I did not want to repeat the provision.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There being no objection, the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio will be agreed to. The Chairs hears no objection, and it is agreed to.

Mr. FORAKER. I now propose, on page 13, in line 7, section 16, after the word "President," to insert "for a like term of four years."

I will say, in explanation of this amendment, that it relates to the tenure of office of five of the persons to be appointed as members of the executive council, the other six members being bureau officers, the tenure of office as to each having been fixed at four years. It was a mere oversight in reporting the bill to fail to fix any tenure for the other members of the executive council; and so I propose to insert the words "for a like term of four years."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There being no objection, the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. BACON. I hope the amendment will not be considered as having been finally acted upon. It is a matter of some importance. We have not the amendments before us to consider them properly, and I simply desire to have the last amendment go over.

Mr. FORAKER. I have no objection to passing it over, if the Senator wants to look at it further.

Mr. BACON. I should rather that would be done, and that it should go over for the present.

Mr. FORAKER. I think the Senator will find that he will have no objection to it when he looks at it; and if so, I shall be glad to have it adopted. That amendment is passed over, as I understand?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair so understands.

Mr. FORAKER. On page 17, section 27, line 4, I propose to amend by inserting after the word "who"—this relates to the qualifications of voters, I will say for the information and benefit of Senators—in line 4, page 17, after the word "who," by inserting "have been bona fide residents for one year, and who;" so as to read:

> At such elections all citizens of Puerto Rico shall be allowed to vote who have been bona fide residents for one year, and who possess, etc.

Then, after the word "the," I move to insert "other;" so as to read:

> Who possess the other qualifications of voters under the laws and military orders in force, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FORAKER. I move to further amend by inserting after the word "such," in line 6 of the same section, on page 17, the words "modifications and."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BACON. I may misunderstand the Senator. It is very difficult, without having the amendment before us, to thoroughly comprehend them. I understand, though, that the amendment would put it in the power of the executive council, an appointive body, to change the qualifications of voters.

Mr. FORAKER. From what they are now as fixed by military order. That I thought was quite proper, because they have an order in force there fixing not only an educational, but a property qualification.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator means only to change the military order, that is correct; but I ask him to examine the language and see whether it does or not. The language is this: "The qualifications of voters under the laws and military orders." That would include the right to modify not only military orders, but all laws.

Mr. FORAKER. It would, yes; but under the law as it existed before any military orders were made, every male over 21 years of age had the right to vote without regard to whether or not he could read or write or had property. By the order of General Davis certain qualifications for those over 21 years of age were prescribed. Another qualification was that the person should be able to read and write or that he should own property; and in that order it was provided that no one should vote who had not been a bona fide resident for two years. I am intending there simply to provide, making it symmetrical, so as to make whatever other modifications may be necessary, that any citizen of Puerto Rico who has had a bona fide residence there for one year before the election may have the right to vote, as is the case in all of our States probably.

Mr. BACON. Does the Senator understand that this relates to the first election?

Mr. FORAKER. Yes, sir; that is, the legislature after that can fix any qualifications it sees fit. The provision relates only to one election.

Mr. BACON. The reason I asked the question was that the plural is used there.

Mr. FORAKER. There are elections for members of the house of delegates.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I ask the Senator from Ohio whether his bill has now reached a stage where it would stand being put aside for a little while?

Mr. FORAKER. If the Senator will allow me about five minutes longer, I think I can get through with the amendments. I propose to amend further, on page 19, section 30, line 23, after the word "also." This is the provision relating to the granting of franchises. It provides:

> That all grants of franchises, rights, and privileges or concessions of a public or quasi-public nature shall be made by the executive council, with the approval of the governor, subject also to the approval of the President of the United States, who shall report the same to Congress.

I want to insert, after the word "also," in line 23, the following: "as to railroad, telegraph, and telephone franchises;" the purpose of this amendment being to require only the more important ones to come here, and not to make it necessary for the others to do so.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to know where that amendment comes in?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President, in that same connection there is an amendment proposed that instead of the executive council there shall be a legislative assembly.

Mr. FORAKER. I hope the Senator will not insist upon that, the idea being that the executive council is constantly in a situation to act, but the legislature can not act, except when in session, and it is only allowed to be in session sixty days.

Mr. PETTUS. The things we are dealing with now concern the vital interests of those people, and all proper safeguards ought to be thrown around these franchises. I object to an amendment limiting this provision to railroads and other corporations of that sort, for the reason that the limitation ought to extend to all; it ought to be with the approval of the President, at least, as to all these franchises.

Mr. FORAKER. If the amendment proposed should be adopted, the minor franchises—for instance, to a gas company or to an electric lighting company—in a small municipality could be disposed of finally by the action of the executive council or the governor; but as to all franchises that are intermunicipal, extending through the island, such as railroads, telegraphs, and telephones, they would be required to be approved by the President.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let that amendment be considered pending.

Mr. FORAKER. If the Senator wants to object to it, I will suspend here, in order that the Senator from Colorado may make the motion he desires to make.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be passed over.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After forty-two minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, March 20, 1900, at 12 o'clock m.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate March 19, 1900.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, March 19, 1900.

The House met at 12 o'clock m., and was called to order by the Speaker.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last was read and approved.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. ALLEN of Mississippi indefinitely, on account of illness.

HEIRS AT LAW OF DUNCAN CAMPBELL.

Mr. KERR. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 6497) for the relief of the heirs at law of the late Duncan H. Campbell.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioner of Patents is hereby authorized and directed to grant and issue to Annie Campbell, widow of Duncan Campbell, an extension of Letters Patent No. 231954, issued September 7, 1880, and Letters Patent No. 253156, issued January 31, 1882, for the full term of seven years from and after the date of the expiration of each of said letters patent, and that said letters patent be, and the same hereby are, extended for the term of seven years after the said respective dates of expiration: Provided, That said extension of said letters patent and all the benefits of this act shall be held to apply only to the use and benefit of said Annie Campbell, widow of Duncan Campbell.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I demand a second.

Mr. KERR. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KERR. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the Clerk read the unanimous report of the Committee on Patents.

The SPEAKER. The report will be read in the time of the gentleman from Ohio.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Patents, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6497) for the relief of the heirs at law of the late Duncan Campbell, beg leave to submit the following report, and recommend that said bill do pass, with amendments:

Duncan H. Campbell, late of the city of Pawtucket, in the State of Rhode Island, was a native of Scotland and a naturalized citizen of the United States, who obtained Letters Patent No. 231954 September 7, 1880, for a sewing machine, the particular value of which was in the fact that it successfully carried and operated a waxed thread. He also obtained, on January 31, 1882, Letters Patent No. 253156 for a wax-thread sewing machine. Three-fourths interest in each of these inventions was assigned to other parties, namely, H. B. Metcalf, Frank E. Comey, and Daniel McNiven, for nominal consideration, upon condition that a company or corporation should be formed to exploit said inventions and manufacture said machines, in which company or corporation said Campbell should have a certain amount of stock, should be a director, and should receive continuous employment at a compensation to be agreed upon.

This company was formed, and to it were assigned the patents herein referred to. It entered upon the transaction of its business, and for some time said Campbell was employed and enjoyed all the rights contemplated for him in the original agreement, in the meantime working other and different inventions, among them a so-called welt machine of great value. These subsequent inventions were claimed to be included in the original agreement, and, it was claimed by the company, should be at once assigned without further consideration. This was resisted by Mr. Campbell, and the committee do not find that the contention of the company is sustained by the evidence presented. Mr. Campbell resisting this demand, the relations between himself and the directors of the company became strained to such an extent that he was dropped from membership in the board of trustees, and said board, without authority except its own will, arbitrarily canceled the contract of employment with said Campbell, and also canceled all other contracts between them, but without restoring to said Campbell any of his former rights under said letters patent.

From the best evidence obtainable Mr. Campbell was denied all participation in the affairs of the company, and was notified that no transfers of stock by him would be recognized by the company. This action rendered the stock held by him of comparatively small value, and from that time up to his death, in 1894, he received nothing from said company either in the way of salary, dividends on stock, or otherwise, nor has his widow received anything since. Dividends have been passed or suspended, although the inventions are of great value and sources of much revenue to the company.

The evidence before the committee tends to show that while the company has, perhaps, avoided strict legal liability, its treatment of the widow of said Campbell has not been such as in equity and good conscience she should be entitled to. She is in needy circumstances, and therefore, inasmuch as your committee believe that one object of the patent laws is to protect the pecuniary interest of inventors, who are not always possessed of that business acumen which seems to characterize certain other classes of men, and inasmuch as this bill involves no appropriation and works no hardship to any parties concerned, and inasmuch, perhaps, as it tends to remedy the distressed condition of the widow of a worthy but unfortunate inventor, the bill will address itself to the sense of justice of anyone.

Your committee would further report that in the Fifty-fourth Congress the Senate Committee on Patents favorably reported the bill, and at least one favorable report on the bill was made by one of the former Committees on Patents of this House, all of which is suggested as an evidence of the merits of the bill.

Your committee do therefore recommend that the following amendments be adopted and that the bill do pass:

In line 4, page 1, after the words "Annie Campbell," add the words "widow of."

In line 5, page 1, strike out all of said line, commencing with the name "Hector Campbell."

Also, strike out all of line 6.

Also, strike out all of line 7, same page, down to and including the word "assigns."

After the word "expiration" in line 17, page 1, add the following words: "Provided, That said extension of said letters patent and all the benefits of this act shall be held to apply only to the use and benefit of said Annie Campbell, widow of Duncan Campbell."

Mr. KERR. Mr. Speaker, if there is no objection to the passage of the bill, I will ask for a vote, and will reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I have sent for a copy of the bill and report, but have been unable to get either. It is almost impossible to learn the effect of this bill from the reading. I should like to have some explanation of it from the gentleman.

First, I should like to know if this motion to suspend the rules is made by the direction of the committee or is an individual motion?

Mr. KERR. It is a motion made by direction of the committee. I will say to the gentleman that the committee simply recommended some formal amendments.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Did the committee unanimously report this bill?

Mr. KERR. They did. One or two members of the committee have some objections on general principles to the extension of a patent, but against this particular bill there was no objection.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I am unable to get a copy of the bill, and I should like the gentleman to give us some explanation of it more full than we have heard.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. I should like to ask the gentleman a question. Will not the passage of this bill result——

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee a question.

Mr. KERR. I yield first to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHEELER].

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Will not the passage of this bill result in depriving the assignees under the original patent of some rights acquired by them?

Mr. KERR. Not at all. The original patents have expired and the assignees have reaped all the benefits they were entitled to under those patents.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Did not the contract between the patentee and his associates contemplate a renewal of the patent?

Mr. KERR. No; I think not—not as I recollect it. There was an assignment of the original terms of the two patents, and those have expired, one expiring some three years ago and the last one last year.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Is there an effort being made by the assignees of the original patent to renew it?

Mr. KERR. Not so far as I know. There has been no application brought to the attention of the Committee on Patents.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Was the invention assigned at the same time that the patent was assigned?

Mr. KERR. The patents were assigned some time before the decease of the husband of the beneficiary under this bill, and the basis of the bill is that by an entirely unfair proceeding he was deprived of his interest in the patents.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Was the invention assigned by the patentee?

Mr. KERR. Certainly; the patents and the invention were assigned to this company in which Mr. Campbell was originally an associate or partner. It was an association or incorporation, and it appears that Mr. Campbell was unjustly deprived of his interest in the company.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. I would like to ask the gentleman, if the invention was assigned, what right the widow of the inventor has to a renewal of the patent?

Mr. KERR. She would have exactly the same right as anybody else would have, if the House thinks it proper to renew it. The committee made a very careful investigation of this question and looked into it thoroughly. Not only that, but the Committee on Patents in the Fifty-fourth Congress, as I recollect it, and in the Fifty-fifth Congress, committees differing very largely from the committee that now exists, made a careful and thorough examination in the case and unanimously recommended the passage of the bill.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. I want to vote for the bill; I am not antagonizing it; but I should like to know what right the widow has to a renewal of the patent?

Mr. KERR. In a former Congress, the Fifty-fourth Congress, the Senate Committee on Patents also investigated the matter, and made a unanimous report in favor of the bill. So that it seems to me that the subject-matter has been thoroughly investigated, and there can not exist any very weighty objection to the bill, except upon the general proposition of objection to the extension of patents.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. But I will say that if the original inventor not only assigned the patent but the invention, I can not see how his widow has any right to make an application for an extension of the patent.

Mr. KERR. Well, the gentleman makes a distinction I fail to understand, though I have had some considerable experience in patent matters. He simply assigned the patents for a nominal consideration to these three gentlemen, and the four afterwards formed a company, and the stock was divided among the four. Soon after the organization of this company it turned out to be a profitable patent, and the three, by a proceeding that was entirely unfair, the committee have found, excluded Campbell from all profit or benefit in this company, and so long as he lived he never received any benefit out of the agreement; but these gentlemen, who were the stockholders of the company, continued to receive benefit from the patents until they expired. This bill, in some form or another, in one House or the other, has been before the Congress for some years, and has been recommended by two committees; and whatever delay there has been is on account of the difficulty that has been met of getting a bill through, not because anybody had any serious objection to it, so far as developed, and I have had a great deal to do with it for the last two or three Congresses. I think it is a good bill, and ought to pass.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I yield the gentleman from Missouri such time as he desires.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make only two or three remarks about the extension of patents in general. This particular case is just about as meritorious as most of the applications for extension of patents are. I notified the chairman of the committee that in another case, while I would not take the trouble to make a minority report, I would reserve the right to fight all these extensions of patents on the floor of the House. I wish to state this to the members of the House. There are a very large number of applications now, in one way and another, for the extension of patents, and my own opinion about it is that our patent laws are broad enough and liberal enough now, and the way that these requests for extension of patents usually come up is this, that the patentee or the assignee of the patentee sleeps on his rights for several years. They generally make a fortune out of the patent, and then, when the time has expired, which is long enough, they come to Congress and say that they have not made enough.

Now, that is substantially the case of every application that is made to that committee, and while, as the committee said in their report, a bill like this does not call for any appropriation by Congress of the moneys of the United States Government, every man with ordinary intelligence knows that the effect of every patent, almost, is to make somebody in some way pay for it. As a matter of historical fact, some of the most valuable patents ever issued by the Patent Office have been extended by acts of Congress. Men who study about these matters must come to the conclusion that the patent laws of the United States as they exist are sufficiently liberal to incite inventive genius to do its very best, and it appears to me, without worrying the House with any extended remarks, that there ought to be some extraordinarily good reason to induce Congress in a special case to overrule the general law that it has laid down to govern all these patent cases, and my own opinion about it is that this case presents no sufficient reason to make an exception in favor of this woman to the general law on patents.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill with the amendments recommended by the committee.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the Chair was in doubt.

Mr. KERR. I ask for a division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 50, noes 53.

So (two-thirds not having voted in favor thereof) the motion was lost.

SOUTH MANCHESTER, CONN., A PORT OF DELIVERY.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2114) to constitute South Manchester, Conn., a port of delivery.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That South Manchester, Conn., be, and is hereby, constituted a port of delivery in the customs collection district of Hartford, Conn., and that the privileges of the seventh section of the act approved June 10, 1880, entitled "An act to amend the statutes in relation to the immediate transportation of dutiable goods, and for other purposes," be, and they are hereby, extended to said port of South Manchester.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and being read the third time, it was passed.

On motion of Mr. HENRY of Connecticut, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I ask that House bill 8567, similar in terms, be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks that House bill 8567, relating to the same subject, lie upon the table. Without objection, this order will be made.

There was no objection.

Mr. LANDIS rose.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Indiana suspend a moment? The gentleman from Ohio, Mr. GROSVENOR, has a request, and he is anxious to leave, as he is not well.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, at the close of the debate on the Puerto Rican bill general leave was given to extend remarks in the RECORD for a period of ten days. It is well known to the House that during eight of those ten days I was confined to my bed with sickness. I now ask unanimous consent that I may have the time extended until a week from to-day to print a speech on the topic, wholly pertinent to the Puerto Rico question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio states that during the pendency of the order of the House given ten days ago to print observations on the Puerto Rico bill he was confined to his hotel with illness. He now asks unanimous consent that he may have until a week from to-day to print remarks on this subject. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

C. E. MARR AND E. H. PIERCE.

Mr. LANDIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate bill 1740, to authorize C. E. Marr and E. H. Pierce to accept silver watches awarded to them by the government of the Dominion of Canada in recognition of their services in rescuing British sailors.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That C. E. Marr and E. H. Pierce, keepers of the Cuckolds, Maine, fog-signal station, be, and are hereby, authorized to accept each a silver watch awarded to them, respectively, by the government of the Dominion of Canada in recognition of their services in rescuing the captain and crew of the schooner Aurora, of Harbourville, Nova Scotia, on January 4, 1896.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Indiana if this is the same bill that he presented some days ago?

Mr. LANDIS. It is the same bill.

The SPEAKER. Will the House please be in order? Will gentlemen take their seats and cease conversation? There is no class of business where the House should be in better order than in cases where unanimous consent is asked, so that the members may hear what is proposed.

Mr. LANDIS. I will say to the gentleman from Tennessee that this is the same bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I asked the gentleman for some information then as to where these persons resided, and he was not able to state. I hope now he will make a statement about it.

Mr. LANDIS. I will say this to the gentleman from Tennessee: These men were light keepers at Cuckolds fog-signal station, Maine, and on January 4, 1896, near Southport, they rescued the captain and seamen of the wrecked schooner Aurora. Application was made to Congress in December, 1894, for the passage of the bill authorizing these men to accept the watches awarded them by the government of the Dominion of Canada, and although it received the approval of the Secretary of State, no action was taken upon it at that time. On December 13, 1899, the request was renewed by Secretary Hay, and the bill passed the Senate January 30, 1900.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and being read the third time, it was passed.

On motion of Mr. LANDIS, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

C. R. DOBBINS.

Mr. LANDIS. Mr. Speaker, I now ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 746) to authorize C. R. Dobbins to accept a gold watch awarded to him by the government of the Dominion of Canada in recognition of his humane and gallant services to the shipwrecked crew of the British schooner Ashton, of Weymouth, Nova Scotia.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That C. R. Dobbins, keeper of the light station at Moose Peak, Maine, be, and he is hereby, authorized to accept a gold watch awarded to him by the government of the Dominion of Canada, in recognition of his humane and gallant services to the shipwrecked crew of the British schooner Ashton, of Weymouth, Nova Scotia.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Before consent is given, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman if this case belongs to the same class as the one just considered?

Mr. LANDIS. The same class, and the circumstances are very much the same.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I notice that there is a difference in the style of the watches.

Mr. LANDIS. Yes; the others were silver watches, and this is a gold watch.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Why this difference?

Mr. LANDIS. The value of silver bullion having declined so perceptibly since the circumstances which led to the recognition, the Canadian government thought that it would be more in keeping to give a gold watch. [Laughter.]

Mr. RICHARDSON. Is that all the reason?

Mr. LANDIS. I presume so; I think that is sufficient. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and being read the third time, it was passed.

On motion of Mr. LANDIS, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills and joint resolutions of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 3254. An act to amend section 953 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to the signing of a bill of exceptions; and

S. 3106. An act relating to the accounts of United States marshals and the clerks of the district courts for the Territory of Utah.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments a bill of the following title in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

H. R. 5390. An act granting an increase of pension to Maria E. Mailley.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. BAKER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills and joint resolutions of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 5299. An act granting an increase of pension to Joseph McCune;

H. R. 309. An act granting a pension to James M. Kercheval; and

H. J. Res. 204. Joint resolution to provide for the removal of snow and ice in the city of Washington, D. C.

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BARNEY. I desire to call the attention of the House to House bill No. 6627, making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901, and for other purposes. As will be remembered, this bill was passed by the House several weeks ago and sent to the Senate. It has been returned to the House with certain amendments, and now lies on the Speaker's table. I ask unanimous consent that the House nonconcur in the amendments of the Senate and ask a conference.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that the House nonconcur in the amendments of the Senate to this bill and ask a conference. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. BARNEY, Mr. MCCLEARY, and Mr. BELL as conferees on the part of the House.

STEAMER THETIS.

Mr. CANNON. By direction of the Committee on Appropriations I report back, with a recommendation that it pass, the bill (S. 3138) to provide for necessary repairs to the steamer Thetis for service as a revenue cutter. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated and made immediately available, for the purposes of repairing and equipping the steamer Thetis for service as a vessel of the Revenue-Cutter Service.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Does this bill come from the Appropriations Committee?

Mr. CANNON. Yes, sir.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Is it unanimously reported?

Mr. CANNON. Yes, sir.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill; which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUERTO RICAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CANNON. There is upon the Speaker's table what is known as the Puerto Rican appropriation bill, which was passed by the House several weeks ago and is now returned from the Senate with amendments. I desire to call up that bill, to move that the House nonconcur in the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The title of the bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9080) appropriating for the benefit and government of Puerto Rico revenues collected on importations therefrom since its evacuation by Spain, and revenues hereafter collected on such importations under existing law.

The amendments of the Senate were read, as follows:

Page 1, line 9, strike out all after "hundred," down to and including "law," line 12.

Page 2, line 1, after "government," insert "now existing and which may hereafter be established in Puerto Rico, and for public education, public works, and other governmental and public purposes therein."

Page 2, line 2, strike out "and benefit of Puerto Rico until otherwise provided by law."

Page 2, lines 3 and 4, strike out "revenues herein referred to, already collected and to be collected under existing law, are" and insert "said sum, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is."

Amend the title so as to read:

"An act appropriating, for the benefit and government of Puerto Rico, customs revenues collected on importations therefrom since its evacuation by Spain to the 1st day of January, 1900."

Mr. MCRAE. I move that the House concur in the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] moves to nonconcur in the Senate amendments, and the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MCRAE] moves to concur. The vote will first be taken on the motion of the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. MCRAE. Will the gentleman from Illinois indicate how much time will be allowed for debate?

Mr. CANNON. I would be glad to have as speedy action as possible on this bill, but I will yield to the gentleman. How much time does he desire?

Mr. MCRAE. So far as I am personally concerned, I desire but very little. But some gentlemen on this side desire to discuss the matter; it is not possible just now to say how long—not very long.

Mr. CANNON. How much time probably is desired on that side?

Mr. MCRAE. We will try to get along with thirty minutes.

Mr. CANNON. Say twenty-five. I have an hour in my own right. I want to occupy a little of that time myself and I also want time enough to hold parliamentarily the power to test the sense of the House as to a vote. I have no objection to allowing twenty-eight minutes on a side.

Mr. MCRAE. All right.

Mr. CANNON. I will occupy a very brief time and then yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. Speaker, on the 9th day of March the House passed a bill (H. R. 9080) appropriating, for the benefit and government of Puerto Rico, revenues collected on importations therefrom since its evacuation by Spain, and revenues hereafter collected on such importations under existing law.

It will be remembered that the House appropriated by this bill $2,095,000, in round numbers, "being the amount of customs revenue received on importations by the United States from Puerto Rico since the evacuation of Puerto Rico by the Spanish forces on the 18th day of October, 1898, to the 1st of January, 1900."

In addition to this, the following language was in the bill:

Together with any further customs revenue collected on importations from Puerto Rico since the 1st of January, 1900, or that shall hereafter be collected under existing law.

The Senate considered this bill, and amended it by striking out these words:

Together with any further customs revenue collected on importations from Puerto Rico since the 1st of January, 1900, or that shall hereafter be collected under existing law.

It will be noticed that the House not only appropriated all revenues which had been collected up to the 1st of January, but appropriated the revenues which had been collected on these importations from that time to the time of the enactment of the law, if it shall be enacted. The House bill went further, and appropriated all revenues that should be or shall be hereafter collected upon such importations under existing law.

The Senate strikes out these provisions. The Senate also amends as follows: It provides that the revenues shall be placed at the disposal of the President, to be used for the government.

Now comes the Senate amendment:

Now existing and which may hereafter be established in Puerto Rico, and for public education, public works, and other governmental and public purposes therein.

The House language was:

To be used for the government and benefit of Puerto Rico until otherwise provided by law.

This amendment of the Senate, in legal effect, in my judgment, does not change the House provisions; and if that had been the only amendment I should have voted to concur in the same. It is a mere difference in phraseology.

But the material amendment is the one that I first referred to. Now, the House believed it to be very proper to devote the revenues collected under the Dingley law upon importations from Puerto Rico, to devote the money that had been collected and the money that shall be collected, until the law is changed, to the same purpose. The Senate, however, by its amendment stops with the devotion of these revenues to this purpose up to the 1st of January.

In my judgment it is perfectly clear that if the revenues should be devoted to the benefit of Puerto Rico up to the 1st of January, they should, upon the same principle and for the same reason, be devoted to the benefit of Puerto Rico under existing law and until the law is changed. Therefore, my motion was to nonconcur in the Senate amendments and ask a conference with the Senate upon those amendments. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. McRAE] moves to concur in the amendments. His motion, if adopted, would at once pass the law. My motion, if adopted, would send it to a committee of conference with a view upon the part of the House to ask the Senate to recede from its amendment and cover the whole subject as the House covered it when it passed the bill.

I will now yield to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. McRAE] twenty-eight minutes.

Mr. McRAE. I only want to say a few words myself. Both these propositions concede that the money that has been collected ought to be refunded. The House bill is indefinite as to what may be collected and refunded. The Senate proposition is definite as to the amount and time. The House proposition implies the right of the United States to enforce the Dingley tariff bill against the Puerto Ricans. The Senate proposition does not concede that, and for this, if no other, reason I prefer the Senate amendments. These are important distinctions. We are all in favor of giving the money back to the Puerto Ricans, and I believe I can speak for every man on this side when I say that not only would we give them back what has been unjustly taken from them by unequal taxes, but that we would at once stop any further collections under the Dingley law and give them what they have asked for and what they are entitled to—free trade with the United States, of which they are part. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I yield to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BELL] five minutes.

Mr. BELL. Mr. Speaker, there is no question, I think, in the mind of anybody but that the phraseology of this bill is wonderfully improved by the Senate amendments. The Senate bill also prescribes the general application of the funds. It makes an appropriation of what has been collected, of over $200,000,000. Now, there is an underlying feature of this bill that is more important than this appropriation. That is, that this bill as amended really anticipates that we propose, at an early date, to enact a law giving those people civil government, and the Puerto Ricans themselves are in favor of that.

I had the pleasure last night of listening to Dr. Ames, a resident of Puerto Rico, who spoke to an immense audience in this city. He held up our actions and contrasted them with the treatment which the Puerto Ricans received from Spain. He said they wanted no such charities as we offered them; that they came to the United States and asked what the great majority of the people and newspapers of the United States say we should give them. He showed that 93 per cent of the newspapers of the United States demand that Puerto Rico shall have free commerce with the United States.

But, say these parties, in addition to free trade the one thing above all others that Puerto Rico demands is a civil government; that free trade is not so important in Puerto Rico as a civil government for that island. The amendment of the Senate contemplates that we will appropriate the money collected, and then that we will make the machinery for the purpose of governing Puerto Rico and the necessary appropriations under that machinery. The Senate amendment also gives the President less leeway, and it provides that he shall use this money, or such part of it as may be necessary, for the purposes of education, public works of the government, and public purposes generally. It also contemplates the organization of a civil government, and gives this amount of money, or what is left, to the civil government for their disposition, when organized.

Now, sir, it seems to me that, instead of spending much time over a quibble, we should make the appropriation as contemplated by the Senate. When we have made the appropriation we should hurry to give the island of Puerto Rico a civil government. Dr. Ames, who is a resident of Puerto Rico, and who was a citizen of the United States before going there, said that under Spain they had laws that were unexceptionable, but it was the failure to execute the laws which made their hardships. He pointed out that they had four representatives in the higher legislative body in Spain and sixteen in the lower house, and he referred to us as attempting to humiliate the people of Puerto Rico as Spain never had descended to think of doing under her administration.

Now, sir, that put in my mind a thought. As Dr. Ames says, it was not the laws which were passed by Spain, but it was the failure to execute the laws passed by the Cortes in their true spirit that caused the oppression of the people of Puerto Rico. He says we may never expect harmony in Puerto Rico while they are governed by brass buttons and steel bayonets; that they want to govern themselves; that they want to do so immediately, and that they demand at our hands not these little contributions or begrudging charities, but a régime for the government of the island. I say, because this bill contemplates that, because it provides for this fund to be turned over to the contemplated régime, and because the language is more definite and the phraseology better, and because it attempts only to appropriate what we have collected heretofore, leaving it to Congress to make an appropriation of the future collections—for these reasons, it seems to me, this bill is much preferable to the bill as it passed the House. Therefore, I am in favor of the Senate amendment. I am in favor of making this appropriation immediately, and allowing a little relief to these long-suffering people who are right at our door, and who are now suffering under our neglect and mistreatment. I hope we may concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BELL. Yes; certainly.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Are you opposed to giving them the revenues received since the 1st day of January and to be received hereafter?

Mr. BELL. I might be in favor of appropriating those at an opportune time.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Why not now?

Mr. BELL. We here appropriate $2,000,000, more than enough for immediate needs, and we are forcing an appropriation upon a people who do not demand such an appropriation. They demand something higher and better, to wit, a civil government, after this appropriation. I am in favor of giving them civil government, and then taking off the duty and giving them these subsequent collections. But I have said enough. I can not consume the time of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON].

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. McRAE. How much time have I?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has twenty-one minutes remaining.

Mr. McRAE. I yield that time to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON].

Mr. RICHARDSON. I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BALL].

Mr. BALL. Mr. Speaker, I was astonished to hear the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] make a motion to nonconcur in the Senate amendments. When the House bill was passed, on the 2d of March, the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee [Mr. CANNON] used this language:

I would be very glad for storm-swept, starving Puerto Rico that the bill should pass by unanimous consent without debate.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we have the opportunity to relieve the necessities of "storm-swept, starving Puerto Rico" by concurring in the Senate amendments, which embody the principles voted for by the unanimous Democratic minority on this side of the Chamber when the original House bill was pending. That bill appropriated $2,095,455.88, being the amount received on importations from Puerto Rico to the United States since the evacuation of that island by the Spanish forces to the 1st of January, 1900, together with any further customs thereafter collected under existing law, and placed the same at the disposal of the President, to be expended for the government and benefit of Puerto Rico.

The Democratic minority antagonized the bill because it continued the Dingley tariff bill in operation as to Puerto Rican imports and gave all sums already collected under that law and hereafter to be collected thereunder to be disbursed at the discretion of one man, the President. We were not willing to admit the right to apply the Dingley bill to that island, either in the past or in the future.

We were willing to appropriate the full amount which Puerto Rican products had already wrongfully paid, to the benefit of the people of Puerto Rico, provided the purposes for which the money was to be spent could be specified in the bill and not left to the discretion of the President. In behalf of the Democratic minority, when the original bill which passed the House was pending, my colleague from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] moved to recommit the bill at that time with instructions, and said:

I move that the bill be committed to the Committee on Appropriations, with instructions to report it back with amendments limiting the appropriation to the amount now in the Treasury derived from collections upon articles imported from Puerto Rico, and specifying the purposes for which the President may use the money.

That amendment or substitute was voted for by every gentleman on this side of the Chamber, and has been specifically embodied in the substitute or amendment which the Senate of the United States has sent to this House for its consideration. The pending amendment does limit the amount to be appropriated to that already collected from imports from Puerto Rico, and specifies for what purpose the President shall spend these amounts.

Now, is it the purpose of the gentleman from Illinois or of the majority upon the other side of the Chamber, who accused us less than two weeks ago of "shedding crocodile tears over the distress of that island"—is it their purpose, let me ask, to delay action in order that relief may not come to the people, whom the gentleman from Illinois desired to relieve when the measure was pending two weeks ago, without even a moment's debate? I have in my hand an editorial from the New York Herald of to-day, which is as follows:

STARVING PUERTO RICO'S PLEA.

The plea of the 60 half-naked, famishing women who walked barefoot 25 miles to San Juan to beg relief from General Davis touches the heart of the American people as strongly as the appeal of the planters and merchants who will assemble in mass meeting in the same city this afternoon to beg that whatever Congress proposes to do it will do quickly and end their suspense.

When General Davis requested the mayor of San Juan to provide the afflicted women with conveyance back to their homes, he was met with the reply that there is not a penny in the treasury and that the police were still unpaid for their last two months' work. The position in which the United States is put in the eyes of the world through the influence that is exercised over the party in power by the greedy protected industries makes the cheek of every true American burn with shame.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it is within the power of gentlemen upon that side of the Chamber, within twenty minutes, or within thirty minutes, at least, to pass a law which will make at once available over $2,000,000 to be carried to the island which the gentleman from Illinois, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, declared two weeks ago was "storm-swept and starving." Will you do so, or will you rather continue the miseries of unjust taxation now being wrung from those people, delay this matter, and deny relief to them, in order that you may force through the bill which you passed in this House, denying to them the free trade which the President of the United States said "was our plain duty" to give to them, the passage of which caused many gentlemen upon that side of the Chamber to run home and hustle for their renominations?

I ask you, gentlemen, why play politics? Do not resort to the tactics of the person who imposed upon the press by giving out an interview, pretendedly coming from a member of the Cabinet of the President, accusing gentlemen who refused to vote for your measure, taxing both American and Puerto Rican products, of being "crafty politicians who were attempting to play upon the sympathies and prejudices of the country." I do not believe that any Cabinet officer was so lost to self-respect as to give out such an interview, or that any man was ever elevated to so high an office in this Government so unfitted for it as to have given out any such anonymous statement, reflecting upon the President, upon members of Congress, the press, and people of the United States, who believe in free trade with Puerto Rico.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to say that it is the plain duty of this House, in view of the distressing conditions which exist in that unhappy island, to pass the bill as amended by the Senate. Conditions are far worse under the pretended "benevolent assimilation" that we are taking to them than it was under the tyrannical domination of Spain. As between the government that existed there at that time, when they had full proportional representation in the Spanish Cortes equal to that of any other Spanish territory, and the military government we maintain there, wringing taxes under the Dingley bill from them, coupled with the effort to lay an export upon our own breadstuffs shipped to a starving people, I denounce our treatment as far worse than the government which we overthrew when we drove the Spanish flag from that unhappy island.

In the debate that preceded the passage of this bill, after the Republican party had made the mistake of going back upon the recommendation of their President "to give free trade to Puerto Rico," the air was full of slanders upon the President, many pretending that he had officially declared to the people of the United States and recommended to the American Congress "that it was our plain duty to give free trade to Puerto Rico" while privately attempting to electioneer with individual members of this House to get them to vote against his recommendation. You made that fatal mistake, and two weeks afterwards, under the guise of pretended sympathy for these outraged people, you came in here with a flourish of trumpets and passed an appropriation bill for the relief of Puerto Rico, when the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. CANNON] four days before, while advocating a tax upon exports to and imports from Puerto Rico, had declared:

> We on this side have to construct; we have got to do something. This bill must pass or we must vote $2,000,000 out of the Treasury for the coming year to care for Puerto Rico. We do not like to do that.

That tax bill passed. The appropriation bill also passed and is here. It carries, as amended by the Senate, over $2,000,000 for the relief of Puerto Rico. It gives them that which you declared they were entitled to and in which the Senate of the United States agrees, and you have an opportunity without further debate, without waiting to see what will come as the result of your experimental legislation (passed as a predicate for a Supreme Court decision), to rise to the full measure of your duty and vote with the gentlemen upon this side of the House to concur in the Senate amendments, in order that the starving people of Puerto Rico may receive the relief to which they are entitled, and thereby recover, in a measure, from the anomalous position in which you have been placed. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, how much time is left to this side?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has used eleven minutes.

Mr. CANNON. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY].

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, there is no excuse for delaying the House long in the consideration of the motion made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON]. The question raised by it is a simple one. The effect of his motion is to give to the uses of the government of Puerto Rico not only the $2,000,000 appropriated by the bill, but in addition all revenue collected from the 1st of January up to the point of time when the existing tariff laws between Puerto Rico and the United States are supplanted by others. On the other hand, the motion of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MCRAE] would terminate the appropriation of these duties on the first day of January last.

The conflict between the two motions has nothing to do with free trade between the island and the United States. It has nothing to do with the formation of a civil government for the island of Puerto Rico. There are many men in this House and at the other end of the Capitol who are giving that question their daily attention. It can not be done in a day. The work can not be done in the interest of the inhabitants of Puerto Rico unless it be done carefully and intelligently. The prevailing of the motion of the gentleman from Illinois will not retard the formation of a civil government for Puerto Rico for a single hour. The success of the motion of the gentleman from Arkansas will not advance the formation of a civil government for that island a single instant. The success of either motion will not affect the question of free trade between the island and the United States. That may come in time. It probably will come in time. But until there is some action by Congress duties are collected at the ports of Puerto Rico and duties are collected at the ports of the United States upon the traffic between the two sections.

The proposition of the gentleman from Illinois is to declare a policy; to declare that until the law is changed, whether that be sooner or later, every dollar of taxation upon the traffic between Puerto Rico and the United States shall be devoted solely and exclusively to the benefit of the island. Can any gentleman find any fault with that upon this side of the House? Ought any gentleman on that side of the House to find any fault with it? It is simply the extension backward of the principle of the bill which has already passed the House. It is the declaration of the Congress of the United States that until legislation can be had upon that subject-matter no dollar of taxation which is collected upon the traffic between the island and the United States shall go to the benefit of the people of the United States, but that every dollar of it shall go exclusively to the benefit of the people of Puerto Rico.

Mr. BALL. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Certainly.

Mr. BALL. Will not sending the bill to conference delay the relief of Puerto Rico?

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Oh, it may delay it an hour, or a day, and it may delay it two days, but it will not delay it to any appreciable extent. Everybody understands that they are to have this money; they are to have the two millions in any event. According to the position of our side of the House, they not only will have the $2,000,000 but every other dollar of taxation collected upon the traffic between the island and the United States under the existing law.

Mr. BALL. Is it not a fact that you were so pressed for time to give these people that relief that you declined to submit the original proposition to a committee to be considered, the haste was so great? Why not give them immediate relief by concurring in that for which the Senate of the United States has already voted?

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. I understand the gentleman to find some fault with the haste with which the bill was originally considered and passed in the House. I call his attention to the fact that the action taken at that time was taken by unanimous consent. If the measure should have gone to a committee, it was within the power of any gentleman on that side of the House, by his objection, to send it there.

Mr. BALL. I desire to make myself clear upon that matter. We did not object because we believed then that the necessity existed, and we believe it yet. That is why we did not object to the unanimous consent.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Well, so far we all agree that the necessity exists, and that the $2,000,000 be devoted to the purposes of the island; and we say that in addition every dollar collected after the 1st of January, which stands exactly upon the same footing as the $2,000,000 collected before the 1st of January, ought to be devoted to the same purpose.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. CANNON. I yield the gentleman such further time as he may desire.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Now, Mr. Speaker, there ought not to be any contention between the two sides of the House upon this proposition. Every gentleman ought to stand with us and give to the inhabitants of Puerto Rico every dollar of taxation which is collected upon the traffic between Puerto Rico and the United States until such time as Congress can act. Congress can not act to-day; it can not act to-morrow. The action must be some time in the future. The House bill proposes to deal with the question once for all. We propose to be more generous with the island than you do. Why not come to us? Let us disagree about the Constitution, let us disagree about the expediency of giving free trade, but let us all agree that until that time comes every dollar of the money collected from duties between the two countries shall go back to the island of Puerto Rico, which is precisely the motion of the gentleman from Illinois. It ought to have the vote of every gentleman on both sides of the Chamber. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. CANNON. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MCCLEARY].

[Mr. MCCLEARY addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. Speaker, few questions in this Congress have agitated the country like the proposition dealing with Puerto Rico. The issue has been made up before the country; the position of the two parties is distinctly understood. Now, as an excuse for the oppression that is to be directed against Puerto Rico, it is proposed to make it palatable by giving back to those people the money collected from them under the pretense that it is necessary for governmental purposes. The people of Puerto Rico ask no charity from Congress. They simply ask the privilege of sharing their part of the burden of taxation imposed by the Federal Government. They are willing to bear the same taxes that American citizens bear, and they want to share the same benefits. And if they enjoy the benefits of citizens of this Republic, they will cheerfully bear their part of the burden.

Now, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE], when this infamous bill was introduced here which has received the reprobation of nearly the entire country, said the excuse for the outrage was a desire to raise revenue for the governmental purposes in Puerto Rico. I have here before me a petition sent to Congress—to the Ways and Means Committee of the House and to the Insular Committee of the Senate—signed by thousands of people in Puerto Rico, in which petition they show that they are willing to have the internal-revenue taxes of this Government extended to Puerto Rico.

In this estimate they show that they made last year 1,300,000 gallons of rum, which they are willing to have taxed $1.10 per gallon, yielding a revenue of $1,430,000. They made 250,000,000 cigarettes, which at $1.50 a thousand would amount to $375,000 in revenue. They made 120,000,000 cigars, which at $3.60 would be $432,000, making a total of $2,237,000. Then the customs duties on goods coming from other countries to Puerto Rico, by simply extending the Dingley tariff there against foreign importations to the island, would amount to over $200,000 a year, making a revenue from the simple extension of our customs and internal-revenue laws which, according to the figures of last year, would amount to $2,452,000 a year, ample money——

Mr. MCCLEARY. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. SWANSON. I have not the time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. SWANSON. Ample money for governmental purposes. Now, these people are willing to bear the taxes, provided you impose upon them the same taxes that you impose upon your own citizens. They will bear that without complaint. They are willing to bear their part, and that will raise more than enough revenue to pay the expenses of running the government in Puerto Rico and will allow a surplus to go into the Treasury of the United States to help pay the Federal expenses, to support the Army and Navy, and for other purposes.

Mr. MCCLEARY. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. SWANSON. I refuse to yield. I have only five minutes. Now, Mr. Speaker, what is the issue between these two parties on this question? The Democratic party takes the position that the Constitution of the United States——

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I yield the remainder of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas reserved six minutes, as the Chair understands.

Mr. MCRAE. I give all my time to the gentleman from Tennessee.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. SWANSON. The Democratic party takes the position that the Constitution of the United States extends to Puerto Rico, and with it equal taxation: that whether it extends there or not, as a matter of justice, as a matter of right, as a matter of honest dealing, these people should have all the benefits of American citizenship and equal taxation with all other citizens.

No excuse can be given why this privilege should not be extended to them, and yet we have Republican speakers and Republican leaders telling us that it is on account of expediency in the campaign of 1900 that they propose to ignore the right and justice that ought to be extended to 1,000,000 people in Puerto Rico.

What does that show, Mr. Speaker? It shows that at the commencement of our colonial policy the colonies are to be made the football of American politics; that a Republican campaign induces a great party to endeavor to deny right and justice to a starving people and to perpetrate an infamous wrong on them on account of a fear of some exigencies that may arise in the Presidential campaign.

What position do the Democratic party take? We say that Congress has the right to impose taxes in Puerto Rico, but the taxes imposed there ought to be precisely the same as are imposed in the United States.

What position do the Republican party take? They take the position that Congress has the right to determine the conditions on which Puerto Rican goods shall enter the United States, and thus fix the price, and the conditions on which American goods shall enter Puerto Rico, and thus fix the price. In other words, they claim the privilege of fixing the price at which Puerto Ricans shall sell their goods to us, and the price to which we shall sell our goods to them. That is precisely the same right claimed by Great Britain in 1776, and which was one of the chief causes of the American revolution. I say that that privilege of fixing the price at which you sell your goods to other people and the price at which you purchase theirs is a power that no just nation should want and a power that no nation has ever exercised without injustice and discrimination.

What do they tell us is the compromise which is proposed in the Senate now and advocated by a great many Republicans? The proposition, mark you, is that Puerto Rican goods shall pay a tax of 15 per cent to come in here, but that American goods shall go there free. That is the way that the thought of the majority of the Republican Senators is drifting to-day.

Why, gentlemen, if that is to be done, it is more iniquitous than the bill as it passed the House. To extend protection to American industries here and not to permit Puerto Rican industries to be protected, if there is anything in protection at all, is an act of power that is unjust, tyrannical, and iniquitous.

Now, this is a practical, concrete illustration of what imperialism means. We have read the speeches of gentlemen on the other side, glittering in their generalities, profuse in promises, but here is the first practical question that has come up before us in reference to the inauguration of an imperial policy, which means that Congress will be continually asked, by special interests here, to exploit the colonies for the benefit of a few special interests in the United States.

Now, when I spoke upon this question when it was before the House I showed an illustration of where it was sought to make the entire tobacco crop of Puerto Rico be brought here and manufactured into cigars, and to make it impossible to manufacture cigars in Puerto Rico and import them here in a manufactured state. How is that to be done? Let us see the gross injustice of this proposition.

The bill as it passed this House and as it is sustained to-day puts a tax of 15 per cent of the Dingley bill on tobacco imported in its raw state—about 6¼ cents a pound for raw leaf tobacco. Now, take that same tobacco in Puerto Rico and make it into cigars and cigarettes and try to seek this market, and what is the duty a pound? It is one-sixth of $4.50, which makes about 67¼ cents a pound. What does that mean? It means that the cigar, cigarette, and cheroot factories of Puerto Rico must be closed and the 4,000,000 pounds of raw tobacco raised in Puerto Rico must be imported here in its raw state and made into cigars and cigarettes here. That is exactly the way Great Britain dealt with the colonies. They had discriminating duties, so as to prohibit and prevent any manufacturing development in the colonies.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there are 300 people to the square mile in Puerto Rico. These people can not develop nor live unless they are permitted to have manufacturing enterprises amongst them, such as we have in America. A great many of the cigars and cigarettes in Puerto Rico are manufactured in the homes of poor people. These people must be clothed. They have no market in the world to-day for these cigars and cigarettes except the United States of America. Now, the spirit behind the bill is the selfish concern of special interests which will be benefited by these discriminating duties. It is a desire to close up all the factories in Puerto Rico and to prevent the humble people who are making cigars and cigarettes from having employment.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SWANSON. I ask the privilege of printing in connection with my remarks this petition sent to the Ways and Means Committee and to the Committee on Insular Affairs of the Senate, a petition signed by thousands of citizens of Puerto Rico. I ask to print it as a part of my remarks.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to print in the RECORD the petition referred to. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The petition is as follows:

To the Congress of the United States:

We, the undersigned, merchants, manufacturers, bankers, agriculturists, and property owners, resident in Puerto Rico, beg to submit to your earnest consideration the following views as to the financial policy of Puerto Rico:

We note with regret the principle, enunciated by certain speakers in the lower House of Congress, that a tariff between Puerto Rico and the United States is the proper method of raising revenue for this island. To this we are unchangeably opposed, for the following reasons:

First. Because taxation on our exports means embargo on our foreign commerce.

Second. Because curtailment of our commerce with the United States locks up our products here and prevents us from gaining our legitimate proportion of profits on our productions. We can never become independent financially if forced to trade solely among ourselves; we must have a market other than Puerto Rico, or else we can not gain wealth. Do not mistake the proposed 15 per cent of Dingley rates for a reasonable rate. It is a fact that no class of goods produced here from leaf tobacco will be taxed less that 25 per cent ad valorem, while one of the most important of this class will be taxed 160 per cent ad valorem, under the bill adopted by the House of Representatives. If this is not embargo on our trade, what can it be called?

We earnestly ask for free trade, believing that with mutual interchange of products between the two countries the United States will be more than gainer. The United States will for many years supply our 1,000,000 people with their manufactured products in general.

We recognize the fact that a revenue to support the insular government would be necessary; but we are decidedly of opinion that the better method for raising that revenue will be by internal taxation, for the following reasons:

First. Because by that system no restriction will be placed on our commerce with the United States.

Second. Because the adoption of that system will be as simple in operation here as it is in the United States.

In considering the amount of revenue needed for this island, we beg to submit the following calculation, which, after due consideration, we believe can be realized.

There are annually produced in Puerto Rico the following:

1,300,000 gallons rum, which at $1.10 per gallon	$1,430,000
250,000,000 cigarettes, which at $1.50 per thousand	375,000
120,000,000 cigars, which at $3.60 per thousand	432,000
	2,237,000
Estimate the entire special license tax as nominal at	15,000
This will give us revenue total	2,252,000
One-third of that equals	750,666
A fair estimate of the annual cost of administration	600,000
Add for interest and sinking fund on bonds to be issued	150,000
Total required	750,000

Even with free trade with the United States there would be an additional revenue of at least $200,000 annually from customs duties on goods coming here from foreign countries.

If Congress will authorize Puerto Rico to issue $2,000,000 of forty-year 5 per cent bonds, the above provides for them, viz:

For interest	$100,000
For sinking fund	50,000
Total	150,000

Therefore we infer that it will be unnecessary to adopt for this island the full internal-revenue rates of the United States. One-third of those rates will give ample receipts to cover all the above.

Puerto Rico has no bonded or other debts. Therefore, $2,000,000 of bonds, to be issued for internal improvements, would be conservative.

We call your attention to the fact that it has been the custom for all countries to make internal improvements by the system of bonded indebtedness. That divides the expenses among succeeding generations. We do not desire to have the burden of internal improvements placed on us solely. If it must be so, then we ask that it be done by a system of internal taxation. That will not prevent the increase of our commerce with the States of the Union, nor will it starve us.

The fact can not be disputed that our people are in sore distress. All commerce is now hampered; investment of capital is stopped; farmers have not the means to plant or gather their crops; building and improving is impeded; capital refuses to come here for investment in either manufacturing or agricultural pursuits.

For the reason that the sovereignty of the United States over this island has deprived us of free trade with Spain and Cuba, which took our export at fair prices and enabled us to live, we now ask as a right, in equity, that free trade with the United States be given us.

We ask bread, as a right from our mother; do not, we pray, give us a stone. We ask for immediate decision.

Respectfully submitted.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HEMENWAY].

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Speaker, the trouble with our friends upon the other side is that they talk one way and vote the other. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] has just said that the Republican party was trying to oppress and refusing justice to these Puerto Ricans, refusing justice to a starving people. Now, what does he propose? To aid and feed the starving by extending the burdens of the internal-revenue laws of the United States to a people already destitute. Why, he says it would produce revenues for the Treasury of the United States, and he knows that every dollar of internal revenue collected down there would go into the Treasury of the United States and would not put a patch on a single Puerto Rican's pants. Upon the other hand, the Republican party comes and deals with it in a practical way. The Puerto Ricans can not realize upon the sympathy of the gentleman from Virginia or the Democratic party. They can only realize upon cash. The Republican party proposes to give them cash by this bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. HEMENWAY. I can not yield; I have only four minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I was going to ask the gentleman——

Mr. HEMENWAY. The Republican party proposes to deal with this matter in a practical way. We do not offer the starving people free trade; we do not offer the starving people internal-revenue laws to tax them. We offer them dollars and cents with which to buy something to eat; we offer to them this bill, by which we not only propose to give them all the revenue taken in up to January 1, but propose to give them the revenues taken in from January 1 to the passage of this bill, and hereafter to give them every dollar that shall be taken in at this end of the line and the other end of the line, which shall be given to the Puerto Ricans to buy food and conduct their government. That is practical. We give them means with which to buy something; and the gentlemen upon the other side offer them free trade and additional taxation in the way of internal revenue.

Why, it is nonsense to talk about free trade helping the suffering. I say that free trade never helped anybody. It is money that will help the Puerto Ricans, and by giving them 15 per cent of the Dingley rates we will give them $2,000,000. The United States does not want a cent of it and does not get a cent of it. We give every penny back to them for their use. Then we are not injuring the Puerto Ricans. Where are we taking a cent out of their pockets by the provisions of the bill which passed the House? Please answer. On the other hand, I think we are dealing with them liberally. We say to them, We give you 15 per cent of the Dingley rates, and give you every dollar which is taken in at that end of the line or this end of the line.

The crop that is already produced is now in the hands of the speculators, and we secure the revenue by the House bill; you get the benefit of it for Puerto Rico, and after that we propose to talk about free trade for you; and as a rule I believe every man on this side of the House is willing at that time that the Puerto Ricans shall have free trade with the United States. I want to ask the gentleman from Virginia, when you say that we are dealing with starvation, what is your remedy? You say, Tax them more by extending the internal-revenue laws to Puerto Rico. We say, Do not tax them any more, but give them the revenues that have been collected up to this time and hereafter to be collected; give it to them to buy food, for educational purposes, and the building of roads. That is our policy. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois has seven minutes remaining.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I sometimes think words are cheap. After all, it is action that you want to inquire about. An act is something accomplished. Words may clothe an idea, if the man that uses words has an idea to clothe. [Laughter.] They may conceal an idea if he has it. To put it as it is put out West, "Talk is cheap." [Laughter.] Action, however, is material; when action is had and accomplished, it means an accomplishment in fact.

Now, let us test for a minute this motion that I made and the motion that the gentleman from Arkansas makes in the light of action. On the 2d day of March we voted on this bill which passed the House, and we appropriated every dollar that has been collected on imports from Puerto Rico, not since the treaty of peace, but since Puerto Rico was occupied by us, since the Spanish evacuated and we took possession, to the 1st of January. Aye, more; it appropriates every dollar that has been collected from the 1st of January to the enactment of this law. Aye, more; it appropriates every dollar that shall be collected under existing law upon imports from Puerto Rico. That is the House bill. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Now, then, when that bill was reported the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] and the gentlemen from Texas [Mr. BALL and Mr. BAILEY] and 108 men upon that side of the House voted nay on its passage. That was action; talk is cheap. Action speaks for itself. The bill passed. It went to the Senate; the Senate accepted the bill so far as the $2,000,000 is concerned, but the Senate struck out that part of the bill which appropriates the money collected on those imports from Puerto Rico since the 1st of January.

It strikes out that portion of the bill that devotes the money that shall be collected to-morrow, next day, next week, next month, as long as those duties are collected upon the imports from Puerto Rico. Now, my motion is to nonconcur in that action of the Senate. If the bill is right for $2,000,000 for the benefit of Puerto Rico, it is right for the balance, and the 108 men that voted against anything, $2,000,000 and everything else, voiced by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MCRAE] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BALL], come in and indulge in language, language! [Laughter on the Republican side.]

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BALL] has indulged in language, and what language it was! "Poor Puerto Ricans, oppressed by the United States. We have torn them from that magnificent and magnanimous government, Spain, that looked after them and fostered them." Oh, what a different song gentlemen sung two years ago on that side of the House. You would think now, to hear them talk, that Spain was the most kindly Government that ever controlled colonies on earth. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Gentlemen, talk is cheap. Here is action. The action of the House was right when we passed this bill. The action of the Senate is right as to the $2,000,000 and is wrong as to the balance. Therefore, along the line of correct principle, with a proper respect to our own action, to cover the whole case of these revenues, and from now until the time that legislation is had by this Congress, let us nonconcur in these amendments and go to the Senate in conference and say that the House insists not only upon the $2,000,000, but upon the balance of the money that has been collected or shall be collected under existing law; simply that and nothing more. [Applause on the Republican side.] Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MCRAE] to concur in the Senate amendments.

Mr. MCRAE. And on that, Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. Upon that the gentleman from Arkansas demands the yeas and nays. All those in favor of ordering the yeas and nays will rise in their places. Evidently a sufficient number, and the yeas and nays are ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 87, nays 113, answered "present" 18, not voting 132; as follows:

So the motion of Mr. MCRAE to concur in the amendment of the Senate was rejected.

Mr. BURLESON. I desire to withdraw my vote, as I am paired with the gentleman from New York, Mr. DRISCOLL. If he were present, I should vote in the affirmative.

Mr. LAMB. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. WISE. I ask to withdraw my vote.

Mr. BULL. I am paired with the gentleman from Texas, Mr. BAILEY. I withdraw my vote.

Mr. MEYER of Louisiana. I am paired with the gentleman from West Virginia, Mr. DAYTON, and therefore desire to withdraw my vote.

Mr. BROWNLOW. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. CARMACK, and desire to withdraw my vote.

Mr. MADDOX. I am paired with the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. GROSVENOR. If he were present, I should vote "aye."

Mr. BARNEY. I am paired with the gentleman from Mississippi, Mr. ALLEN. I withdraw my vote.

Mr. MADDOX. I rise to a question of privilege. This morning General GROSVENOR asked me to pair with him on this bill. I agreed to do so. I now understand that he is paired with another member. If that is true, I demand the right to vote. I have been here, and answered "present" when my name was called. As I understand, I have a right to change my vote from "present" to "aye."

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. GROUT). The gentleman has that privilege.

Mr. MADDOX. Let it be understood that I vote with the understanding that General GROSVENOR is paired with another member. Is that the understanding at the desk?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] is otherwise paired.

Mr. MADDOX. Then I vote "aye."

Mr. COWHERD. Is the name of Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania recorded?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. He did not vote.

Mr. COWHERD. I had a pair with him until such time as he might return to-day. I voted "aye." I desire to withdraw my vote.

Mr. BARTLETT. I desire to know whether the gentleman from New Jersey, Mr. FOWLER, has voted on this proposition.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. He is not recorded.

Mr. BARTLETT. Having voted "aye," and being paired with the gentleman from New Jersey, I desire to withdraw my vote and answer "present."

Mr. BERRY. I desire to withdraw my vote, and ask to be recorded "present." I am paired with the gentleman from Vermont, Mr. POWERS.

Mr. RICHARDSON. My colleague, Mr. GAINES, is detained from the House by illness; and my other colleague, Mr. CARMACK, is absent on account of important business. If these gentlemen were present, they would vote "aye."

Mr. NEWLANDS. I had an impression I was paired with the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. HEMENWAY, but I understand now he has voted. I should therefore like the privilege of voting.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is not recorded as being present.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I was present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. As the gentleman did not respond when his name was called, his request to vote can not be granted.

Mr. BABCOCK. It seems to me it would save time if the Clerk would announce the pairs.

The following pairs were announced:

For this session:

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH with Mr. WILSON of South Carolina.

Mr. PACKER of Pennsylvania with Mr. POLK.

Mr. WRIGHT with Mr. HALL.

Mr. LOUD with Mr. DE VRIES.
Mr. WANGER with Mr. ADAMSON (except election cases).
Until further notice:
Mr. THOMAS of Iowa with Mr. SPIGHT.
Mr. SMITH of Illinois with Mr. GAYLE.
Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine with Mr. CUSACK.
Mr. TAYLER of Ohio with Mr. FOX.
Mr. WISE with Mr. LAMB.
Mr. ACHESON with Mr. BRANTLEY.
Mr. GIBSON with Mr. TATE.
Mr. MCCALL with Mr. GAINES.
Mr. CROMER with Mr. GRIFFITH.
Mr. BOREING with Mr. FITZPATRICK.
Mr. WEYMOUTH with Mr. BROUSSARD.
Mr. GROSVENOR with Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana.
Mr. FOSS with Mr. CUMMINGS.
Mr. PUGH with Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama.
Mr. LOUDENSLAGER with Mr. STALLINGS.
Mr. DAYTON with Mr. MEYER of Louisiana.
Mr. SHERMAN with Mr. DRIGGS.
Mr. BARNEY with Mr. ALLEN of Mississippi.
Mr. HENRY C. SMITH with Mr. RANSDELL.
Mr. CRUMP with Mr. RYAN of New York.
Mr. BROWNLOW with Mr. CARMACK.
Mr. REEDER with Mr. QUARLES.
Mr. GAMBLE with Mr. NOONAN.
Mr. BISHOP with Mr. LESTER.
Mr. GILL with Mr. BELLAMY (except Pearson contest).
Mr. SOUTHARD with Mr. NORTON of Ohio.
Mr. GROW with Mr. CHANLER.
Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH with Mr. RUCKER, until April 5.
Mr. GROUT with Mr. LIVINGSTON, until March 28.
Mr. LINNEY with Mr. ROBINSON of Nebraska, until March 26.
Mr. FARIS with Mr. ZENOR, until March 26.
Mr. BULL with Mr. BAILEY of Texas, until March 23.
Mr. MAHON with Mr. BREAZEALE, until March 22.
Mr. SULLOWAY with Mr. CATCHINGS, until March 22.
Mr. LOVERING with Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts, until March 22.
Mr. GARDNER of Michigan with Mr. ATWATER, until March 24.
Mr. PEARCE of Missouri with Mr. CROWLEY, until March 24.
Mr. POWERS with Mr. BERRY, until March 24.
Mr. SHATTUC with Mr. SHACKLEFORD, until March 21.
Mr. KAHN with Mr. RUPPERT, until March 21.
Mr. GRAHAM with Mr. GASTON, until March 20.
Mr. KNOX with Mr. NAPHEN, until March 20.
Mr. KETCHAM with Mr. MULLER, until March 20.
For this day:
Mr. BURLEIGH with Mr. BRADLEY.
Mr. HOPKINS with Mr. MAY.
Mr. MINOR with Mr. RIXEY.
Mr. MESICK with Mr. TERRY.
Mr. JACK with Mr. HOWARD.
Mr. SHOWALTER with Mr. RIDGELY.
Mr. FOWLER with Mr. BARTLETT.
Mr. BUTLER with Mr. COWHERD.
Mr. MORGAN with Mr. MCALEER.
Mr. ADAMS with Mr. RYAN of Pennsylvania.
Mr. WATERS with Mr. SALMON.
Mr. VREELAND with Mr. ZIEGLER.
Mr. TONGUE with Mr. CRAWFORD.
Mr. MILLER with Mr. LEVY.
Mr. FREER with Mr. FITZGERALD of New York.
Mr. HITT with Mr. LEWIS.
Mr. THROPP with Mr. CLAYTON of New York.
Mr. GILLET of New York with Mr. DE GRAFFENREID.
Mr. OTJEN with Mr. SCUDDER.
Mr. YOUNG with Mr. LENTZ,
Mr. ROBERTS with Mr. COONEY.
Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts with Mr. NEWLANDS.
Mr. STEWART of New Jersey with Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri.
Mr. STEWART of New York with Mr. UNDERWOOD.
Mr. WEAVER with Mr. MCLAIN.

Mr. MCCULLOCH. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. TERRY, is absent on account of sickness. If he were present, he would vote "aye."

Mr. CUMMINGS. I was paired with the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. FOSS, but I understand that he has voted, and I ask that my vote be recorded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is not recorded as "present," and consequently his request can not be granted.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I should have been present if I had not understood that I was paired.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I am paired with the gentleman from North Carolina, Mr. ATWATER, and so I have voted "present."

Mr. TURNER. Mr. Speaker, I notice that my name has been announced as paired with the gentleman from Michigan, Mr. HAMILTON. That pair was to expire last Saturday, so I voted. The gentleman from Michigan is here, and I am informed that he also has voted.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The refusal of the house to concur is the same as an affirmative vote to nonconcur in the amendments of the Senate.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House ask a conference with the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Speaker pro tempore announced as conferees on the part of the House Mr. CANNON, Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts, and Mr. MCRAE.

FORTIFICATIONS APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HEMENWAY, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported the bill (H. R. 9711) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to reserve all points of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee reserves all points of order.

DISTRICT BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This being the day set apart by special order for the business of the District of Columbia, the gentleman from Wisconsin, chairman of that committee [Mr. BABCOCK], is recognized.

WASHINGTON TELEPHONE COMPANY.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the bill (H. R. 9047) to incorporate the Washington Telephone Company and to permit it to install, maintain, and operate a telephone plant and exchanges in the District of Columbia.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Samuel Ross, Thomas W. Smith, Frank B. Noyes, Edgar P. Berry, and Richard A. Johnson, of the District of Columbia, and Henry A. Parr, Thomas J. Hayward, James Bond, George R. Webb, J. Bernard Scott, and Harry W. Webb, of the city of Baltimore, State of Maryland, their associates and successors be, and they are hereby, created a body corporate under the name of the Washington Telephone Company, and by that name shall have perpetual succession and shall be able to sue and be sued, plead and be impleaded, defend and be defended in all the courts of law and equity within the United States, and may have and use a common seal.

SEC. 2. That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized and directed to permit the Washington Telephone Company to install, maintain, and operate a telephone plant and exchanges, and the necessary service connected therewith, in the city of Washington and in the District of Columbia, under such rules, regulations, and restrictions as now are or may hereafter be made relating to telephone companies in the said city or District; and they shall permit said company to lay all necessary underground conduits and ducts in said city to carry its wires, and to string wires on poles in the alleys of said city and in the District of Columbia, subject to the same regulations and restrictions as now apply, or may hereafter be prescribed for telephone companies in the city of Washington and District of Columbia: Provided, That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia may require all conduits laid under the authority of this act to be laid under such conditions and regulations as they may prescribe; and they shall be so planned and constructed as to form a part of a general subway system which may hereafter be constructed and the plans for which the said Commissioners are authorized to prepare. Any corporation having underground ducts in the District of Columbia not in use may lease them to any other corporation or individual in said District required by law or desiring to put its wires underground.

SEC. 3. That the rates to be charged by the said Washington Telephone Company shall not exceed $36 per year for the use of a telephone in a private residence, nor $48 per year for the use of a telephone for business purposes in the city of Washington; that said company shall install and use telephones of a good quality and on metallic circuits only, in the city of Washington.

SEC. 4. That it shall be lawful for the Washington Telephone Company to acquire by purchase, rental, or otherwise, any conduit or conduits, duct or ducts, now laid or that may hereafter be laid in the city of Washington or in the District of Columbia.

SEC. 5. That said corporation shall file with the Commissioners of the District of Columbia within sixty days from the approval of this act its plans for a system of subways, conduits, and ducts, with necessary manholes, and shall have a telephone exchange, with not less than 1,500 telephones in actual operation, within fourteen months from the approval by said Commissioners of its system of subways, as above specified. All extensions and additions made to the said subways, conduits, and ducts shall be subject to the approval of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia. Within fifteen days after said Washington Telephone Company has organized by the election of its officers, it shall enter into bond to the District of Columbia in the sum of $100,000, with surety or sureties to be approved by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, conditioned upon the faithful performance of all the provisions and requirements of this act; and upon failure of said company to comply with said provisions and requirements, the said sum of $100,000 shall be and become due and payable as liquidated damages, and upon the failure of said corporation to furnish said bond within the time herein specified the rights and franchises hereby granted shall cease and determine. The plans in this section required to be submitted to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall be acted upon by said Commissioners at the earliest practicable date after their submission, in order to enable said company to carry out speedily the provisions of this act.

SEC. 6. That the said corporation is hereby authorized and empowered to acquire by purchase or lease such property, building, or buildings as shall be necessary for the successful operation of its telephone system and exchanges.

SEC. 7. That within fifteen days from the approval of this act the incorporators named herein, or a majority of them, shall meet in the city of Washington and notify the Commissioners of the District of Columbia in writing of the acceptance of this charter, and shall within fifteen days after said meeting open in said city its books for subscription to the capital stock of said company, of which notice shall be given both as to time and place in at least three papers published in the city of Washington. When the books of subscription to the capital stock of said company are closed, the incorporators herein named, or a majority of them, shall call a meeting of the stockholders, to be held in the city of Washington, of which public notice both as to time and place shall be given for three days in three newspapers published in the city of Washington, at which meeting a board of 11 directors shall be chosen and such other business be transacted as may be deemed proper. At all meetings of the stockholders each stockholder shall be entitled to one vote for each share of stock held by him, and he may vote in person or by proxy.

SEC. 8. That the government and direction of the affairs of said corporation shall be invested in a board of eleven directors, every member of which shall be a stockholder of record, and each shall hold his office for one year and until his successor is elected and qualified. Said directors, a majority of whom shall be a quorum, shall annually elect one of their number to be president of the company, and they shall also elect a vice-president, a secretary, and a treasurer, and such other officers as they may deem proper. In the case of a vacancy in the board of directors, the vacancy shall be filled by the remaining directors.

SEC. 9. That the stockholders shall have the power to make such by-laws as they deem expedient for the proper conduct of the business of the company, and shall prescribe the duties of its officers.

SEC. 10. That there shall be an annual meeting of the stockholders held in the District of Columbia, at which meeting said directors shall make a report in writing of the business of the previous year, and shall at such meeting choose from among their number directors for the ensuing year.

SEC. 11. That the capital stock of said company shall be $500,000, and said company shall have power to issue bonds and secure the same by a mortgage of its entire property, rights, privileges, and franchises in an amount equal to the capital stock outstanding at any time.

SEC. 12. That there shall be reserved in the conduits constructed under the authority of this act one duct for the free use of the District of Columbia for the wires of its fire-alarm and police-patrol system.

SEC. 13. That if after the passage of this act the incorporators herein named shall sell the charter or franchise herein granted, all the rights and privileges herein given shall be forfeited.

SEC. 14. That should the property, rights, and franchises of the Washington Telephone Company be at any time hereafter acquired by any other corporation or person or persons, said corporation, person, or persons shall take said property, rights, and franchises subject to all the restrictions, liabilities, and penalties of this act; and by the acquisition of the property, rights, and franchises of the said Washington Telephone Company said purchasers shall thereby subject to the liabilities, penalties, and restrictions of this act any other telephone plant or properties then or hereafter owned or operated by said purchasers.

SEC. 15. That said company shall pay an annual tax equal to 1½ per cent of the gross receipts of said company in the District of Columbia in lieu of all tax on personal property.

SEC. 16. That the said Washington Telephone Company shall, on or before the 1st day of February in each year, make a report to each the Senate and the House of Representatives, which report shall be sworn to and signed by the president and treasurer of the said company, and shall cover the period of one year ending the 31st day of December previous to the date of making the report. Such report shall state the amount of capital stock, with a list of the stockholders and the amount of stock held by each; the amount of capital stock paid in; the total amount of funded debt; the amount of floating debt; the average rate per annum of interest on funded debt; the amount of dividends declared; cost of equipment, including land and buildings; cost of general superintendence, salaries of officers, clerks, and office expenses; water and other taxes; total expense of operating its plant; rent; payment for maintenance and repairs; payments for interest; payments for dividends on stock, amount and rate per cent, and total payments during the year; receipts from all sources, specifying what.

SEC. 17. That Congress reserves the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act.

The following amendments, recommended by the Committee on the District of Columbia, were read:

In line 7, section 3, page 3, after the word "only," insert a comma.

In line 3, section 7, page 5, after the word "Washington," insert a comma and the following: "and each subscriber shall at the time of subscribing pay in cash 10 per cent of the amount subscribed by him; otherwise the subscription shall be null and void."

In line 11, section 11, page 6, strike out the word "five" and substitute the word "seven" therefor, and after the word "hundred," in said line, insert "and fifty," so as to read "$750,000."

In line 23, section 16, page 7, strike out the word "now."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

Mr. MADDOX. I hope we will not pass this bill without some explanation. It seems to be of considerable importance.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say in reference to this bill that it represents the investigation and work that has been done by the District Committee during the past three years. It is the first tangible, reliable proposition on this subject that has ever been presented to the District Committee for its consideration and action.

I believe that the rights and interests of the people of the District are as carefully safeguarded in this bill as it is possible to have them. Now, Mr. Speaker, I will yield to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. PEARRE], who made the report and who is entirely familiar with the provisions of the bill, and he will explain them to the House.

Mr. PEARRE. Mr. Speaker, I do not know that it is necessary to add much to what has been so well said by the chairman of the District Committee, except perhaps to go in detail over the sections of this bill, to give a concise statement of the purpose of each section, and in that way to enable the members of the House to understand what the bill contains.

The first section of the bill, as the members of the House will observe, simply erects the corporation and designates the incorporators, giving the usual right to sue and be sued, and the other customary rights of corporations.

The second section gives the corporation power, under the direction of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, to lay its conduits, the system of conduits being under the entire control and supervision of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

The third section of the bill fixes the rate to be charged, which rates are $36 a year for residences and $48 a year for business houses.

Mr. DENNY. Not to exceed that sum.

Mr. PEARRE. As my colleague from Baltimore has suggested, not to exceed that sum. It fixes the limit. In other words, the charge is not to exceed $36 a year for residences and $48 a year for business houses.

Mr. HEPBURN. The rates that you have fixed in this bill are the same, are they not, that the court of this city recently held to be beyond the power of Congress to fix, because it confiscated, as the court said, the property of the corporation?

Mr. PEARRE. Not exactly, if the gentleman will permit me to explain. Judge Barnard, of the United States district court, in his opinion in the case of Manning vs. The Chesapeake and Potomac Telephone Company, in which a bill was filed to prohibit the Chesapeake and Potomac Telephone Company, the local telephone company here, from taking out a telephone because the company had refused to comply with the act of 1898 which limited the charges for telephones to $50—Judge Barnard, in that opinion, said that $72 a year was the amount needed to operate each single telephone in the District of Columbia, and that because that clause of the act of 1898 which fixes the limit at $50 was less than what the company could operate its single telephones for, therefore, as far as that particular company was concerned, the operation of the act was practically a confiscation of its property, and therefore that the company was not bound by it, for the reason that that portion of the act was unconstitutional.

But, as the gentleman from Iowa can see, that would in no way affect this company, because a rate is fixed in the act which incorporates the company, and when the company accepts the act of incorporation of course it is estopped from making any such objection.

Mr. HEPBURN. Will the gentleman permit me further?

Mr. PEARRE. Yes.

Mr. HEPBURN. I suppose that the purpose of this bill is to secure cheap telephone service in this city?

Mr. PEARRE. Yes.

Mr. HEPBURN. A purpose that everyone would sympathize with. I would ask the gentleman if there is not a better method? Is there no power to compel the corporation which is now using the streets and enjoying this franchise to obey that act of Congress?

Mr. PEARRE. In reply to the gentleman from Iowa, I would say that that effort has been made, and was made in the act of 1898.

Mr. HEPBURN. And the corporation is now refusing to obey that act of Congress.

Mr. PEARRE. And an appeal, I believe, is pending from the decision of Judge Barnard.

Mr. HEPBURN. I would ask the gentleman if there is not a remedy for that conduct on the part of the company by refusing it longer the use of the streets of Washington for the purpose of carrying on its business?

Mr. PEARRE. Not if the judgment of Judge Barnard in that case, determining the act of 1898 to be unconstitutional, is upheld. There would be no relief except the incorporation of a competing company. I will add, if the gentleman will permit me, in this connection, in further answer to his question, that the history of telephone controversies, or of the effort to secure lower telephone charges throughout the United States, has been that the rates have never been lowered except by the incorporation of competing companies and the allowance of the erection of plants by those companies.

Mr. HEPBURN. Does the gentleman mean to say that this company is so intrenched here in the city of Washington, that it has such a hold upon these franchises, that there is no way of taking them away? Can we not repeal the act under which they are operating and take away the authority that has been given them?

Mr. PEARRE. My answer to that question is this: That there is no act under which they were incorporated. It is a New York company, which came here and got some privileges from the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and those privileges have now become vested rights, and I know of no method under the law by which this company can now be deprived of those rights by any act of Congress.

An effort was made by the amendment of the act of June 30, 1898, which was the District of Columbia appropriation bill, in which this limitation of telephone charges was introduced, That matter has gone to the courts, and Judge Barnard, of the district court, has determined it is unconstitutional, because it confiscated the property, and nothing except a reversal of that judgment by the Supreme Court would give the relief which the gentleman from Iowa suggests.

Mr. HEPBURN. Then I understand the gentleman to say that it is possible for the Commissioners of the District, without specific authority, to so invest this corporation with rights that the Congress of the United States can not take them away. Do you take that position?

Mr. PEARRE. I take the position that when rights have become vested neither the Congress of the United States nor any other legislative body can take them away.

Mr. HEPBURN. Have they become vested?

Mr. PEARRE. They have become vested.

Mr. BARNEY. How?

Mr. LATIMER. Suppose we destroy that company?

Mr. PEARRE. I would like the gentleman to answer that question and give the House his view upon that subject.

Mr. HEPBURN. I have no hesitation in answering it. I say that the Commissioners have no authority to vest any corporation with the right here to use a franchise that this Congress can not take away. We can do it in a day and bring this company to terms instantly.

Mr. PEARRE. I quite agree that the Commissioners perhaps had no right and should not have exercised that right. That is a matter into which the committee has not specially gone. The condition that the committee finds is that there is a general complaint on the part of the business men and residential owners of high telephone charges, and the committee have sought what appears to be the most practical and easiest and quickest method of correcting the difficulty which the gentleman says he desires to see corrected.

Mr. HEPBURN. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him this question? Have you any doubt if the Congress of the United States by an enactment should refuse permission to that company longer to use the streets that they would not come in here instantly to us asking to be reinstated in their rights under such terms as you would be willing to grant them? Do you doubt it?

Mr. PEARRE. I doubt that absolutely.

Mr. HEPBURN. I do not.

Mr. PEARRE. Following their past history and past course, they would immediately appeal to the courts and take their case through to the Supreme Court of the United States, and would not come to the District Committee or to any other committee of this House. That is my opinion.

Mr. HEPBURN. I had thought that under the Granger cases, long ago decided, the Supreme Court harmed very seriously this old idea of vested rights upon the part of a corporation. I do not believe any such thing exists.

Mr. WACHTER. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Maryland yield to his colleague?

Mr. PEARRE. Yes, sir.

Mr. WACHTER. Section 3 states the price for the use of these telephones. Are we to understand that each telephone is to have an individual wire or are there to be 6, 8, or 12 telephones upon one wire?

Mr. PEARRE. In answer to the gentleman's question, I will say that that section of this bill is identical with the bill originally introduced by the gentleman from Maryland who has put the question; and, therefore, perhaps he is better able to answer that question than any other gentleman in the House.

Mr. WACHTER. I desire to say here that I did not prosecute the investigation along that line. I thought probably that as the chairman of the District Committee said the gentleman was thoroughly familiar with the bill, that I could obtain the information I desired from my colleague.

Mr. PEARRE. It is perhaps fair to assume that a gentleman who introduces a bill is familiar with its provisions, and you must know that section 3 simply provides for the limit of telephone charges—namely, from $36 to $48. As the gentleman who asked the question can perhaps see by merely reading the provision, it does not require and does not specify the number of wires to be strung. He introduced the original bill and ought to know what this provision, which it contained, means.

Mr. WACHTER. But there is where the snake is. Now, if each telephone is to have an individual wire it strikes me it would be very reasonable to have $48, but they may perhaps have 6, 8, 12, or 20 telephones on one wire, thereby saving expense. I would rather have the matter a little more explicitly set forth.

Mr. PEARRE. The gentleman may prepare such an amendment as he designates. I will not suggest for a moment that my very distinguished colleague from Maryland would think of introducing a bill into this House that contained a snake. If there be a snake, he introduced it.

Mr. WACHTER. I ask the gentleman's pardon. I made a mistake.

Mr. MANN. In regard to section 2, which provides for constructing the conduits and putting in the underground works and wires, I would like to ask the gentleman how far it will be necessary to construct an entirely new telephone system, if this bill is passed, and how far this company can use any conduits already constructed?

Mr. PEARRE. If the gentleman will look at section 4, he will see that that has been provided for.

Mr. MANN. I have read section 4. I ask you how far it would actually be necessary?

Mr. PEARRE. If the gentleman will not lose his temper——

Mr. MANN. The gentleman will not lose his temper.

Mr. PEARRE (continuing). I would be glad to reply. Section 4 provides as follows:

> That it shall be lawful for the Washington Telephone Company to acquire by purchase, rental, or otherwise, any conduit or conduits, duct or ducts, now laid or that may hereafter be laid in the city of Washington or in the District of Columbia.

Now, of course that does not require anybody to sell to this company. This company must take its chances, like any other company, in an effort to secure such conduits as now exist, and if it be impossible to secure the privilege by purchase of the use of conduits now existing it will be compelled to build a system of its own.

Mr. MANN. I had read section 4 before I asked the first question. I would like to ask the gentleman now whether he can give the House the information on the subject of how much the company could rent if it wanted to rent?

Mr. PEARRE. I have answered that; this company will have to take its chances with any other company as to being able to rent conduits. The committee is not informed as to the amount of conduits which this company will be able to secure. The committee has no assurance upon that line.

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman if he knows how much there is in the city which any company could possibly rent, that is available for renting purposes? What I want to get at is to know whether this company, if it be incorporated and commenced to operate—whether it will be necessary to tear up the asphalt streets of Washington in order to construct a whole new system.

Mr. PEARRE. If it could secure the privilege of using the conduits of the telephone company that now exists in the District, it would not be necessary to tear up the streets. If it could not—and it is not likely that it could—then perhaps it would be necessary to tear up the streets.

Mr. MANN. I take it from the gentleman's answer that unless this company could obtain the use of the present telephone conduits, which is absolutely out of the question, it would be necessary, in order to install this new company, to tear up the streets of Washington.

Mr. PEARRE. I may say that there are other conduits; the street railroad companies have conduits.

Mr. MANN. That is the very information I am trying to obtain.

Mr. PEARRE. I am not able to give the number of miles owned by the street railways.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the fifth section, to which I am coming, fixes the limit of time in which this company must install itself and put into operation 1,500 telephones in the city of Washington, and the limit fixed is fourteen months. That is the provision of section 5. It will be observed that all extensions of conduits or subways are to be made under the control and supervision of the Commissioners of the District.

Section 5 in addition contains this very valuable safeguard, one which I do not know to have been incorporated in any bill of like character passed by Congress. Members of the House will observe that a bond of $100,000 is required from the company, with sureties to be approved by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, conditioned upon the faithful performance of all the requirements of this act; and upon failure of said company to comply with said provisions and requirements, the said sum of $100,000 shall be and become due and payable as liquidated damages.

I may say that that provision was incorporated in the bill by the committee, and that the bill as originally introduced by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. WACHTER] contained very few safeguards of the rights of the people of Washington City and the District of Columbia. It was the earnest effort of the committee, after exhaustive hearings and constant consultations among its own members, to embody in this bill all the guaranties, securities, and sanctions of law which would protect the rights of subscribers to telephones.

Section 7 provides for the opening of the stock books. It is a formal section, but there is one feature of this to which perhaps the attention of the House ought to be called, and that is that 10 per cent of this stock must be paid upon subscription in cash or the subscription shall be null and void.

Sections 9 and 10, it will be observed, are merely formal. The eleventh section fixes the capital stock at $750,000, and the twelfth section reserves a duct or the free use of a duct or conduit in any system of ducts or conduits which this company may construct for the police department and the fire department of the District of Columbia.

Mr. HEPBURN. In the last section you require the company to report to Congress that portion of stock which is not fully paid up, and it is contemplated that only 10 per cent of the stock shall have been paid in. Would it not be proper to provide that the bonded indebtedness shall not exceed the amount of the outstanding stock fully paid up?

Mr. PEARRE. I see no objection, so far as the report is concerned, to amending the last, or sixteenth, section of the bill to meet the views of the gentleman.

Mr. HEPBURN. Would it not be well to put such a provision in the eleventh section?

Mr. PEARRE. I should say in reply to the gentleman that I do not think that would be a wise provision. There must be, as a matter of course, some latitude, some elasticity allowed to a company undertaking in the face of such opposition as will meet this company to construct a new telephone line. There must be some latitude allowed this company for the fight it will have to make in the efforts to finance this concern and get it into proper operation.

Mr. HEPBURN. How do you propose to finance it—with the capital stock or with the bonds?

Mr. PEARRE. I will say to the gentleman from Iowa that I do not propose to finance it at all; but I will add that, as the gentleman perhaps knows—because doubtless he is very much more familiar with the incorporation and perhaps the organization and financing of such companies than I am—the custom is to issue bonds to the amount of the capital stock. I believe that is the practice.

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman kindly explain to me and to this House who are back of this bill? There are a few names mentioned here, but it does not appear whether there is an organization now ready for incorporation or whether stock is to be so placed that the public can subscribe for it. It seems to me that if this is to be a competing line and not to be controlled by existing companies, the stock of this company should be offered for subscription by the public, so that the new organization may be controlled by the public in this city.

Mr. PEARRE. What was the gentleman's question? I understood his statement.

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. I want to know who is back of this bill, who is asking for this incorporation, and what they have already done?

Mr. PEARRE. If the gentleman will permit me, I will answer his question. The people back of this bill are the people named in it as incorporators—Samuel Ross, Thomas W. Smith, Frank B. Noyes, Edgar P. Berry, and Richard A. Johnson, of the District of Columbia. All these gentlemen, as the committee is informed, are substantial business men of the District, and well known perhaps to most of the members of this House either personally or by reputation.

Mr. BABCOCK. And they are men of means.

Mr. PEARRE. As the chairman of our committee suggests, they are men of financial standing—men of means. In addition to these incorporators residing in the District of Columbia, the bill names the following gentlemen of the city of Baltimore: Henry A. Parr, Thomas J. Hayward, James Bond, George R. Webb, J. Bernard Scott, and Harry W. Webb. These are all men, I believe, of like financial character and standing.

Now, with regard to the opening of stock books, the gentleman from Pennsylvania will discover in section 7 this provision:

> That within fifteen days from the approval of this act the incorporators named herein, or a majority of them, shall meet in the city of Washington and notify the Commissioners of the District of Columbia in writing of the acceptance of this charter, and shall within fifteen days after said meeting open in said city its books for subscription to the capital stock of said company, of which notice shall be given both as to time and place in at least three papers published in the city of Washington.

I do not see how any provision could be framed which would notify the public more fully and satisfactorily that books of subscription were opened.

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. There is no provision made to have those books kept open. They can be closed in half an hour by a few men taking all this stock, and that probably is what is back of this bill. I believe if you are going to make this a competing line, if you are going to do the people of Washington any good by incorporating this new company, you should take means for getting this stock into the hands of the people generally, not a few people who will monopolize it. Besides, you should incorporate in the bill a provision for minority representation.

Mr. PEARRE. I yielded for a question, but have allowed the gentleman to make a statement which is very easily replied to, it seems to me. It can not make much difference to telephone subscribers in the city of Washington, who desire, and are to get, under this bill, cheaper rates, whether Jones or Brown or Smith is a subscriber to the stock, provided the subscribers are responsible parties and provided the charter given by Congress contains proper provision for the protection of the people.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Is there any provision as to the rates to be charged?

Mr. PEARRE. Oh, yes; $36 and $48 a year.

Mr. CUMMINGS. The bill guarantees cheaper rates?

Mr. PEARRE. The charges are not to exceed $36 and $48.

Mr. LANDIS. I would like to ask a question. If I want a telephone line connecting with my apartments, shall I be able to secure it from this company for $36 a year and have no other persons using that line? Is that true?

Mr. PEARRE. I do not understand that the bill absolutely requires that. I do not so read it.

Mr. LANDIS. If the bill does not contemplate that, I suggest to the gentleman that it be so amended that it shall do so.

Mr. PEARRE. I am quite sure that the committee will be very ready to consider any amendment the gentleman may desire to submit.

Mr. LANDIS. It is a very material matter to a man wanting telephone privileges whether he is the only man on a given line, or whether there are ten or twelve others.

Mr. COWHERD. I have prepared an amendment in the line of the remarks of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LANDIS], which I think will be offered as a committee amendment.

Mr. PEARRE. As I have said, we shall be very glad to hear from the gentleman from Indiana if he wants to introduce an amendment of that sort. I will add in that connection that no telephone bill can be prepared——

Mr. LANDIS. Let me ask another question. If the rates named in the bill are not the maximum rates for a man wanting individual service, how much money will a man who wants private telephone service have to pay in order to get it?

Mr. PEARRE. Under this bill, as the gentleman will observe, this company can not charge more than $36 or $48 a year; they may charge him less, but can not charge him more for any kind of service, and, as the gentleman will further observe, the bill provides that he shall have a metallic circuit; nothing but a metallic circuit shall be used.

Mr. LANDIS. Will you consent to an amendment providing that single telephones on single wires shall be secured for $36?

Mr. PEARRE. My colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COWHERD], has just suggested to the gentleman from Indiana that he has prepared a committee amendment which will perhaps meet the gentleman's suggestion.

Mr. LANDIS. I should like to have it read.

Mr. PEARRE. The gentleman might consult with the gentleman from Missouri and see whether the amendment is satisfactory, whether it meets his views, and also the views of my colleague from Baltimore [Mr. WACHTER]. Now, Mr. Speaker, I will proceed.

Under section 13 of this bill, if the incorporators undertake to sell the franchises granted by this act of Congress they forfeit their franchise. Further than that, there is an additional section——

Mr. HEPBURN. Suppose the stock should be absorbed without any formal sale of the franchise. What would be the condition then?

Mr. PEARRE. I think the gentleman will discover that that is perhaps covered by section 14.

Mr. HEPBURN. It would not avoid this act, would it?

Mr. PEARRE. Has the gentleman carefully looked at section 14?

Mr. HEPBURN. Yes, I have looked over that.

Mr. PEARRE. In my judgment, that would be covered by section 14. It provides that—> should the property, rights, and franchises of the Washington Telephone Company be at any time hereafter acquired by any other corporation or person or persons, said corporation, person, or persons shall take said property, rights, and franchises subject to all the restrictions, liabilities, and penalties of this act.

Mr. OLMSTED. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. PEARRE. Yes.

Mr. OLMSTED. Do you consider that a majority of the outstanding shares issued by this corporation would be a part of its property, rights, and franchises?

Mr. PEARRE. Yes; but it would not, of course, constitute a separate corporation.

Mr. OLMSTED. Then, if the other corporation, the rival corporation, should purchase a majority of the stock of this corporation, such purchase would not be in violation of the provisions of section 14.

Mr. PEARRE. I think beyond question it would. If it shall be acquired by any other corporation, person, or persons, said corporation, person, or persons shall take said property rights and franchises, subject to all the restrictions and penalties of this act. And furthermore—by the acquisition of the property, rights, and franchises of the said Washington Telephone Company said purchasers shall thereby subject to the liabilities, penalties, and restrictions of this act any other telephone plant or properties then or hereafter owned or operated by said purchasers.

Mr. OLMSTED. Yes; but you do not quite understand me. The stock of this company—the shares of its capital stock cease to be the property of the corporation itself, and therefore they are not within the language here "property, rights, and franchises." They are the property of the stockholders, who can sell them to whomsoever they please.

Mr. PEARRE. I quite understand that, but I will say to the gentleman that I would challenge any gentleman to show any incorporation bill passed in any State of the Union or ever passed by Congress which imposed upon any company such a provision as section 14 imposes upon this company. I am frank to say that I have never seen any such conditions imposed upon any other company.

Mr. MUDD. May I suggest to my colleague, in aid of what he has said, that if a majority of the stock of this corporation should be acquired by any other company, that would not be another corporation, but it would still be subject to the restrictions of this act.

Mr. PEARRE. Absolutely.

Mr. OLMSTED. Suppose a bank acquired the stock. Would that bank become this corporation?

Mr. PEARRE. The closing clause of that section imposes another condition, which I have read. It not only imposes the restrictions of this bill upon the party who purchases, as far as the property purchased is concerned, but imposes the liabilities of this act and all its penalties upon any other property of the purchasing company then owned by it.

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. PEARRE. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman conceive that under section 14, if the stockholders of the existing telephone company should become the stockholders of this company, that that would extend this act over the old company?

Mr. PEARRE. No; I do not contend that it would do anything of the sort.

Mr. MANN. Is not that the customary way of transacting stock business?

Mr. PEARRE. I have never known any company to have any such penalty imposed upon it as is imposed here.

Mr. MANN. Of course, I fail to see any penalty at all for the action which I have suggested.

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. PEARRE. Certainly.

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman kindly inform me as to whether there are any provisions in this bill fixing the number of shares of stock and the price per share?

Mr. PEARRE. No, there is not.

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. Is not that usually put in, and should not that be put into a bill of this kind?

Mr. PEARRE. I do not see any necessity for it. The amount of the capital stock is limited, and that is the material matter.

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. Do not you think if this is to be a charter that that provision should be contained in it?

Mr. PEARRE. I see no objection to it.

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. Certainly a few men are not to gobble up the rights and privileges granted by this bill.

Mr. PEARRE. I see no objection to what the gentleman suggests; and if he desires to prescribe the number of shares and the par value I do not know that the committee would have any objection.

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. The reason is very apparent. The other telephone company can buy up this charter at once. I do not know, but perhaps that may be the reason that they are coming here to be incorporated, because they are not incorporated at present.

Mr. PEARRE. I am glad to see the gentleman's solicitude for the telephone subscribers. I yielded to the gentleman for a question.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. PEARRE. Yes.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. I should like to ask the gentleman if there is any provision in the bill providing how the capital stock shall be paid in—what part in cash?

Mr. PEARRE. There is a provision in section 7.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. What does it provide?

Mr. PEARRE. That 10 per cent of the capital stock shall be paid in in cash, or the subscription shall be void.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. How is the rest of the capital stock to be paid in?

Mr. PEARRE. There is no provision in the bill as to the method to be pursued, other than that.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Then stock up to the limit of the authorized capitalization may be issued without any actual equivalent of value.

Mr. PEARRE. I understand that is the case above 10 per cent.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Then that opens all the doors to stock watering, which ought to be closed.

Mr. PEARRE. I will say to the gentleman that the company with which this company will be thrown into competition, when it comes to the question of stock watering (which company I believe has its home offices in Boston), has something like $800,000 of watered stock, as is estimated, in its Washington branch.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. That shows that we ought not to repeat the process here.

Mr. PEARRE. I have explained, in response to questions which have been asked, that that matter was left open for the purpose of allowing this company some latitude in the financing of its business. It is not unusual, but is quite usual. The House will also observe——

Mr. LANDIS. I should like to ask the gentleman another question. Is there anything in this bill that will permit or authorize the telephone company to limit the number of calls per day or per year that subscribers shall be entitled to?

Mr. PEARRE. I think there is nothing of that sort in the bill.

Mr. BABCOCK. It is unlimited.

Mr. LANDIS. The number of calls by subscribers are unlimited in the District of Columbia, and we make no regulations along that line.

Mr. PEARRE. Section 15, Mr. Speaker, provides a tax upon the gross receipts of 1½ per cent, and section 16 provides the method of reporting which has become usual in charters of this sort. Section 17 contains a provision which, while very short, is very important, and that is that Congress reserves the right to alter, amend, and repeal this act, a right which they do not seem to have at present with regard to any other telephone company which operates in the District of Columbia.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. PEARRE. Certainly.

Mr. TAWNEY. What rate of taxation does the present telephone company pay?

Mr. PEARRE. About $300 a year. That is the information that the committee has.

Mr. TAWNEY. And this proposes to tax them 1½ per cent of the gross receipts. What would that amount to?

Mr. PEARRE. It is estimated it would amount to something like $3,000.

Mr. TAWNEY. In most of the States the independent companies pay 3 per cent of the gross receipts. The Bell Company pays nothing.

Mr. PEARRE. The Bell Company here, as the committee is informed, pays $300 a year, and has been paying $300 only since it came here.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question in connection with that?

Mr. PEARRE. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. I am not very familiar with matters pertaining to this District. This section provides that they shall pay a tax of 1½ per cent in lieu of all other taxes. Is there any franchise tax or any other tax in the District?

Mr. PEARRE. There is a tax on real estate levied, but this is in lieu of all taxes on personality. There is no franchise tax.

Mr. MANN. There is no real-estate tax levied upon the conduits or anything of that kind?

Mr. PEARRE. Nothing that I know of. It is generally a tax of 1½ per cent on the gross receipts. I will say, in answer to the question, that I have simply risen to explain as clearly as I could the principles of the bill, as well as some of the interests that urge its passage, and to answer questions and inquiries made by gentlemen of the House concerning the measure. The measure is presented by the committee in the interest of the subscribers of the city of Washington and to secure for them the use of the telephone, which has become a business necessity and a home comfort, at something like a reasonable rate. The committee has gone over this matter carefully, in a painstaking way, and conscientiously, and this bill is the result of that effort. I believe that it will result in great good to the people of the District of Columbia.

Gentlemen of the House will observe from the report that this bill has the unanimous indorsement of almost all the business organizations of the city. It is sustained by the indorsement of the Telephone Subscribers' Association, of about 500 members, the prominent business men of the city of Washington; it is indorsed by the Brightwood Avenue Citizens' Association; it is indorsed by the Georgetown Citizens' Association; it is indorsed by the Columbia Heights Citizens' Association; it is indorsed by the Business Men's Association of Washington, of 800, and also, as I said, by the Telephone Subscribers' Association, of 500 people, which was organized not for the purpose of advancing the interest of any corporation or any company, but to secure, and with an eye single to securing, to the people of this city something like a reasonable telephone charge. This bill is the result of the committee's best effort on the subject, and the committee believes that the bill should pass.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. I should like to call the attention of the gentleman from Maryland and the gentleman from Wisconsin to the condition of things that I find by a hasty reading of this bill. In section 11 the issuing of $750,000 in capital stock is authorized by the company, with an equal amount of mortgage bonds, making a total capitalization of $1,500,000. Now, in section 7 there is a provision that the subscriber shall pay in only 10 per cent of the amount of his subscription. What is there to prevent the issue of a million and a half of stock and bonds with only a small amount in cash being invested? It seems to me that leaves open a great gateway for the watering of stock, upon which hereafter the people of the District of Columbia will be called upon to pay dividends.

Mr. PEARRE. I will say in reply to the gentleman from Massachusetts that that condition of affairs has existed in this District since 1883, and a very much worse condition of affairs——

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. It has existed all over the country.

Mr. PEARRE (continuing). And yet I do not know that the gentleman's voice was ever raised in protest against it. If the gentleman will examine into the condition of the affairs of the company against which this company will have to compete, he will discover that it bought out a little company in Washington City whose capital stock was $100,000, and issued upon that, without any authority, so far as anybody knew, except the charter which it had from the State of New York, $750,000 worth of stock and $500,000 of bonds, and yet of that $750,000 there was only a little over $77,000 paid in cash.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman criticise that?

Mr. PEARRE. Criticise? Yes; I criticise it.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Then let us not do it again.

Mr. PEARRE. I criticise it to this extent, that perhaps it may effect in this case the ingenuousness of the objection which the gentleman from Massachusetts has made to the present bill.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, just a word in reply to the gentleman from Maryland. I just want to say to him that he is mistaken about my voice remaining silent upon this question. Ever since I have been in Congress, whenever the incorporation of any company has come before this House, I have raised my voice against any provision which would look to stock watering or any provision which would look to the issuing of stocks or bonds without exacting full payment for them. When this bill is read, I give notice that I shall offer an amendment that none of the stock or bonds shall be issued except in return for cash equal to the amount of the stock and bonds issued. That is the only safe way in which we can deal with these corporations. We are suffering from stock watering all over the country, and now, with the experience of the past, we know how to guard against these evils. I am not going to be a party to the passage of any bill which leaves open such an opportunity for stock watering as this bill does.

Mr. SIMS. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. I have finished my remarks.

Mr. SIMS. I want to ask the gentleman if he does not know that if his amendment is adopted, it will absolutely prevent any organization of an opposing company here and effectually kill it?

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. No; I do not want to do that, but I want to safeguard the bill.

Mr. SIMS. Well, we are trying to safeguard the people.

Mr. HEPBURN. Will the gentleman from Wisconsin yield to me?

Mr. BABCOCK. Certainly.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I fully sympathize with the purposes of this bill, which is to secure reasonable telephone tolls in the city of Washington. If I believed that could be accomplished through this bill, I would readily support it, if that were the best method, but I do not believe it is the best method. I do not agree with the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. PEARRE] when he says that this Congress has no power over the corporation that for the last fifteen years or more has been robbing the people of this city through their exorbitant and excessive telephone tolls. I have no doubt whatever but that we have the power to stop that outrage. It is true that a court—I suppose it must be called a court—in the face of the experience of the people of this country in thousands of towns, has held that the rate of $72 for the ordinary household service is not an excessive and extravagant one. But we have the power to take away from that corporation its right to do business in this city. If they were made to believe that the Congress would do that, I have no hesitation in saying that instantly they would come to the terms that Congress laid down in the bill of two years ago.

I know something of the difficulties that the people in this city and Congress have had in their attempt to control the corporations in this city. I remember that for five years this Metropolitan Railway Company, in the face of an act of Congress, specific and plain, utterly refused obedience to the demands of that act. They were never brought to terms until this House, this body, repealed, so far as it could, the charter under which they were doing business. They then discovered that the Congress would not longer be tampered with; that it meant to compel obedience; and the splendid system we now have is the result of that kind of earnest legislation.

If this committee would take hold of this matter in that way and give this House an opportunity to vote upon such a proposition, I have no doubt that their efforts would be seconded by so hearty a majority that these gentlemen who are now contumacious would be here asking for terms.

Mr. PEARRE. If that result can be attained by this bill, will not that satisfy the gentleman?

Mr. HEPBURN. That result can not be attained by this bill. You can not have proper service in a city like this by installing two plants owned by separate companies. Here is one company with 2,200 or 2,300 telephones. This one you propose to have 1,500 telephones. Neither will serve the interests of the people——

Mr. BABCOCK. One thousand five hundred 'phones in fourteen months.

Mr. HEPBURN (continuing). Without they are subscribers to both, and instead of alleviating the difficulty you simply double the burden. I do not believe it is wisdom, especially when we have the power to compel obedience, for upon that I have not the shadow of a doubt.

Mr. BABCOCK. Will the gentleman permit me a moment?

Mr. HEPBURN. Certainly.

Mr. BABCOCK. No one is more familiar with the conditions than is the gentleman from Iowa himself, and I will ask him the question: For the past eight years has not Congress in every way endeavored to compel a reasonable telephone rate in the city? Have not such attempts been made time and time again in this House, resulting with no success?

Mr. HEPBURN. I think the gentleman is correct; but you have never gone to the extreme I would suggest. You have advised, and nothing more than that, until two years ago, in the amendment that has been referred to, you had positive legislation. You have never attempted to repeal their rights. Apparently the committee has been under the influence of such gentlemen as the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. BABCOCK. I want to call the gentleman's attention to the last night of the last session of the Fifty-fifth Congress, when I stood on the floor all night long and endeavored to prevent Congress passing an act which gave to all corporations in the city of Washington the right to extend their conduits anywhere they pleased. Congress did pass the act in spite of all that I could do, and that is the condition which exists to-day.

Mr. COWHERD. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. HEPBURN. Yes.

Mr. COWHERD. As matter of law, the present telephone company has no franchise from this Congress.

Mr. HEPBURN. It has the use of the streets of the city of Washington. Can not we stop them? Have we no police force?

Mr. COWHERD. If the courts have held, as they have held, that we can not fix the rate at $50 because it is impairing the obligation of contracts, if that principle is right, is it not all the stronger that we can not take away the franchise that we have heretofore given them?

Mr. HEPBURN. Why, the gentleman says they are here without a franchise.

Mr. COWHERD. We can not take away the right under which they are operating.

Mr. HEPBURN. Has not Congress control over the streets? Can we not prevent a corporation from using those streets—from tearing them up in their attempts at repairs or construction? Why, sir, it seems to me it is nonsense to take a position like that. Could a railroad company locate its tracks through the streets here—appropriate them to its own purposes—without the consent of Congress? If they did, could we not direct the police power of the city to remove them? There is no doubt about that.

Mr. BABCOCK. Let me say to the gentleman that about a year ago Congress gave up all the rights it had in the streets of Washington and vested them in the Commissioners.

Mr. HEPBURN. No Congress can give up its rights in such a way that another Congress can not resume them.

Mr. COWHERD. The gentleman has not understood my proposition, which was this: That if we could take away those rights absolutely, we could certainly regulate them by fixing a rate. The greater includes the less.

Mr. HEPBURN. I do not know that that follows at all. We may silently permit them to do a business, and then if they make contracts we must observe those contracts, or at least we must not destroy them. That is an entirely different proposition from that of usurping a right to the streets—appropriating to their own specific and peculiar purposes what belongs to all. There is no lawyer here who, if the proposition were put to him, would not say that Congress has the power to control the streets of Washington as against a corporation which, as gentlemen admit, has never been given any right over those streets——

Mr. PEARRE. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. HEPBURN. Certainly.

Mr. PEARRE. Does the gentleman deny as a proposition of law that Congress can not pass an act which deprives a man of his property without compensation?

Mr. HEPBURN. I do not deny that.

Mr. PEARRE. Is not that the very basis on which this question turns?

Mr. HEPBURN. The streets of this city are not the property of any corporation; that is what I am trying to hammer into the heads of the gentlemen of the committee. [Laughter.]

Mr. PEARRE. I will say to the gentleman from Iowa that while the streets are not their property, yet when rights are given to them in the streets those rights become their property, and if the gentleman would hammer into his own head some knowledge of constitutional law he would recognize my proposition.

Mr. HEPBURN. The right may belong to them until it is resumed by Congress.

Mr. PEARRE. You can not deprive them of a right once given.

Mr. HEPBURN. What I want is that we shall resume a right which belongs to the people, and which, as has been said here over and over again, has never been conferred upon this corporation.

Mr. JENKINS. The gentleman from Iowa seems to have a very firm conviction as to what kind of a measure we should pass here. I suggest to the gentleman that he draw a bill embodying his ideas, and our committee will act on it as soon as possible.

Mr. HEPBURN. If the committee will invite me to do that, I will do it for them. [Laughter.]

Mr. JENKINS. I want to say to the gentleman, further, that the same arguments which he has been making here for the last twenty minutes have been made by the representatives of the Bell Telephone Company before the Committee on the District of Columbia for the last two years.

Now, this bill promises to afford the people of this District relief within fourteen months. If the suggestion of the gentleman from Iowa were carried out, the people would not get this relief in fourteen years; because, as the gentleman knows full well, as soon as anybody undertook to do anything under such a bill as he advocates, an injunction would issue out of one of the courts here and it would take at least fourteen years to determine whether or not Congress had a right to pass that act. For the present——

Mr. HEPBURN. Where does the gentleman propose to put his interrogation mark? [Laughter.]

Mr. JENKINS. I want to enlighten the gentleman. This is a question of reciprocity. The gentleman wants to aid us and we want to help him.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, another objection I have to this bill is the condition in which it will leave the streets of this city. There will have to be a conduit on both sides of every street, I take it.

Mr. BABCOCK. The conduits already constructed would be sufficient to accommodate one-half of the wires necessary. The bill provides for the leasing or purchase of conduits that have heretofore been constructed.

The SPEAKER. The hour of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. HEPBURN addressed the Chair.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman from Iowa opposed to the bill?

Mr. HEPBURN. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. Does any member of the committee resist the bill and desire to take the floor? [A pause.] If not, the gentleman from Iowa will be recognized in opposition to the bill.

Mr. HEPBURN. I desire only a moment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa is recognized for an hour.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I am entirely willing to go with the committee as far as they would desire me to go in any measure for the relief of the people of Washington in respect to telephone service; but I doubt whether this bill will give the relief we want. It seems to me largely an attempt on the part of a number of gentlemen to get another hold on the franchises of this city. For that reason alone I would oppose the bill. If these franchises are valuable, let them be given to the people of Washington, who will have an interest in maintaining them in their best possible condition—who will be in harmony with their neighbors here. Let them not be given to a lot of speculative gentlemen from a neighboring city. We have had experience enough with such gentlemen recently. We had a magnificent system of roads here—the Metropolitan road—which was the best equipped and best operated road that I ever saw. But it has now got into the hands of a lot of these Maryland gentlemen—Baltimore gentlemen, I am told—and now we have a service on that once magnificent line that would be a disgrace to any village in the United States. I object to the passage of this bill for that reason.

Mr. WACHTER. Did the gentleman ever see the street-car service of Baltimore City?

Mr. HEPBURN. I never did.

Mr. WACHTER. I took it for granted that the gentleman had not, or he would not talk in that way.

Mr. HEPBURN. Then this is modeled upon that, is it?

Mr. WACHTER. I do not know about that, but when you speak of Baltimore, I simply refer you to our magnificent street-car system, second to none in the United States to-day.

Mr. HEPBURN. I am talking about the system here, where you will find sometimes a score of cars blocked up together, with a space of miles between others.

Mr. WACHTER. You do not want to blame that on Baltimore City. We are not responsible for that.

Mr. HEPBURN. I am speaking of the system here, where you will see one train crowded with a hundred people and another right behind it with half a dozen people. I want to see no more of that.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there are three or four serious objections to this bill. In the first place, it will not give full service. It will give only half service, if the other company continues, as it undoubtedly will. The most the new company can do is to divide the business.

In the second place, it is a foreign corporation, composed largely of foreign incorporators, and I think that is a bad feature.

In the third place, it does not necessarily cheapen rates, because there is no provision here that the 'phones that are to be furnished shall be upon a single wire, and I am told that now the other company, where six or eight 'phones are upon a single wire, are willing to give the same service for the same money. I think that it is an attempt here to build this plant with the bonds that are to be issued, while the stockholders, who get their stock perhaps for 10 cents on the dollar, will at all times insist upon full dividends upon their stock, the same as though they had paid money for it. I do not think the bill is properly guarded in many respects, and therefore I do not want to see it pass in its present form. I reserve the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. PEARRE].

Mr. PEARRE. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COWHERD] fifteen minutes.

Mr. HEPBURN. Perhaps I had better use a portion of my time before the gentleman from Missouri proceeds.

Mr. COWHERD. Very well.

Mr. HEPBURN. I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, if this bill should become a law and the company should commence to operate its plant, it would be necessary that it should tear up the streets of Washington. That, of course, in itself is undesirable, and if such right is granted to a company it ought to be obliged in some way to recompense the public. The great country at large pays half the cost of maintaining the streets of Washington. The great country at large has paid half the expense of putting down the present pavements of Washington, and if they are put in bad condition the country pays one-half of the cost of putting them in proper shape.

But here is a proposed law to give to this company the right to tear up every asphalt pavement in Washington, and we all know that they will not be put back in as good condition as they were before; and the only thing that this company proposes to pay for this great privilege is 1½ per cent of the gross receipts in place of taxes. The bill authorizes the company to issue $750,000 of stock and $750,000 of bonds, making a total of a million and a half dollars.

If it should pay 1 per cent on the amount of its stock and bonds, that 1 per cent would amount to $15,000, and I do not believe that there is any place in the country where taxes are so low that a company is authorized to pay much less than 1 per cent on its investment. But here the proposition is to let this company avoid all taxes, to let this company out from the payment of all kinds of taxes on its property and franchises on payment of a nominal amount of 1½ per cent of its gross receipts.

Mr. BABCOCK. They are liable to assessment on their real estate the same as any other corporation or private person.

Mr. MANN. The company needs to own no real estate whatever.

Mr. BABCOCK. I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. MANN. The company is not required to own a foot of real estate anywhere. It can rent a power plant and rent an exchange building upon which it pays rent.

Mr. BABCOCK. The taxes on whatever real estate it occupies will have to be paid by somebody.

Mr. MANN. Its property consists of the right to use the streets. Why, all over this country everywhere there is a demand that companies having the right to use the streets shall pay a reasonable compensation. Even in the city of Chicago, which does not claim to be the best governed city in the world, no new company could be incorporated like this without paying at least 10 per cent of its gross receipts into the city treasury; and I compliment the other side of the House upon the fact that the mayor of that city, a Democrat, not only announced but maintains the principle that a private company, or a quasi public company, using the streets of the city must pay a corresponding compensation.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if the bill becomes a law, as I say, the company may go ahead and operate, in which case this will be the situation: Every public building in this city, every Government office in the city has now a telephone connected with the present company. Every hotel, every business house has a telephone connected with the wires of the present company. Is it designed that these offices, public buildings, and business houses shall each maintain two telephones?

I remember that something over ten years ago, in a portion of what is now the city of Chicago, then known as the village of Hyde Park, a new telephone company was authorized, was granted a franchise with a low rate like this, and it was said then that this company would force the rates of the old company down. It is true that the new company, unable to sell the franchise that it had, fitted up a small exchange and constructed a few miles of wire, but nobody wanted to use the telephones of that company because the great mass of subscribers to telephones were upon the exchange list of the old telephone company, and I believe that few men of good common sense now pretend to keep telephones connected with the exchange of the new company. This bill, then, would double the number of telephones if it amounted to anything by compelling people to maintain two telephones where they now maintain one.

But, Mr. Speaker, I do not imagine that that would be the result. The only capital required by this bill to be invested is $75,000. Does anybody believe that the old telephone company would permit its property to be ruined by a company which had invested only $75,000? Is there any gentleman here so childlike and bland that he believes that if this bill becomes a law these gentlemen will not sell out their rights? Does any gentleman here believe that the old company, with a capital stock or an investment of one or two million of dollars, will permit a $75,000 plant to run them out of Washington?

I have seen this thing so often in my own city. I have seen franchises granted to new companies so many times, and I never have known of a case where the old company did not purchase the plant in some way of the new company. I can remember when I was a member of the city council of Chicago that a new franchise was granted to a street-car company on the South Side of that city. It was said that the new street-car company would carry passengers for 3 cents a passenger.

It was said that it would do a great many things. It obtained its franchise, it fought its way through the lower courts and through the supreme court, and came out successful, and when it had absolutely established its rights under the law it sold out to the old company for $1,000,000. I do not apprehend that this franchise will be worth a million dollars if it is passed, but I should like to help divide up the $100,000 that these gentlemen from Baltimore will receive for their right.

Mr. DOLLIVER. The gentleman from Illinois has had great experience and observation about this telephone business. Everybody agrees that this whole community is now under unnecessary extortion at the hands of the existing telephone company. What practical scheme is there to deliver this community from extortionate telephone tolls?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, if I could answer that question dogmatically, I could employ myself at the rate of many million dollars a year in the United States. There is no place that I know of where the people are not crying out against extortionate charges of some company which has been granted special rights in the streets.

I know of no absolutely certain way to control the situation, but my observation leads me to believe that doubling up the expense will not cheapen the cost to the consumer. You can not make it cheaper to the consumer by having double the amount invested. It is inevitable that the companies will be consolidated. There is no place in the United States—no place in the United States I say—where two companies remain long rivals for a single privilege. The gentleman says that I have had experience in connection with telephone service. I will say to the gentleman that I have had none, except as a subscriber.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I meant by practical observation of the operation.

Mr. MANN. I have no doubt whatever that, as the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] says, Congress has authority to regulate the rates so far as this present company are concerned.

Mr. BABCOCK. Congress thought it had; the courts say it has not.

Mr. MANN. Ah, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Wisconsin says that the courts have said nay. I say nay to his proposition, and I say, Mr. Speaker, that so far as the city of Washington is concerned, as I said when this bill that they speak of was passed two years ago, it was nonsense then. I believed it then and I believe it now. I do not believe myself that in Washington you can maintain a good telephone service for $36 a year on a single line; and the proposition that came up before the court was whether the old company should be obliged to furnish this telephone service and telephone instruments for the rate prescribed by Congress.

The court found that the service could not be furnished for that amount of money. If that be true, if the findings of the court are correct, nobody expects the telephone service to be furnished for less than the cost. If that be not true, if it be true that it can be furnished for less, then it is the duty of the Committee on the District of Columbia of the Congress of the United States to furnish the proof; and all that is needed is proof. Gentlemen sat silently by while this test case was brought before the court, I know not whether in good faith or in ill faith, but I know that the court has not determined that we can not regulate the charges.

Mr. BURKE of Texas. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. BURKE of Texas. I understand the gentleman to say that the service in this city can not be performed for $36 a year?

Mr. MANN. That is my judgment.

Mr. BURKE of Texas. How is it, then, that it is performed, as I am reliably informed, in a great number of the cities of this country for $36 a year?

Mr. MANN. I can answer that very well. We have a telephone in a small country town, for which we pay $12 a year. I have another one in the city of Chicago, where I pay $225 a year; and I get more than double the use and cheaper rate in proportion out of the $225 a year telephone than I do out of the $12 a year telephone. Why? Because one is used fifty times where the other is used once.

Mr. BURKE of Texas. Does the gentleman consider that an answer to my question?

Mr. MANN. Why, certainly, I consider it an answer to your question.

Mr. BURKE of Texas. Then I fail to see it.

Mr. MANN. I have no doubt that where a telephone exchange is small and the number of calls small the rate can be made very cheap; but gentlemen understand that where two men only are on a telephone the number of calls is small; but when you put three men on a line you do not merely double the telephone service; when you put four on a line you do not merely double it, but you multiply it sixfold; when you put a dozen on a line you multiply it by nearly a hundredfold, and that makes the difference in the cost.

Mr. PEARRE. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. PEARRE. Is not the net result of your argument this: That there is no relief from the extortionate charges that now exist in Washington?

Mr. MANN. It is not, Mr. Speaker. I say this first, that if the District or Congress can determine that the service which this company furnishes can be sustained by a charge of $36 or $50 a year, we have the power and authority to fix that rate.

Mr. PEARRE. Is the gentleman a lawyer?

Mr. MANN. Well, "the gentleman" does not practice law from Maryland for the benefit of clients in the House of Representatives.

Mr. PEARRE. No; but the gentleman seems to practice law in Washington for the benefit of the people of Chicago, Boston, and Washington. Now, the gentleman might just as well be courteous, because he will get along better, and answer the fair question which I have put.

Mr. MANN. "The gentleman" is always courteous when asked a courteous inquiry.

Mr. PEARRE. If that is the gentleman's notion of courtesy, it will not commend itself to the House.

Mr. MANN. "The gentleman" does not need your commendation to the House.

Mr. PEARRE. No; I am glad you do not. I fear you would not get it.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HEPBURN. I yield five minutes more to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. Now, Mr. Speaker, I have no hesitation in saying that so far as my judgment is concerned the result of this bill will not be to furnish relief to the people of Washington, but simply to let people sell out under the bill or law which they obtain. But gentlemen have asked how they can obtain relief. It is not a hard road to ascertain or to travel.

It is admitted that the present company has no franchise in Washington; it is admitted that the present company came here as a usurper in Washington; it is admitted that it is not entitled under the law to occupy anything in Washington except so far as they may have vested rights. I would pass a law driving the present company out of Washington, except under terms fixed by Congress. You bring in a bill from the District Committee granting a franchise to the present company, as you have the right to, and give the company the right to accept it or to leave Washington.

Mr. SIMS. Why do you not introduce a bill which will carry out your idea, if you think that is a practical way?

Mr. MANN. I will tell the gentleman, who is a member of the District of Columbia Committee, I give very little attention myself to the District of Columbia business. I happened to notice this bill in the city press, and it was so remarkably similar to the boodle ordinances which I had fought in the city council for four years that it attracted my attention. I do not profess to study the legislation for the District of Columbia; it is the duty of the District Committee to bring in these bills; and if the committee is not able to do it, let them resign.

Mr. PEARRE. Is that the reason that it attracted the gentleman's attention, because of its resemblance to the boodle ordinances?

Mr. MANN. That is it precisely.

Mr. JENKINS. I want to say in all kindness to the gentleman from Illinois that the members of the District of Columbia Committee have not had the opportunity to live in so fraudulent a a place and learn so much from fraudulent legislation as he speaks of. We have had no experience in matters of that kind. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman had had that experience, the committee would have recognized the earmarks on this bill. I am making no reflection on the Committee on the District of Columbia, but if they had known the devious ways of these men who are attempting to take the municipal franchises from the public in every city, they would have recognized this bill, and would never have brought in a favorable report.

Mr. SIMS. Why does not the gentleman offer an amendment to it?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Iowa wish to consume any more time?

Mr. HEPBURN. I will yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GREEN].

REPRINT OF A BILL.

Mr. RAY of New York. With the consent of gentlemen, I would like to ask unanimous consent to have reprinted Senate bill 268 and the report. The gentleman who drew the report had the House bill before him when he drew it, and therefore made incorrect references and incorrect amendments. I simply desire to ask unanimous consent for the reprint of the report and the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent for a reprint of Senate bill 268, and also the report. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

WASHINGTON TELEPHONE COMPANY.

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I seem to stand upon this bill between Scylla and Charybdis. Among those opposing this legislation appear to be some who are friendly to the company now operating here. The other parties favoring this bill seem to represent a syndicate who, while it represents opposing interests to the present monopoly, seek to control the new company, and may be a second monopoly. They are certainly a shadowy prospective organization. At this point let me say that I neither belong to nor am I directly or indirectly interested in either the present monopoly or the proposed competing organization.

I want this legislation to pass in such shape that the proposed corporation will be of permanent benefit to the people of Washington, and if possible will be under their immediate control. By proper legislation this can be done, but I do not believe the passage of the measure in its present shape will bring about this much-desired result. By the passage of this bill without considerable amendment I can not see how the citizens of the District of Columbia will be either greatly benefited now or permanently benefited.

I call the committee's attention to the fact that to a Pennsylvanian accustomed to the drafting of charters under the laws of that State the provisions, or want of some of what we regard as essential provisions in a charter, give it a very peculiar look. First, the number of shares of stock to be issued is not fixed, nor is the price per share. Why not specify these matters? I would suggest that the number of shares be fixed at 15,000 and the price per share $50. Surely no objection could be made to that. Then every citizen who thinks a competing line desirable and will pay can at least subscribe for a share or two.

Again, some provision should be inserted by which, when the stock subscription books are opened, the citizens of the District and their friends would be allowed to subscribe a limited number of shares. By providing that no one person could subscribe to more than 100 shares until all who want that number or less are supplied, you will find that the corporation will be largely subscribed to by Washington citizens, and they will control the new organization.

Such control would contribute largely to its immediate success, not only as a remunerative investment, but as a competitive corporation who will deal fairly and liberally with all the people directly interested in securing first-rate service at reasonable rates. If the stock is to be taken by a few wealthy men whose only interests are how much they can make out of the new venture, little benefit will result to the people of the city, and will in the beginning, or in a short time, come into the hands of a new company, composed in large part of strangers.

There are so many ways by which these corporations can manipulate their affairs and thereby destroy an honest business competition that these or similar provisions should be now incorporated in the bill. We should prevent their selling out to either a competing company or to persons controlling, directly or indirectly, a competing company. We should provide against anything like establishing a monopoly by agreeing to operate in agreed-upon districts. We should provide against the watering of stocks and the many forms resorted to in the modern financing of corporations by which the vitality and usefulness of the company are impaired by those who go in on the ground floor.

I see nothing in the present bill to prevent the present monopoly, so bitterly complained of, from indirectly, if not directly, buying out and controlling the new competing line. In fact, the proposed company can, under the proposed charter, in a very short time freeze out the people who use telephones in the District. Let us put it beyond the power of this proposed corporation to do this, and I know of no more practical way to accomplish this result and every other desired result than by the provisions of the measure making it a Washington corporation, controlled by and managed by Washington people.

Again, the cumulative system of voting should be introduced, thereby preserving as much as possible the interests of the minority stockholders. In Pennsylvania we have found this a very valuable provision. I think its value here can not be overestimated. Our bounden duty here is to protect and legislate for the real interests of the people of Washington, not to grant special rights and privileges to those who have no more than a dollar and cent interest in the subject. Unless the bill is so amended, it should be defeated. Not that I want to see the establishment of any honest competing line either postponed or defeated. Washington requires not only competition, but honest competition. It is not outlined in the proposed measure. Let us correct it.

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Speaker, this is a very important measure; and I want to call the attention of gentlemen of the House to the situation that confronts the committee in bringing this bill before this body.

We are fighting here a corporation with $64,000,000 behind it. We are fighting a corporation that has been established here now for almost twenty years. Gentlemen talk about opening subscription books and letting the people come in and take shares at ten or fifty dollars apiece, and no more than ten shares to one individual.

Why, sir, if the gentleman making that suggestion knows anything about a fight against a corporation backed with $60,000,000, he knows that such a suggestion is vain and useless. We are giving these incorporators not a franchise, but a fight. They have got to make good every step of their progress against unlimited capital, that will buy, as it always does, the best brains in the market, and that will fight from behind barricades already erected for them.

Mr. Speaker, the committee has endeavored to bring in a fair bill—a bill against which there could be no reasonable complaint. I submit that the complaints which have been made have been general. Only one provision in the bill has been pointed out as subject to any specific objection, and that we propose to remedy by amendment.

Gentlemen say here, "This is a nebulous sort of a franchise." It is the same sort of a franchise, so far as that is concerned, that has been given to every corporation organized in this District for twenty years past. If it is nebulous, all the rest are nebulous. The trouble is, Mr. Speaker, when we come to legislate here we have legislators from forty-five different States; and each Representative thinks that if you do not follow the plan laid down in the statutes of his State, you are enacting bad legislation. It is such legislation as Congress has sanctioned for a generation, and there is nothing in that contention.

The gentleman from Illinois and the gentleman from Pennsylvania have said that in this bill we are undertaking to pass an act which will enable some man to sell out and make money. Such a suggestion simply proves that neither of those gentlemen has read the bill. Now, in the first place, under this bill these gentlemen must incorporate; and if they fail to incorporate, what happens? The charter and everything under it is forfeited. But if they do go ahead and organize, what happens then? They must within fifteen days put up $100,000 as a guaranty that they will perform the conditions of this charter. A gentleman has said that the old company would buy off these corporators because they are required to put only $75,000 into the enterprise to organize it. They not only put up the $75,000, but they put up $100,000 more; and if they sell out, the $100,000 is forfeited to the Government of the United States. Who is hurt by that provision? Anybody in the District of Columbia or any taxpayer in the city of Washington?

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield a moment?

Mr. COWHERD. Yes; for a question.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman please call attention to that part of the bill where it is provided that somebody must put up $100,000 within fifteen days?

Mr. COWHERD. Why, there is a provision that a bond shall be given in the sum of $100,000. Does the gentleman deny that?

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman understand that that bond would amount to anything?

Mr. COWHERD. Provision is made so that suit may be brought on that bond and that the sum named in the bond shall be taken as liquidated damages if the incorporators do not carry out the provisions of the charter.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think that any court of the country would sustain a provision for a bond of that kind?

Mr. COWHERD. I do think so. The courts have sustained an exactly similar provision. I think I could cite the gentleman to such cases.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman allow me a question for information?

Mr. COWHERD. Oh, yes; that is what we are here for.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. It is upon the point to which I called the attention of the gentleman from Maryland a short time ago.

Mr. COWHERD. I am going to reach that later.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. My question relates to the issuance of stocks and bonds.

Mr. COWHERD. I will come to that a little later on, if the gentleman will permit me.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in this bill we are endeavoring not only to legislate for the benefit of the people of Washington, but to enact legislation that will be operative to permit this company to successfully engage in the great fight which is to come between it and the present company.

Suppose this bill does go into effect. If the company does not incorporate, nobody is hurt. If they do incorporate, they put up a bond for $100,000; which amount will be forfeited to the United States if they do not carry out the provisions of the bill.

But suppose they go ahead, and, after fighting the existing system for a while, sell out, as suggested by gentlemen around me. In that case it is provided that the parties who purchase shall hold their property subject to all the limitations mentioned in the charter; and if the purchase is made by any other company operating a telephone line here, then all other rights or franchises which such company may hold shall be subject to the limitations of this charter. And what are those limitations? That they must furnish a business telephone for $48 a year and a residence telephone for $36.

Gentlemen talk of telephones at cheaper rates in smaller towns. It is true that some small towns do have cheaper rates for telephone service; but thus far, since the consolidation, as I am informed, in Detroit, there is no city in the United States of the size of Washington where telephone service is in operation at these rates.

Now, a company of gentlemen come before our committee. They come representing large financial interests. They are men who are capable and able to carry out what they agree to do, and they say to us: "We will put up an absolutely gilt-edge bond for a hundred thousand dollars conditioned that we will within the time limited here furnish a system capable of supplying as many users of telephones as are now using the telephone in this city, and we will guarantee to furnish the service at the rates named in the bill, and you can take the $100,000 as liquidated damages if we do not carry out our contract."

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Does the bill provide that they shall give that bond?

Mr. COWHERD. Yes; that they shall give it, and give it before anything is done under the charter.

Mr. PEARRE. If they do not give it the charter is forfeited.

Mr. COWHERD. That is correct. If they do not give it the charter is forfeited. Do you not want to try it, gentlemen? If you try it and it is successful, you set the precedent in the United States for a reduction of telephone rates, a service that is to-day the most exorbitant of any monopoly holding a municipal franchise. If you do that, gentlemen, it will be followed all over the United States, and millions of dollars will be saved to the people of the country.

Now, some gentlemen say you ought to reduce the rates lower. I can only say that so far there has never been any definite determination of what is a fair telephone rate. They attempted to determine it here in the courts of this District, and the court held that $50 a year was too small, and that you could not furnish good telephone service here for that sum—that is, $50 each for business and residence telephones. Yet this company comes in here and offers to do it for $48 and $36.

Now, gentlemen, I submit the criticisms that have been leveled against the members of this committee for bringing in this bill are not just criticisms.

Let me note some of the objections that gentlemen have raised, and I want to call the attention of the distinguished gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN], who criticises the service now being rendered by the Metropolitan Street Railway Company, to the fact that on the floor of this House in the last Congress he stood here demanding that these companies be allowed to consolidate. He said that Congress, with its strong hand, could reach and remedy any detriment to the service that might arise. He said that we held control over that company, and the minute they did not do what they ought to do we would bring them to time.

Now he stands before the same body, telling you that you can reach some other company, but admits that he was wrong in that instance, or else he is negligent now in his duty in regard to that company. Some of us fought that consolidation then. We said then that competition was the thing. We said then that if you allowed them to consolidate, these little neglects would arise and you could not reach them.

In regard to the question of a single wire to each 'phone an amendment has been proposed. Mark you, we provide, first, that there shall be a maximum charge of $48 and $36, and now we propose this amendment:

Provided, That if more than one telephone is put upon a wire the rates above fixed shall be reduced—

Compelling a reduction if more than one telephone is put upon a wire—in accordance with such regulations as may be made by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

Permitting a reduced rate for two telephones, a greater reduction for three, a still greater reduction for four, and yet leaving a provision whereby wires may be run a great distance and some compensation left to the company.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. COWHERD. I should like to have a few minutes more.

Mr. PEARRE. I yield five minutes more to the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COWHERD. Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to call attention to this decision that has been referred to. I agree with the gentleman from Iowa about that. I doubt the law of that decision, or rather I doubt the finding of facts on which the law is based; but it is the decision of the court. Unless it is overruled by some higher court it will stand. That case has been appealed.

The question now is whether we ought to wait the number of years that it may take that case to go through the Supreme Court. Probably, as all lawyers know, if it is reversed, it will be reversed for another trial and take years again for its trial in the lower courts and its appeal to the Supreme Court, with the people of the District of Columbia paying $200,000 every year of that time for service that would be rendered under this bill for less than a hundred thousand dollars. Why, in the four or five years that it would take to litigate that matter through the various courts you would probably save enough under this bill to build another telephone system.

I will not read from the decision in that case. My time is so limited I content myself with saying that it is held that Congress has no power to pass laws impairing the obligations of contracts; that rights have been given to these people to use the streets here and certain rights under certain bills passed, and that Congress can not make a rate at which they can not furnish the service; and if you can not compel them to furnish the service at the rate you make, then, I assert, you can not impair their rights further by taking away entirely the franchises of the company.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I should like to ask the gentleman a question for the information of members of the House.

Mr. COWHERD. I will answer the gentleman's question if I can.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I simply wanted to know, for information, how did this present company get the use of the streets?

Mr. COWHERD. They came in here and asked permission to string some wires and got that permission, as I believe, from the Commissioners, and then Congress took some telephones. Congress, by appropriation bills, authorized payment for telephones, permission was given them to construct a conduit, and things of that kind. There was never any charter given.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. They rely upon some sort of an implied contract.

Mr. COWHERD. Yes; some sort of implied contract, growing out of these recognitions of their rights in the District of Columbia by Congress.

Now, the gentleman from Illinois has said you are going to let another company come in and tear up the streets and leave your streets all torn up. Why, gentlemen ought to know that there is a general law in this District under which a man digs in the streets; that he has to go to the Commissioners of the District to get permission, that he has to give security that he will repair the streets when through with his work, that he has to protect it with lights, barriers, and things of that kind, and that after the work is done he must see that the street is put back in perfect condition.

I admit that it would be better, if we could, to fix a decent rate and compel one company to stand by it, and it would be better if that company could be the old company. I should be willing to do that; but we tried to do it, and that case was taken into the court, and the court decided that the telephone company could not live under the rates that we fixed. They swore to that; they proved it to the satisfaction of the court.

I do not want to be understood as agreeing with that decision of the court. To furnish an excuse for their charges the Bell companies here and elsewhere enter into contract with equipment companies, in which they hold the majority of the stock, by which they rent the apparatus they use, paying enormous royalties, practically to themselves. They pay $7.50 a year for each receiver and transmitter. All other companies buy their instruments outright, paying $9 for a receiver and transmitter. They pay practically to themselves $1 per year for each drop on the switchboard, when it could be bought for $3 or $4.

Such legerdemain, taking money out of one pocket to put it in another, ought not to be considered by a court when it comes to passing upon what is a fair rate. But the court has passed upon it and said we could not reduce the rate to $50, and now responsible men come to your committee and say they will give you a better rate than that, and you say we ought not to take it; that we ought to go back to the old company and in some way get them to come in and do the work at the rate which these people offer. I believe that the result of such legislation as this will be that the old company will immediately come down or be forced out of business. If they buy this charter, they will have to come down. If they sell out to the new company, the new company will operate under this charter.

Now, just a word in response to the suggestion of the gentleman from Massachusetts. I want to say frankly for myself—and I believe we ought to be frank with the House in regard to these matters—that I thought it was the duty of this committee, endeavoring as they were to obtain the cheapest telephone system in the United States, with a proposition from responsible people that they would either give it to us or forfeit a hundred thousand dollars, knowing as we did that they had to come in competition with the strongest company in the United States, that would fight them through every inch of the way, through the courts, through Congress, before the people, and everywhere else—I thought we ought to give them a liberal charter. I did not believe the risk would be taken unless the inducement was commensurate with the risk.

Now, with no other telephone service in the United States furnished at these rates to-day, with a decision of the courts of this District that you can not furnish it at this rate, or even at a higher rate, I do not believe that you can put the stock on the market and sell it for 10 cents on the dollar. Does any man in this House believe it? I was willing to say to these people: "We will give you a liberal charter."

It may be that they will get some watered stock into it. For myself, I am willing that they should water the stock a little if they reduce the rates 50 per cent to the people of the District of Columbia. You will save to the subscribers in this city a hundred thousand dollars a year and improve the service under this bill. I am willing that the new company should be paid for doing that.

I submit to you, gentlemen, that every objection that has been made has been an objection that has either been fairly answered in the terms of the bill or an objection that has no merits in it.

I submit to you that this is one of the most meritorious measures ever brought before this House of Representatives, and I call upon every man who believes that the people of the District of Columbia should be represented as you would represent your own community if you were at home voting in a city council—I call upon every man who believes that the present telephone rates in this District are exorbitant (and I for one am convinced they are) to rally around this bill and give us an opportunity to do justice to the people of the District of Columbia. [Applause.]

I ask permission to extend my remarks in the RECORD for the purpose of giving some figures.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COWHERD. The following statement showing the cost and operation of lines other than those connected with the Bell Telephone Company in cities where competition has been instituted I take from the brief of Messrs. A. A. Birney and H. F. Woodward, counsel for complainants in the case above referred to. The facts set forth were gleaned from the evidence taken in the trial of that case:

NEW STATE TELEPHONE COMPANY, MICHIGAN.

The testimony as to this company and the financial results of its rates is complete. November 1, 1898, it operated 134 exchanges in Michigan, and about 3,000 telephones, the largest exchanges being Ann Arbor, with 505 telephones, and Port Huron, with 315, and the smallest Dearborn, with 4. The system is almost exclusively the metallic circuit, and the instrument of the long-distance type. The rates for service are $24 for business and $18 for residence telephones.

To determine the results all original papers were produced for the examination of counsel and the fullest exhibit made from August, 1897, to October 31, 1898.

For the ten months beginning January 1, 1898, the gross receipts of this company were $59,904.74, of which $30,714.02 was profit.

CITIZENS' TELEPHONE COMPANY OF GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.

Since the proof about this plant is exact, and the number of instruments in use closely approximates those in use in Washington, the results shown are most important.

This company has operated since July 1, 1896; its construction is aerial, all service over the metallic circuit; its instruments are of the long-distance type. The actual cost of construction to January 1, 1899, was $169,000. The company has issued no bonds, but built the plant from sales of stock, of which, on July 1, 1898, it had issued $120,000. It has 2,508 stations; its franchise limits rates to $36 and $24, but the rates charged are $30 and $20 on three-year contracts.

The construction is first-class, and cost $65 to $67 per station. It operates its 2,508 lines at an annual cost of $18 per telephone. Its receipts for the year ended June 30, 1898, were $57,000, and its expenses $37,000, the average number of telephones in use being 2,200. The expense includes $1,800 for taxes. For a year and a half the company has paid quarterly dividends of 2 per cent each.

HOME TELEPHONE COMPANY, FORT WAYNE, IND.

Has two exchanges in Fort Wayne, and connects through toll lines not owned by it with 50 to 75 towns in the neighborhood.

Has 2 miles underground conduit, containing 8 miles of duct. About 40 linear miles in Fort Wayne system. City has about 50,000 population, and has 5 lines of electric street railways. December 31, 1898, the company had 1,624 instruments in use in Fort Wayne, being an increase from 1,320 during the year.

About one-half of the lines are metallic circuits, the others have the common return. All business telephones are of the long-distance type. Of the 1,624 telephones on December 31, 1898, 562 were business and 1,030 residence, and 39 free for city officials. Regular rates, $36 and $24, or $48 for both to one person. Capital stock authorized, $250,000; issued, $125,000. Bonds, $125,000, bearing 6 per cent interest. Cost of construction, $247,748.33 to October 1, 1898, the expenditure for construction during the preceding year being $50,243.40.

Detailed monthly reports of the business from October 1, 1897, to December 31, 1898, and the annual report to stockholders made October, 1898, were produced for inspection of counsel, and the annual report was put in evidence. This shows earnings for the year, $32,674.82; expense, $17,846.85; net earnings, $14,828.07, out of which was paid for interest on bonds and dividends $10,763.54. A share of stock was given with each bond purchased.

RICHMOND, VA.

The independent company, the Richmond Telephone Company, commenced business July 1, 1896, with less than 600 telephones, and now has about 1,300. Service is all metallic; no party lines. Construction aerial, on large cables strung on poles 60 feet high, put up in the alleys. Poles are all chestnut.

The company paid for construction $75 in its bonds for each telephone station up to 1,200; pays $10.50 for telephones, buying principally from American Electric Telephone Company and Western Telephone Construction Company, and uses switchboard made by latter company; pays taxes to city of about $1,000; rates, $36 and $24. In 1898 the average from telephone rental was $32.68 each for the year; amount collected, $36,720.10; then number of telephones, 1,229; average collected per telephone, $29.89; average expense per telephone, $23.61.

Before the company commenced business the Southern Bell Telephone Company occupied the field. Its rates were $60 and $48 for first half mile; now $30 and $18. The plant of the Richmond company has all been constructed from $95,000 bonds sold and earnings above expense. Copper wire is used in all cables and steel wires between cables and houses. Over two-thirds of the telephones are in use by business houses.

STOCKHOLM, SWEDEN.

Population, between 250,000 and 280,000. Two companies, one operated by the Government and the other by private enterprise—the General Telephone Company.

THE GENERAL TELEPHONE COMPANY.

Began business in 1883; paid-up capital, £160,000; rates for service, $27. In 1894 had 10,346 subscribers' instruments; had paid dividends of 8 per cent from the beginning, and had acquired property valued at the end of 1894, after eleven years' working, at £205,643, besides building up substantial reserves, employees' accident and benevolent funds, and paying for the conversion of the whole of its Stockholm system from single to double wire.

OTHER CONTINENTAL RATES.

The statistics given are for 1894 and taken from Mr. Bennett's book, Telephone Systems of the Continent of Europe:

Austria (State control)—14,483 subscribers, of whom 7,700 were in Vienna (49); rates, $25 (page 34).

Bavaria—Munich, 5,000 subscribers; Nuremberg, 2,500 subscribers (51); rates, $36.40.

Belgium (State control)—Brussels, 2,506 subscribers; rates, $50; subscription covers other towns (72).

Denmark (private companies)—Copenhagen, 4,510 subscribers; rate, $40.52 (108).
Finland (private companies)—Helsingfors, 2,150 subscribers; rate, $23.45 (132).
France (State monopoly)—Paris, 12,500 subscribers; rate, $80; Lyons, 1,200 subscribers; rate, $60 (136, 174).
German Empire (State monopoly)—Berlin, 25,000 subscribers; Hamburg, 9,200 subscribers; rate, $37.50 (184). (Webb, 352.)
Holland (private companies)—Amsterdam, 1,752 subscribers; Rotterdam, 961; rate, $47.55; dividend of 9 per cent in 1894 (226,249).
Italy (concessions)—Business, $37.50; residence, $28 (308).
Russia (concessions)—St. Petersburg, 1,400 lines; Moscow, 1,400; rate $125, the highest in Europe.
Spain (concessions, the plants to belong to the State after twenty years (327)—Rates in cities of 200,000 and more, $27.50 and $20 (328).
Switzerland (State monopoly)—$8 per annum and $25 per hundred calls (378).

Mr. PEARRE. I yield to my colleague from Maryland.

Mr. MUDD. Mr. Speaker, I have no special concern about and certainly no special feeling of interest in this particular bill further than the desire to do just what is right and just to the people, who are deeply interested in this telephone subject-matter under the circumstances in which they now find themselves. On the 14th of February, 1898, I introduced a resolution, which the House adopted, requesting the Speaker of this House to appoint a special committee to inquire into the subject-matter of telephone rates in the District of Columbia, and as a result of the investigations of that committee and the evidence taken in court in the case to which much reference has been made here, I am convinced that telephone rates can be fixed and found practicable and reasonable in this District at figures that are no higher than those provided by this bill.

So far as observations have been made by the gentleman from Iowa as to this company being a Maryland corporation, I want to make this remark: There has been no disposition that I am aware of to give a franchise to these particular incorporators in preference to any others. There has certainly been no such disposition on my part. I did not originally favor any bill giving it to these incorporators. I introduced a bill—I do not know the exact number of it—incorporating a number of Washington people under practically the same terms as provided in this bill and for the same purposes. There was but little if any restriction as to those who should come in. I think the number of people taken in as incorporators was about 15 or 20 reputable, substantial business men of this city.

But after this bill had been prepared, and after it had been undergoing consideration to some extent by the committee, a number of the incorporators of the previous bill came to the committee and said that they were of the opinion that these gentlemen represented greater financial ability; that theirs was likely a more bona fide concern; that it could more likely cope with success with the present telephone monopoly in the District; so that, yielding my personal preference, I concluded to support and am now supporting this bill as the best proposition that had been presented to the committee and as representing the best efforts of that committee in the preparation of a measure out of which they had any reason to hope for anything like practical success.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this matter, in my judgment, has come practically to an issue between the people of the District of Columbia upon the one side and the monopoly known as the American Bell Telephone Company upon the other, and when it comes to that, sir, I am in favor of the people of the District of Columbia, almost all of whom have signified their preference for this bill as against the unreasoning and exorbitant exactions to which they are subjected at the hands of this American Bell Telephone Company.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I understand—in fact, it is well understood—that a court in this District has solemnly declared that it costs $71 a year for each telephone in this city, operated by the American Bell Telephone Company, or its offspring, the Chesapeake and Potomac Telephone Company, under which name it operates and does business in this District; and that if Congress undertakes to require that company to provide service for rates less than that amount, such legislation is tantamount to confiscation of its property and therefore unconstitutional.

It is not likely that we will get from any such court a decision in the near future that is more favorable to the people of the District or less favorable to the telephone company. We can expect no relief, therefore, from that source.

Here, on the other hand, are a number of reputable gentlemen, who stand high in the financial world, who come to us and say, and offer to give a financial guaranty to the extent of $100,000, that they are willing to give to the city this service of the same character its people are now receiving and better, each telephone having a separate wire, and each having a metallic circuit, each subscriber getting unlimited service, and at rates for the best service that they are now getting that are lower by more than one-half than those that the present company charges for its cheapest and most inefficient service; and yet gentlemen would have this House pause here and do nothing to relieve this situation, because they say this is not a perfect bill, and they undertake to persuade the House and themselves that it is better for the House to repeal or revoke the power of the present company that is now providing the only telephone service in the District and leave the District with no service at all.

Mr. Speaker, I am of the same opinion as the gentleman from Iowa, to the effect that the American Bell Telephone Company or its representative, the Chesapeake and Potomac Telephone Company, has no franchise at all in this District. They have never been given any franchise by Congressional action. They have only obtained, from time to time, permission from the District Commissioners to locate their wires here, and they have subsequently, from time to time, received a quasi-Congressional recognition of that location by provisions, generally in appropriation bills, as to the manner of the location of those wires.

I deny the proposition that that company has any vested right at all that Congress is bound to respect. They may have what might be termed and considered as a revocable license or privilege for the location of their plant and wires here, which this Congress can repeal or revoke or rescind at any time that it sees fit; but, sir, admitting that we can do that, there is no reason why we should not pass the legislation provided in this bill. Indeed, if we have any idea of doing that, then it is with much greater reason that while we are contemplating the doing of it we should provide the District of Columbia with something else and something better.

It is said, and I am sure with truthfulness, that the rates provided in this bill are about as low as are found by comparison with cities elsewhere in the country that have about the same population and about the same telephone service as Washington City. To-day, in the District of Columbia, considering the amount of the service and the character of the service, I think I do not fall far away from the fact when I say that the prevailing rates are among the highest rates in the United States, if not, in fact, in the world.

No such condition of things ought to be allowed to prevail in this District. The Congress of the United States, sitting, as it does, as the legislature for the District of Columbia, should not permit these companies for one moment longer such concessions as have been granted and such extortionate and oppressive rates as they are now charging; and Congress would not allow the existence of such conditions if members would bear in mind clearly the character of the responsibility which rests upon them as the legislative body of this municipality, and would consider the interests of the people of this District in their action upon this bill as they would were they the people of their own States and cities of their own States. It is with such view as to their duty, and with such sense of responsibility, that I ask gentlemen to consider this bill, and, so considering it, I do not believe we will fail to enact it into law.

Mr. PEARRE. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I desire to send two amendments to the Clerk's desk and have them read for the information of the House, and to be pending.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin sends to the desk two amendments which he desires to have read for information.

Mr. HEPBURN. The time for offering amendments has not come. That does not cut off the balance of my time that I have reserved, and the amendments could only be read for information.

Mr. BABCOCK. They can be read in my time.

Mr. HEPBURN. They can only be read for information at this time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland yields time to the gentleman for an amendment, and of course the gentleman can offer it, and the amendment will be read.

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

Insert in line 15, page 6, after the word "dollars," the words "to consist of 7,500 shares at $100 per share."

Amend by adding at the end of section 3 the following words: "Provided, That if more than one telephone is put on a wire the rates herein fixed shall be reduced in accordance with such regulations as may be made by the Commissioners of the District."

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman desire a vote on the amendments now?

Mr. BABCOCK. I desire to be heard, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. BABCOCK. The object, Mr. Speaker, of presenting this bill to the House is to secure proper and reasonable rates and to enlarge the telephone service. Under the rates now existing in the city of Washington we have about 2,000 telephones, and the committee believe that after this service is installed there will be 5,000 telephones in use. I want to say further, Mr. Speaker, that the committee has given this subject its careful consideration for years. As I stated before on the floor, this is the first proposition that has in it the elements of what the committee considered practicability and success. The committee has carefully examined into the record of every corporate name, and the incorporators are not only responsible but able financially, and the committee has reason to believe that they intend to accept this charter and file the bond for $100,000 to comply with the provisions of the charter.

Not only that, but I have been advised by responsible trust companies, whose bonds are good for almost any amount, that if this charter was granted they would furnish the required bond.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this is a subject that Congress has discussed through appropriation bills a good many times, and I have to say on behalf of the committee that its entire day was taken away from it last Monday, and that one-half of to-day has been taken away from the committee by privileged measures, and on this question, and for the reason that I believe the House is sufficiently informed, I now move the previous question on the bill and pending amendments to its passage.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Before the gentleman calls for the previous question——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin yield to the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Before the previous question is called I want to offer an amendment.

Mr. BABCOCK. There is only thirty minutes more remaining of the session, and will the gentleman wait——

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. It is now or never.

Mr. BABCOCK. I believe the House is ready to consider it.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Does the gentleman call for the previous question on the bill and amendments?

Mr. BABCOCK. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I protest, Mr. Speaker, that there ought to be an opportunity to amend the bill. I have no objection to the gentleman calling for the previous question on the general debate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi will bear in mind that we are in the House and not in Committee of the Whole, and the gentleman from Wisconsin having charge of the bill has asked for the previous question. If the House is not satisfied with the bill and wants to amend it, it can vote it down.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. If the Speaker will excuse me, I did not forget that we were in the House, but I made the remark supposing the House would vote the previous question up. I should be glad if the House would vote it down, so that the House will have an opportunity to amend the bill.

Mr. BABCOCK. I will yield to the gentleman from Mississippi to offer his amendment.

Mr. HEPBURN. Well, Mr. Speaker, I had an hour, and by arrangement the other side used a portion of the time. I reserved the balance of my time. There are two gentlemen on this side of the House who desire to address the House. How does it happen that the gentleman from Wisconsin gets the floor and takes me off the floor in that way?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa must bear in mind that when he reserves his time it is subject to the condition that the House may never allow him to use it.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I understand the gentleman from Wisconsin yields to me to offer an amendment, and I offer the following:

In line 4, on page 7, after the word "company," insert the following: "or a controlling interest in the stock thereof."

I want to say this in explanation of the amendment. This is the clause of the bill which provides for the most essential thing, in my opinion, in the bill—the means whereby the old company, if it buys up the new company, are to comply with the restrictions provided for in the bill.

Mr. BABCOCK. The committee accepts the amendment, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin yield to the gentleman from Iowa?

Mr. BABCOCK. For what purpose?

Mr. HEPBURN. I want to offer an amendment.

Mr. BABCOCK. Yes.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment:

In line 12, page 2, strike out the following words: "and to string wires on poles in the alleys of said city in the District of Columbia."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2, lines 12 to 14, strike out the following words: "and to string wires on poles in alleys of said city in the District of Columbia."

Mr. BABCOCK. Now, Mr. Speaker, I renew my motion for the previous question on the bill and amendments to its passage.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks for the previous question on the bill and amendments to its passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The amendments offered by the Committee on the District of Columbia were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will now report the first amendment offered from the floor.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert in line 15, page 6, after the word "dollars," the following: "to consist of 7,500 shares, at $100 per share."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding at the end of section 3 the following words: "Provided, That if more than one telephone is put on a wire, the rate herein fixed shall be reduced in accordance with such regulations as may be made by the Commissioners of the District."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 4, page 7, after the word "company," insert "or a controlling interest in the stock thereof."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was read, as follows:

After the word "wire," in line 12, page 2, strike out the following: "and to string wires on poles in the alleys of said city and in the District of Columbia."

Mr. BABCOCK. I hope this amendment will be voted down.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. I move to recommit the bill with instructions to report an amendment to section 11, as follows:

That no stock or bonds shall be issued except in exchange for actual cash.

Mr. BABCOCK. I move that this motion be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the motion of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BABCOCK] is out of order.

Mr. BABCOCK. I hope the amendment will be voted down.

The amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. I move to recommit the bill with instructions to insert the following amendment——

The SPEAKER. Only one motion to recommit is in order. The gentleman's motion can not be entertained.

The question being taken, the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. BABCOCK, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

FREDERICK DOUGLASS MEMORIAL AND HISTORICAL ASSOCIATION.

Mr. BABCOCK. There is, I believe, on the Speaker's table unfinished business from the last District day.

The SPEAKER. The bill to which the gentleman refers had reached the point of third reading when the reading of the engrossed copy was demanded, and the bill was temporarily laid aside. For the information of the House the bill will be reported by its title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 3507) to incorporate the Frederick Douglass Memorial and Historical Association.

Mr. COWHERD. I wish to ask the chairman of the committee whether he will not yield for a request for unanimous consent to amend the bill by striking out section 7. I think this amendment will remove all objection to the bill.

The SPEAKER. Before the amendment can be made the order for the engrossment and third reading of the bill must be reconsidered. Is there objection to the reconsideration? The Chair hears none. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COWHERD] to strike out the seventh section? The Chair hears no objection.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

TAX SALES IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask for present consideration of the bill (H. R. 8466) to amend an act entitled "An act in relation to taxes and tax sales in the District of Columbia."

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4 of the act of February 28, 1898, entitled "An act in relation to taxes and tax sales in the District of Columbia," be, and the same is hereby, amended by striking out all after the word "sale," in line 8 of said section.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BABCOCK, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

INSURANCE IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 9283) to regulate insurance in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin calls up a bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill (H. R. 9283) to regulate insurance in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

During the reading,

Mr. JENKINS said: Mr. Speaker, on account of the lateness of the hour and the importance of this measure, several gentlemen desire that it may be withdrawn, and I will ask unanimous consent that it go over without prejudice. We do not care to rush anything through without proper consideration.

The SPEAKER. Is it the purpose of the gentleman to call up another bill to-night?

Mr. BABCOCK. Yes.

Mr. JENKINS. We are perfectly willing to occupy the time until 5 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman then can withdraw it for the time being.

Mr. JENKINS. We will withdraw it without prejudice.

GUARANTY COMPANIES IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 9143) to authorize the formation of guaranty companies in the District of Columbia.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any company now authorized or which may hereafter be authorized by act of Congress to do an insurance business in the District of Columbia, having a paid-up capital of not less than $250,000, may engage in a security, guaranty, and indemnity business; and where by law two or more sureties are required upon any obligation which said company is authorized to insure it may act as sole surety thereon and may be accepted by the court or other officer or person authorized to approve the sufficiency of any bond or undertaking.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. JENKINS, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

WESLEY HEIGHTS RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 7502) to incorporate the Wesley Heights Railway Company of the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin calls up the following bill.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the substitute be read in lieu of the original bill.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the substitute for the original bill will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That M. C. Butler, John T. Arms, Thomas E. Waggaman, Dr. Henry D. Fry, and John F. Waggaman, of the city of Washington, D. C., their associates and assigns, be, and they hereby are, created a body corporate under the name of "The Wesley Heights Railway Company."

ROUTE.

SEC. 2. That the company is authorized to construct and operate a street railway along the following-named route: Beginning on Prospect avenue at the Union Passenger Station of the Capital Traction Company; thence westwardly along Prospect avenue and Prospect avenue extended to a point near the east side of Arizona avenue, or for said distance or any portion thereof on a route coinciding with the route of the Washington and Great Falls Electric Railway; thence on property to be acquired by said company to Arizona avenue; thence northerly along Arizona avenue to a projected avenue running northwest through the intersection of Forty-fifth and Galveston streets; thence along said projected avenue to Forty-fifth street; thence north on Forty-fifth street to Lowell street; thence west on Lowell street to and into an extension of the aforesaid projected avenue; thence northwest on said projected avenue to a point where Forty-ninth street, when extended, will intersect said avenue; thence north on Forty-ninth street to the District line: Provided, That where this route lies between the lines of a proposed highway the company shall acquire a right of way, not less than 30 feet wide, in the center thereof; and all rights of way acquired within the lines of proposed highways shall be dedicated to the use of the public before a permit is issued for the construction of the railway therein: Provided further, That where the route is along a road less than 66 feet wide the company shall, at its own expense, widen said road to 66 feet in width before a permit is issued for the construction of the railroad therein.

COINCIDING ROUTE.

SEC. 3. That where this route coincides with an existing street railway one set of tracks shall be used in common, upon terms mutually agreed upon, or in case of disagreement, upon terms determined by the supreme court of the District of Columbia, which is authorized and directed to give hearing to the interested parties and to fix the terms of joint trackage. Payments for the use of the tracks shall be paid monthly, in advance; default in such payments shall suspend the rights of the company to use the tracks until the payments are made.

MOTIVE POWER.

SEC. 4. That the motive power shall be electricity, and if the trolley system is used a return wire of equal capacity to the feed wire and similarly insulated must be provided, and each car shall be equipped with a double trolley. No portion of the electrical circuit shall, under any circumstances, be allowed to pass through the earth, and neither pole of any dynamo furnishing power to the line shall be grounded.

PLANS.

SEC. 5. That all plans of location and construction shall be subject to the approval of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

EXCAVATIONS.

SEC. 6. That excavations in the highways shall be made under permits from the Commissioners and subject to regulations prescribed by them.

CONSTRUCTION.

SEC. 7. That the railway and its appurtenances shall be constructed in a substantial and durable manner. Such construction shall be subject to District inspection. All changes to existing structures in public space shall be made at the expense of the company.

DEPOSITS.

SEC. 8. That the company shall deposit such sums as the Commissioners shall require to cover the cost of District inspection and the cost of changes to public works in the streets.

CARE OF ROADWAY.

SEC. 9. That the company shall keep the space between its rails and tracks and 2 feet exterior thereto in good condition, to the satisfaction of the Commissioners. The pavement of these spaces shall be at least as good as that of the contiguous roadway. The proper authorities shall have the right to make changes of grade and other improvements which they deem necessary; and when any highway occupied by the company is improved, the company shall bear the entire expense of improving said spaces to correspond with the remainder of the roadway. The requirements of this section shall be enforceable under the provisions of section 5 of the act providing a permanent form of government for the District of Columbia, approved June 11, 1878.

COMPLETION.

SEC. 10. That the road shall be in operation for its entire length within the District of Columbia within two years from the approval of this act.

GUARANTY DEPOSIT.

SEC. 11. That within ninety days from the approval of this act the company shall deposit $1,000 with the collector of taxes of the District of Columbia to guarantee the construction of its railway within the prescribed time. If this sum is not so deposited, this charter shall be void. If this sum is so deposited and the road is not in operation as herein prescribed, said $1,000 shall be forfeited to the District of Columbia and this charter shall be void.

CARS.

SEC. 12. That the cars shall be first class, and shall be kept in good condition, to the satisfaction of the Commissioners.

TIME-TABLE.

SEC. 13. That the cars shall be run as often as the public convenience requires, on a time-table satisfactory to the Commissioners and approved by them.

SPEED.

SEC. 14. That the speed of cars shall be subject to the police regulations of the District of Columbia.

EJECTMENT FROM CARS.

SEC. 15. That persons drunk, disorderly, contagiously diseased, or refusing to pay the legal fare may be ejected from the cars by the officers in charge thereof.

SEC. 16. That the rate of fare within the District of Columbia shall not exceed 5 cents per passenger, and six tickets shall be sold for 25 cents.

BUILDINGS.

SEC. 17. That the company is authorized to erect and maintain the buildings necessary to the operation of its road, subject to the building regulations of the District of Columbia. The company shall erect and maintain passenger rooms and transfer stations as required by the Commissioners, and proper conveniences for the public shall be provided at such rooms and stations.

LAND.

SEC. 18. That the company is authorized to acquire, by purchase or condemnation, the necessary land for its authorized right of way.

ORGANIZATION.

SEC. 19. That the corporators shall open books of subscription to the capital stock of the company within three months from the approval of this act, of which previous notice shall be given every day for one week by advertisement in a newspaper published in the city of Washington. The corporators herein named shall be individually liable for moneys received for subscriptions to the capital stock prior to the organization of the company by the stockholders. Within six months from the approval of this act the company shall be organized by the stockholders, for which purpose the corporators shall call a meeting of the stockholders, notifying them of the purpose, time, and place of such meeting by a letter mailed to each, and giving additional notice by advertisement in a newspaper published in the city of Washington every day for one week previous to such meeting; and thereafter the stockholders shall meet at least once a year, and such notice shall be given of each meeting. Each share of paid-up stock shall entitle the holder to one vote. The stockholders are empowered to elect a president, treasurer, a secretary, a board of directors, and other officers, and to make by-laws and regulations for the government of the company.

CAPITAL STOCK.

SEC. 20. That the company is authorized to issue capital stock, to an amount not exceeding $200,000, in shares of $10 each. Stock sold by the company shall be fully paid for before delivery to purchaser. Stockholders shall be individually liable to the extent of the value of the stock held by them.

ANNUAL REPORT.

SEC. 21. That the company shall make an annual report to the Senate and House of Representatives in accordance with the provisions of section 10 of an act to amend the routes of the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway Company and the Belt Railway Company, approved June 10, 1896.

TAXES.

SEC. 22. That the company shall pay 4 per cent of its gross earnings in the District of Columbia as taxes. Said taxes shall be paid on the basis of the receipts for the preceding year, and shall be due and payable, subject to the same penalties on arrears, and collectible in the same manner, as other taxes in the District of Columbia. The company's real estate shall be taxed as other real estate, but its tracks shall not be taxed.

PENALTIES.

SEC. 23. That each and every violation of the requirements of this act shall be punishable by a fine of from twenty-five to one thousand dollars, in the discretion of the court, such fines to be collectible in any court of competent jurisdiction as other fines and penalties are collected in the District of Columbia.

AMENDMENT—REPEAL.

SEC. 24. That Congress reserves the right to amend or repeal this act.

The substitute was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BABCOCK, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

Mr. BABCOCK. The Committee on the District of Columbia have nothing further to offer.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 2956) to extend the time for the completion of the incline railway on West Mountain, Hot Springs Reservation.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 68) granting to the State of Kansas the abandoned Fort Hays Military Reservation in said State, for the purpose of establishing

Mr. PERKINS, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2884) for the relief of Edward Everett Hayden, an ensign on the retired list of the Navy, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. HALE, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2) to provide for the construction, maintenance, and operation, under the management of the Navy Department, of a Pacific cable, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. HALE. I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9279) making appropriations to supply additional urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, and for prior years, and for other purposes, to report it with amendments and to submit a report thereon. I shall try to-morrow morning to get up the bill for passage.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. PRITCHARD, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3289) granting a pension to Isabella Underwood, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 1763) granting a pension to Ella F. Sydnor; and

A bill (H. R. 6139) granting a pension to Lucinda Haggard.

Mr. ELKINS, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by himself on the 14th instant, proposing to appropriate the sum of $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the printing in book form of so much of the Report of the Committee on Awards of the World's Columbian Commission as is contained in the special reports upon special subjects or groups, etc., intended to be proposed to the urgency deficiency appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and that it be printed; which was agreed to.

THE CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Mr. PLATT of New York. I am directed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 159) to amend joint resolution to furnish the daily CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to members of the press, etc., approved February 17, 1897, to report it without amendment, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

Mr. COCKRELL. What is the change made in the existing law?

Mr. PLATT of New York. It increases the number for the press by one.

Mr. COCKRELL. Under the existing law is the RECORD furnished in bound form?

Mr. PLATT of New York. It is not.

Mr. COCKRELL. Then this increases the distribution of the bound volumes?

Mr. PLATT of New York. It increases the distribution by giving a bound copy in addition to the regular copy that the members of the press receive.

Mr. COCKRELL. As I understand it, they now get the daily RECORD, and in addition they will get a set of bound RECORDS under this joint resolution.

Mr. PLATT of New York. That is right.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RURAL FREE-DELIVERY SERVICE.

Mr. PLATT of New York, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the following concurrent resolution from the House of Representatives, reported it without amendment; and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed 25,000 copies of so much of the report of the First Assistant Postmaster-General for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1899, as relates to the rural free-delivery service, of which 10,000 shall be for the use of the House of Representatives, 5,000 for the use of the Senate, and 10,000 for the use of the Post-Office Department.

REPORT OF GOVERNOR OF ALASKA.

Mr. PLATT of New York. I am directed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 100) providing for the printing of additional copies of the report of the governor of Alaska for 1899, to report it favorably without amendment, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Public Printer to print 2,500 additional copies of the report of the governor of Alaska for 1899, 1,500 for the use of the Department of the Interior and 1,000 copies for distribution by the governor of the Territory.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REPORT ON MILITARY OPERATIONS.

Mr. PLATT of New York, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the following concurrent resolution submitted by Mr. HAWLEY on the 19th instant, reported it without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there shall be printed 7,000 copies of the annual report of the Major-General Commanding the Army to the Secretary of War for the year 1899, with accompanying papers and documents, of which 2,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 4,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 1,000 copies for the use of the War Department and the Headquarters of the Army.

SENATOR FROM WEST VIRGINIA.

Mr. MCCOMAS. From the Committee on Privileges and Elections I submit a report in relation to certain memorials protesting against the seating of the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SCOTT]. I ask leave, in behalf of the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS], that the views of the minority may be printed with the report of the majority.

I give notice that I shall speedily call up for consideration the resolution appended to the report with respect to the seat of the Senator from West Virginia.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maryland, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, reports a resolution, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That NATHAN B. SCOTT has been duly elected a Senator from the State of West Virginia, for the term of six years, commencing on the 4th day of March, 1899, and that he is entitled to a seat in the Senate as such Senator.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be placed on the Calendar.

SOUTH CAROLINA STATE CLAIMS.

Mr. TILLMAN submitted an amendment proposing to make an appropriation to pay any balance found due the State of South Carolina on claims by that State for money spent in the war of 1812–1814, on account of money spent in the Indian war 1836, 1837, and 1838, and the amount due by that State for bonds thereof held by the Secretary of the Treasury as custodian of the Indian fund, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which, with the accompanying papers, was ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

VACANT SPACES IN THE CAPITOL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. R. 28) relating to the use of the rooms lately occupied by the Congressional Library in the Capitol.

The amendment of the House of Representatives was to strike out all after the resolving clause and insert:

That the rooms and space recently occupied by the Library of Congress in the Capitol building shall be occupied and used hereafter for the purpose of a reference library for the use of the Senate and House of Representatives and for that part of the National Library known as the Supreme Court Library.

Mr. SPOONER. I move that the Senate nonconcur in the amendment of the House of Representatives and request a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. SPOONER, Mr. ELKINS, and Mr. COCKRELL were appointed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 3597) to incorporate the Frederick Douglass Memorial and Historical Association;

A bill (H. R. 7502) to incorporate the Wesley Heights Railway Company of the District of Columbia;

A bill (H. R. 8466) to amend an act entitled "An act in relation to taxes and tax sales in the District of Columbia;"

A bill (H. R. 9047) to incorporate the Washington Telephone Company and to permit it to install, maintain, and operate a telephone plant and exchanges in the District of Columbia; and

A bill (H. R. 9143) to authorize the formation of guaranty companies in the District of Columbia.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. 197) for the relief of Hattie A. Phillips;

A bill (S. 427) for the relief of A. F. Fleet, superintendent of the Missouri Military Academy, Mexico, Mo.; and

A bill (H. R. 2956) to extend the time for the completion of the incline railway on West Mountain, Hot Springs Reservation.

REPORT OF CHARLES E. MAGOON.

Mr. DAVIS. On the 12th of February a report was submitted to the Secretary of War by Mr. Charles E. Magoon upon the legal status of the territory and inhabitants of the islands acquired by the United States during the war with Spain. It is a performance of extraordinary merit and covers the entire subject of the history of the islands—statutory law, judicial decisions, and everything upon which anyone may desire information. I move that the report be printed as a document.

The motion was agreed to.

PAPER ON ISTHMIAN CANAL.

Mr. PERKINS. I ask leave to have printed as a public document a paper which is not very long, and which is contained in the proceedings of a meeting held under the auspices of the American Association of China to consider the question of an isthmian canal. It is the address of a former captain in the Navy, now consul-general at Shanghai.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from California asks unanimous consent for the printing of the paper which he sends to the desk. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

PAPER ON POLITICAL AND ECONOMIC SUBJECTS.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I ask unanimous consent to have printed as a document a paper which I have in my hand. It is composed largely of the sayings of the most popular Populist who ever lived in this country, and for the purpose of giving some idea of the matter contained in the document I will read a paragraph from it:

Labor is prior to and independent of capital. Capital is only the fruit of labor, and could not have existed if labor had not first existed. Labor is the superior of capital, and deserves much the higher consideration. Capital has its rights, which are as worthy of protection as any other rights. Nor is it denied that there is, and probably will always be, a relation between labor and capital, producing mutual benefits. The error is in assuming that the whole labor of community exists within that relation.

* * * * * * *

No men living are more worthy to be trusted than those who toil up from poverty—none less inclined to take or touch aught which they have not honestly earned. Let them beware of surrendering a political power which they already possess, and which, if surrendered, will surely be used to close the door of advancement against such as they, and to fix new disabilities and burdens upon them, till all liberty shall be lost.

The document contains paragraphs on different subjects, which I think are of interest in connection with the present political contention in this country. I ask that it be printed as a document for the use of the Senate.

Mr. HALE. Whose are the wise sayings or aphorisms which the Senator has collected?

Mr. PETTIGREW. I will read another paragraph, and I presume the Senator will at once recognize the author of this document. If he does not then, I will tell him. His universal knowledge, I have no doubt, will enable him to catch on:

I remember once being much amused at seeing two partially intoxicated men engaged in a fight with their greatcoats on, which fight, after a long and rather harmless contest, ended in each having fought himself out of his own coat and into that of the other. If the two leading parties of this day are really identical with the two in the days of Jefferson and Adams, they have performed the same feat as the two drunken men.

Mr. HALE. Who is the author?

Mr. PETTIGREW. I will say that there has been another fight between the political parties of this country since Cleveland's time, and the two political parties have now fought themselves out of their coats into the coats of their opponents. The Senator is desirous of knowing the author. The two paragraphs I have read are from Abraham Lincoln.

Mr. HALE. I was going to ask the Senator whether this collection of wise sayings is by any one person or by divers persons upon divers subjects.

I will state the reason why I make the inquiry. I do not know that there is to be any limit to the extent to which the Senate will go in the way of printing. It has all come in pretty much within the last dozen years, for before that time only things were printed which might be termed matters having relation to subjects before the Senate in the way of reports or hearings. But outside literature was never printed as a Senate document. The conclusions arrived at by eminent men on subjects-matter before the Senate were not printed unless they were quoted as a part of speeches.

I do not mean to say that we have kept up that practice, because we have very largely departed from it, and we print a great many things that I do not think we ought to print. I do not think it is the province of the Senate as a legislative body to encumber its record and fill up its spaces with books; and it occurred to me that the Senator is now proposing to go pretty far. He is a very busy man. I do not believe that he has had time to collect these aphorisms. Somebody has done it for him, or at his suggestion.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Well, Mr. President, that is incorrect. I might as well correct that right here. I did collect them, and I passed upon every one of them.

Mr. HALE. Then if the Senator has done that he is still a busier man than I supposed him to be. However, I am not going to object, because the Senator, with myself and the other Senators, is interested in maintaining the proper dignity of this body, and if he thinks it is proper to print a collection of this kind I will let it go. I suppose I might come in to-morrow and want a volume of table talk printed by the Senate—Luther's Table Talk, or Selden's Table Talk.

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the Senator from Maine permit me a word?

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

Mr. HAWLEY. Has he not a valuable scrapbook at home?

Mr. HALE. I have a scrapbook that I take considerable pride in, which I am having collected, but I should hardly want the Senate to print it. However, I am not going to object. If the Senator from South Dakota thinks it ought to be printed, let it go.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator from Maine allow me to inquire what it is about? What is the subject?

Mr. HALE. Oh, it is about everything. It is an omnium gatherum, and undoubtedly some of it is good, because the Senator from South Dakota has read one or two things from Abraham Lincoln, and I do not know that Abraham Lincoln ever said anything that was not good. It is a collection of fine things.

Mr. SPOONER. On one subject?

Mr. HALE. Oh, no.

Mr. SPOONER. On all subjects?

Mr. HALE. Oh, upon every subject under the sun.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Well, Mr. President, the Senator from Maine knows more about my document than I do myself, apparently. He must be a very busy man.

Mr. HALE. I judge from what the Senator has read. He has read four or five extracts.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I have read only two; but I know that men can get into a condition when they see double, and even see five to two.

Mr. HALE. I can not see double; but I can see that if we begin this practice, it will never end. However, I will not object if the Senator wants to have the document printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. SEWELL. I object, unless it goes to a committee for investigation.

Mr. HALE. The Committee on Printing?

Mr. SEWELL. The Committee on Printing. I move the reference of the paper to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator from South Dakota state the subject to which it relates?

Mr. PETTIGREW. Now, the Senator from Wisconsin asks me, and I will be very glad to impart to him the information; but certainly he got a vast amount from the Senator from Maine, who is certainly wonderfully informed on the subject.

Mr. SPOONER. Sometimes men know a great deal that is not true.

Mr. PETTIGREW. The Senator from Wisconsin is not classed in that category, neither is the Senator from Maine. They are very busy at times over that which they do not know to be true, however.

Mr. SPOONER. Now, will the Senator kindly state what the subject of this paper is? To what does it relate?

Mr. PETTIGREW. I shall be very glad to do so. I have quoted with regard to the dignity of labor from Abraham Lincoln's annual message to Congress at the first session of the Thirty-seventh Congress, December 3, 1861. I also have here Abraham Lincoln's letter in response to an invitation to attend the festival in honor of the anniversary of Jefferson's birthday, given by the Republicans of Boston, in which he describes the two political parties as getting into a controversy and changing coats. He said it reminded him of the fight of two partially intoxicated friends of his, each of whom, without hurting the other, after struggling for some time, succeeded in fighting out of his own coat and getting into that of the other. I remarked that this same contest had been going on lately, and that as a result of this last contest the two political parties had swapped coats again, and I thought, therefore, it was very appropriate to the present situation, as the Democracy of Cleveland is no more the Democracy of Bryan than is the Republicanism of Lincoln the Republicanism of MARK HANNA or William McKinley.

Mr. SPOONER. Does this document relate entirely to coats, or does it embrace other subjects?

Mr. PETTIGREW. There are allusions to those coats which fit the present situation if they do not fit the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. SPOONER. Will my friend permit me? I wanted to know what proposition this paper——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is nothing before the Senate. Unanimous consent having been asked and objection made, there is nothing before the Senate.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I wish to read one more paragraph in order that the Senator from Wisconsin may know what the character of the paper is before it goes to the Committee on Printing.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the Senator's reading? The Chair hears none, and the Senator will read.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. Lincoln said:

> The Chief Magistrate derives all his authority from the people, and they have conferred none upon him to fix the term for the separation of the States. The people themselves can do this, also, if they choose, but the Executive, as such, has nothing to do with it. His duty is to administer the present Government as it came to his hands and to transmit it, unimpaired by him, to his successor. By the frame of the Government under which we live this same people have wisely given their public servants but little power for mischief; and have, with equal wisdom, provided for the return of that little to their own hands at very short intervals. While the people retain their virtue and vigilance, no Administration, by any extreme of wickedness or folly, can very seriously injure the Government in the short space of four years.

I think that is particularly pertinent to the pending controversy, because it has been undertaken on this floor to show that Abraham Lincoln, in conducting the war of the rebellion, violated the fundamental principle of the Declaration of Independence that all governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed.

It is well known that that was the thought around which centered Abraham Lincoln's whole political life, and to charge upon this floor, as has been charged, that he abandoned that principle because he was the Executive during the war of the rebellion makes it pertinent to present to the country the view which he took of this subject. The people, he says, should determine the relations of the States and the terms for the separation of the States, but that, as the representative of the majority, it was his duty to preserve the Union of the States.

Mr. President, I understand there is objection. I do not care to have the document referred to the Committee on Printing, because I think that would be the graveyard of it. I will, therefore, not present it; but it is quite appropriate that objection should be made to the teachings of Abraham Lincoln.

Mr. SEWELL. Mr. President, I do not object so much to what the Senator has read as to what he has not read. I want the Senate to know what is in that document before it is ordered to be printed. If that is a proper document to be printed at the expense of the Government of the United States and indorsed by the Senate, it ought to be examined by some committee, or otherwise we shall have everything that anybody chooses to get up printed among our records.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Dakota has withdrawn his request.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I wish to say that I have nothing here but two pages of maxims from Washington, two pages from Thomas Jefferson, and the rest of it is from Abraham Lincoln.

Mr. SEWELL. Then the Senator need not be afraid to have it go to the committee in the usual way.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I am not afraid to have it printed and go to the American people.

Mr. SEWELL. Then I think you ought not to be afraid to have it go to the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The request of the Senator from South Dakota has been withdrawn.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I withdraw it because it has been objected to.

THE WILLIAM CRAMP & SONS COMPANY.

Mr. COCKRELL. Regular order, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

Mr. STEWART. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Order of Business No. 115, being the bill (S. 795) for the relief of the William Cramp & Sons Ship and Engine Building Company, of Philadelphia, Pa.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nevada asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill named by him. Is there objection?

Mr. STEWART. I presume there will be no objection to the bill when it is understood. This matter was referred to the Secretary of the Navy, who investigated it and recommended that the claim be referred to the Court of Claims. It is for extra compensation for delay by the Government, the Cramp Company being contractors with the Government. As I have stated, the Secretary of the Navy has investigated the case. He thinks some of the claims are meritorious and that the company ought to have the privilege of taking the case to the court. He so recommends. The object of the bill is to carry out his recommendation.

Mr. COCKRELL. When that case was heretofore reached on the Calendar, I am not certain whether it was the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] or the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] who asked that it might go over.

Mr. STEWART. It was the Senator from Massachusetts now in his seat [Mr. LODGE] who made that request.

Mr. LODGE. I objected, Mr. President, at the time because two similar bills in which I was interested were carried over, and the Senator from Rhode Island then made an objection to all of these bills.

Mr. STEWART. But this does not belong to the class of bills to which the Senator refers. They were old cases, and this is a new case and an exceptional case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? The bill has been read in full to the Senate hitherto.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President, while I do not object to the bill, I think that claims of this nature and character should go to the Committee on Naval Affairs. That committee has had many bills of this kind for extra compensation for the construction of war vessels before it for consideration, and it seems to me that committee, by reason of its experience in this particular line, is better calculated to pass upon the merits of such a claim as this than are those who have not given more thought and consideration to them. I only offer this as a suggestion. I shall not object to the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? The Chair hears none.

Mr. LODGE. Then, Mr. President, I shall ask the Senate to take up Order of Business No. 114, being the bill (S. 1744) for the relief of the Atlantic Works, of Boston, Mass. I think all of these bills ought to go together; and if there is to be objection to the bill to which I refer, I shall object to them all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. ALLEN. I should like to have the bill read for information.

Mr. STEWART. This bill has been read.

Mr. ALLEN. Oh; but I understand the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] wants all of these bills of a similar character taken up together.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator want to have the bill read in full?

Mr. ALLEN. I did not know that it had been read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has been read as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. ALLEN. What is the nature of the bill?

Mr. STEWART. The nature of the bill is this: It is a claim of recent date. This company constructed several vessels for the Government.

Mr. ALLEN. Lately?

Mr. STEWART. Lately, in the last few years, and they applied to Congress for relief. Congress referred the claim to the Secretary of the Navy for investigation. The Secretary investigated and reported that there were meritorious claims among them, and recommended that the matter be referred to the Court of Claims for an adjudication of the rights of the parties under their contract. The claim is that the Government failed to furnish the necessary supplies to construct the vessels under their charge, by which they suffered damage, etc. The Secretary of the Navy went over the whole matter, and reports that some of the damages undoubtedly should be reimbursed, but he declined to allow them on the ground that the matter should be adjusted by the Court of Claims.

Mr. ALLEN. Were not these matters covered by their contract with the Government?

Mr. STEWART. The contract covered the general matters, but it did not cover these matters, which were outside of the contract. They are extra claims for alterations, delays, etc. The case has been before Congress heretofore, and, as I have stated, was referred to the Secretary of the Navy, who, under the law, has made his finding and has reported that the claim should be referred to the Court of Claims for adjudication; and I think it ought to be so referred.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HALE. I did not hear the bill read and I do not precisely know what bill it is. There was a bill which involved a very large sum of money, which the Committee on Naval Affairs investigated, and that committee did not report in its favor. Whether this is the same bill or not I do not know, but I shall object to its consideration until I can examine it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made, and the bill goes over.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT SEATTLE, WASH.

Mr. FOSTER. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 305) making an additional appropriation for a public building at the city of Seattle, in the State of Washington.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I rise to make an inquiry. Are we taking up bills on the Calendar in order, or are we considering bills called up by Senators?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Calendar under Rule VIII is in order, and Senators are asking unanimous consent to proceed to the consideration of certain bills on the Calendar. The Senator from Washington [Mr. FOSTER] has asked unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill named by him. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes, in addition to the $300,000 heretofore appropriated for a public building at Seattle, in the State of Washington, to appropriate $450,000 to be used in the purchase of the site and the construction of the building.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HEIRS OF PHILIP C. ROWE.

Mr. LODGE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 226) for relief of heirs of Philip C. Rowe.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to the consideration of the bill. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to the administrator of the estate of Philip C. Rowe, of Massachusetts, $13,200, for the use of his invention by the United States of an improvement in pistons for pumps by the Navy Department during the years between 1865 and 1882.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM C. DODGE.

Mr. TURLEY. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1008) for the relief of William C. Dodge. This bill has been passed by the Senate, I believe, five times previously, and it is from the Committee on Patents.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read in full for information, subject to objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to William C. Dodge, of Washington, D. C., the sum of $10,000, for a cartridge-loading machine furnished by him to the United States upon an order from the Ordnance Department, and for the use of his invention of the same, and of the patent therefor, dated July 17, 1866, and for his improvement in cartridges, patented July 4, 1865, and for the infringement of his said patents by the United States, which said sum of $10,000 shall be in full satisfaction of all claims for such use and infringements and for the relinquishment of all right to claim any further compensation for the use of the same by the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President——

Mr. COCKRELL. I give notice that as soon as this bill has been completed I shall insist upon the Calendar.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection, and the bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no amendment the bill will be reported to the Senate.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, I beg pardon. I have been five or six times trying to catch the hearing of the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator rise to this bill?

Mr. HAWLEY. I do. I inquire if there is a report in the case?

Mr. TURLEY. Yes, sir; there is a report in the case.

Mr. HAWLEY. If the report is not too long, I should like to hear it read. I do not know how large the claim is; I do not know anything of its nature or character; and I do not know what opinion the War Department has expressed regarding it.

Mr. TURLEY. I will state, for the information of the Senator, that this is a bill which has passed the Committee on Patents, I think this is the fifth time, and it has been passed by the Senate, I think, five times. The report shows how many times it has been passed.

The bill provides for the compensation of this gentleman for the use by the Government during the civil war of a patent for making cartridges. I was instructed by the Committee on Patents to ask for its consideration, and as the Senate has passed it so often before, I thought it ought to be called up.

Mr. HAWLEY. I make no objection.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MERRICK, MERRICK & COPE.

Mr. COCKRELL. Regular order, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri demands the regular order, which is the Calendar, and the first bill on the Calendar will be stated.

The bill (S. 2630) for the relief of the legal representatives of Merrick, Merrick & Cope was announced as first in order on the Calendar; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MONTANA ASYLUM FOR THE BLIND.

The bill (S. 706) granting to the State of Montana 50,000 acres of land to aid in the establishment and maintenance of an asylum for the blind was announced as next in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator reporting that bill is not present. Let it be passed over without prejudice.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over without prejudice.

INVENTIONS BY NAVAL OFFICERS.

The bill (S. 2035) providing for the use by the United States of devices invented by its naval officers while engaged in its service and covered by letters patent was announced as next in order; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed its consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This bill has hitherto been read in full as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AVERY D. BABCOCK AND WIFE.

The bill (S. 373) for the relief of Avery D. Babcock and wife, of Oregon, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Avery D. Babcock, of Polk County, Oreg., and to Margaret I. Babcock, his wife, $2,000, to be equally divided between them, in full payment of their claim against the Government for the use and occupation by the United States of their donation claim No. 58, in section 8, in township 6 south, range 7 west of the Willamette meridian, in the State of Oregon.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REIMBURSEMENT OF TERRITORIAL EXPENDITURES BY NEVADA.

The bill (S. 2384) to reimburse certain persons who expended moneys and furnished services and supplies in repelling invasions and suppressing Indian hostilities within the Territorial limits of the present State of Nevada was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

VIRGINIA I. MULLAN.

The bill (S. 1231) for the relief of Virginia I. Mullan, of Annapolis, Md., was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Virginia I. Mullan, of Annapolis, Md., $420.98, that being the amount of money due by the United States to her, as owner and holder of coupons Nos. 3, 4, and 5, for interest from January 1, 1854, to September 1, 1856, on California Indian war bonds Nos. 84, 183, and 194, for $500 each, and No. 220, for $1,000, act of May 3, 1852, which coupons were heretofore filed by the First National Bank of Washington, D. C., in the Treasury Department for payment, but not paid for want of sufficient appropriation with which to pay the same, as recited in Senate Document No. 137, Fifty-fifth Congress, first session, and recommended by the Treasury Department for payment.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM A. RICHARDS.

The bill (S. 1759) for the relief of William A. Richards, late surveyor-general of Wyoming, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to appropriate $318 to reimburse William A. Richards, late United States surveyor-general for Wyoming, for losses incurred by him through a cloud-burst July 6, 1891, near Fort Washakie, upon the Shoshone Indian Reservation, in the State of Wyoming, while in the discharge of his duties as surveyor-general examining a public survey, under section 2223 of the Revised Statutes of the United States and the special instructions of the honorable Commissioner of the General Land Office.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HISTORY OF FILIPINO REVOLT.

The following resolution, submitted by Mr. PETTIGREW January 30, 1900, was announced as next in order:

Resolved, That the paper entitled "An Authentic Review of the Philippine Revolution" be printed as a document for the use of the Senate.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Let the resolution be again read, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be again read.

Mr. LODGE. Let the resolution go over, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I hope the Senator from Massachusetts will not object. This is simply a statement of the events which occurred in the Philippines. This is the statement of Aguinaldo, and is the most authentic and full statement, and I believe the most truthful one, we have yet had of the events which occurred in that island.

Mr. LODGE. I object to that resolution, Mr. President. We have had it up for discussion a number of times.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the resolution goes over without prejudice.

MRS. A. C. WAGNER.

The bill (S. 2519) for the relief of Mrs. A. C. Wagner was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The preamble recites that it appears that John A. Wagner, a citizen of the United States, residing at Philadelphia, on the 7th of July, 1880, while in a boat on the Delaware River above the United States Arsenal at Bridesburg, was struck by a bullet fired from a rifle while shooting was being practiced by the officers and soldiers of the United States Army at the arsenal, which bullet struck the said John A. Wagner in the right leg, exploded therein, severely wounding him, and as a result thereof he was attacked in said wound by a cancerous affection, and from the effects thereof died in the city of Philadelphia on November 12, 1893, leaving a widow and one daughter him surviving; therefore the bill directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Mrs. A. C. Wagner $5,000 in payment of all claims or damage arising from the aforesaid injury, or the death of her husband, which was caused thereby.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

SHIP CANAL IN THE STATE OF WASHINGTON.

The following concurrent resolution, submitted by Mr. FOSTER January 29, 1900, was announced as next in order:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be directed to cause a survey to be made and an estimate submitted of the cost of constructing a ship canal to connect Puget Sound with Grays Harbor, via the Chehalis River, in the State of Washington, in accordance with recommendations heretofore made and filed with the War Department.

The resolution was reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment, in line 7, after the word "Department," to insert "and to report whether or not, in his judgment, it is advisable to construct such canal;" so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be directed to cause a survey to be made and an estimate submitted of the cost of constructing a ship canal to connect Puget Sound with Grays Harbor via the Chehalis River, in the State of Washington, in accordance with recommendations heretofore made and filed with the War Department, and to report whether or not, in his judgment, it is advisable to construct such canal.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

JOHN EMERSON.

The bill (S. 744) for the relief of John Emerson, late a private in Company I, Nineteenth Maine Infantry, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments, in line 4, after the words "directed to," to strike out "amend" and insert "correct;" and in line 7, after the word "discharge," to insert "as of date May 30, 1864;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to correct the military record of John Emerson, late a private in Company I, Nineteenth Maine Infantry, by removing the charge of desertion from said record and granting him an honorable discharge as of date May 30, 1864.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FRANCIS A. E. BRIOT.

The bill (S. 2085) for the correction of the military record of Francis A. E. Briot was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of War to remove from any records or books in his Department the charge of absence without leave and of desertion now standing against the name of Francis A. E. Briot, late a private in Company G, Seventeenth Wisconsin Volunteers, and to grant him an honorable discharge as of date March 24, 1862; but no pay, bounty, or allowance shall accrue by reason of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DEPUTY CUSTOMS COLLECTORS IN WASHINGTON.

The bill (S. 2112) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to fix the salaries of the deputy collectors of customs at the subports of Tacoma and Seattle, in the State of Washington, and repealing all laws inconsistent therewith, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LICENSING OF OFFICERS OF STEAM VESSELS.

The bill (H. R. 1040) to amend section 4445, of Title LII, of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to the licensing of officers of steam vessels, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHILDREN OF MATTHEW J. J. CAGLE.

The bill (S. 2082) for the relief of the children of Matthew J. J. Cagle was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, at the end of line 7, to add the following proviso;

Provided, however, That all sums of money heretofore paid him for said services by the United States Government shall be deducted from said sum of $1,500;

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, directed to pay to the children of Matthew J. J. Cagle the sum of $1,500, for services rendered and expenses incurred by him as scout and guide in and for the United States Army during the late civil war: Provided, however, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADDITIONAL SENATE MESSENGERS.

Mr. SULLIVAN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate resolution No. 211. It is very short.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a resolution which will be read.

The resolution submitted by Mr. SULLIVAN on the 16th instant was read, as follows:

Resolved, That each Senator other than the chairmen of the standing and select committees of the Senate, and having as such a messenger, be, and he is hereby, authorized to employ a messenger, to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate, at the rate of $1,440 per annum, until otherwise provided by law.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. CARTER subsequently said: I move that the Senate reconsider the vote whereby Senate resolution No. 211 was agreed to. I send the resolution to the desk to be reported for the information of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Montana enters a motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate agreed to a resolution which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution.

Mr. CARTER. I will not press the motion at this time, inasmuch as the Senator who presented the resolution is absent from the Chamber. The resolution was not referred to any committee. It provides by mere Senate resolution for a very heavy draft on the contingent fund of the Senate, a draft which could not be honored continuously without a very large addition to that fund. The difficulty which the resolution seeks to remedy is being arranged for in a satisfactory manner, I think, in other directions. I merely make this explanation at this time and will endeavor to call up the motion in the morning hour.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to ask if that is not a resolution which, under the rules of the Senate, ought to have gone to the Committee on Contingent Expenses?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the rule it should go to the Committee on Contingent Expenses.

Mr. COCKRELL. Then a mistake was made in passing it. The distinguished Senator from Michigan [Mr. MCMILLAN] and the senior Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] and a number of others were in their seats, and I supposed they were watching it, because the very next resolution which came before the Senate was one offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN], and on the suggestion of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. MCMILLAN] it went over. I supposed, therefore, that he was watching very closely.

Mr. MCMILLAN. My attention happened to be distracted for the moment, and I did not hear the resolution read.

TRANSACTIONS WITH NEW YORK CITY BANKS.

Senate resolution No. 123, to discharge the Committee on Finance from the further consideration of Senate resolutions of January 4 and 23, 1900, concerning certain Treasury transactions, was announced as the next business in order on the Calendar.

Mr. MCMILLAN. That had better go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will go over without prejudice.

Mr. ALLEN. Is objection made to the resolution?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection was made, and the resolution goes over without prejudice.

Mr. ALLEN. I did not hear the objection.

RAFTS ON THE PACIFIC OCEAN.

The bill (S. 2926) to prevent dangers to navigation from rafts on the Pacific Ocean was announced as the next business in order on the Calendar, and was read.

Mr. ALLEN. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without prejudice?

Mr. PERKINS. I hope the Senator from Nebraska will not object to the bill unless there is some reason of which I have no knowledge. It is asked for unanimously by the shipowners and people generally on the Pacific coast, it being in the interest of the protection of life and property. Rafts have been towed on the coast there that have been a menace to commerce. Unless the Senator knows a reason why it should not be passed of which we have no knowledge, I trust he will withdraw his objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the bill goes over without prejudice.

PURCHASE OF PROPERTY FOR SCHOOL PURPOSES.

The bill (S. 1873) to provide for the purchase of certain property for school purposes was announced as the next case in order on the Calendar.

Mr. ALLEN. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over without prejudice.

GOVERNMENT FOR PUERTO RICO.

The bill (S. 2264) to provide a government for Puerto Rico, and for other purposes, was announced as the next case in order on the Calendar.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over without prejudice.

Mr. MORGAN. No; I object to that course. I wish to make some remarks on the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under Rule VIII, the Senator from Alabama can make remarks for only five minutes and but once. However, if there is no objection, the bill being before the Senate, the Senator can proceed.

Mr. MORGAN. The Senate has agreed to go into executive session at 3 o'clock.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the Senator from Alabama proceeding to address the Senate on what is called the Puerto Rican bill? The Chair hears none. The Senator from Alabama will proceed.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, on last Friday the Senate voted to lay on the table the following amendment, offered to a bill by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN]:

Provided, That the Constitution was, by force of the treaty concluded between the United States of America and the Kingdom of Spain at the city of Paris, France, April 11, 1899, extended over the island of Puerto Rico and its inhabitants.

On that motion the yeas and nays were as follows:

YEAS—36.

Allison,	Foraker,	Lodge,	Ross,
Baker,	Foster,	McBride,	Sewell,
Bard,	Gallinger,	McComas,	Shoup,
Beveridge,	Gear,	McCumber,	Simon,
Carter,	Hale,	McMillan,	Spooner,
Davis,	Hanna,	Penrose,	Thurston,
Deboe,	Hawley,	Perkins,	Warren,
Elkins,	Kean,	Pritchard,	Wellington,
Fairbanks,	Lindsay,	Quarles,	Wetmore.

NAYS—17.

Allen,	Chilton,	Harris,	Tillman,
Bacon,	Clark, Mont.,	Kenney,	Turley.
Bate,	Clay,	McLaurin,
Berry,	Cockrell,	Morgan,
Butler,	Culberson,	Rawlins,

The motion to lay that amendment on the table cut off debate, and, as the same question is presented in the bill now before the Senate, I wish to discuss it, along with some others.

The treaty of Paris is a supreme law of the United States, by the express declaration of the Constitution of the United States, and while it continues in force, which will be as long as the United States has the right to maintain it and the power to enforce it, this treaty will be the supreme law.

This treaty gives to the United States full sovereign power over the islands ceded by Spain, and a power that will mature into full sovereignty over Cuba when we find it just and proper.

These rights include the eminent domain and the right to govern the people in all these possessions and to determine and control their international relations. These are political rights and powers, won from Spain and her subjects in open warfare, they having been declared the public enemies of the United States. As to the people in Puerto Rico, the situation is fully provided for and controlled by the laws of nations until we bring them under municipal rule.

Every Spanish subject in the world was the public enemy of the United States during all the period of the war. Not one of them, at any place or under any circumstances, could separate himself from Spanish allegiance by any act of insurrection until the United States had consented to the change of his belligerent character, either as an individual, by giving him personal protection with his personal consent, or as a member of a recognized government de facto. Some Cubans, Puerto Ricans, and Filipinos were personally relieved from their belligerent character through the acceptance of their services in aiding our military operations, and were entitled to our protection as a reward for their fealty to our flag.

But no government de facto or de jure has been recognized by the United States, or by any other power, in either of these islands, and therefore the people who were engaged in insurrection against Spain in any of the islands did not cease to be our public enemies. When Spain surrendered, they were surrendered. In Cuba a civil and military power existed in organized form and had armies in the field. They had a strong moral right to our recognition as a government de facto, but we withheld such recognition, and Gomez and Garcia, and their armies, and all the representatives of the government of the republic of Cuba were ignored in the treaty of Paris, and were surrendered to the United States by Spain, and are still subject to our control under the laws of nations.

We invaded Cuba, without their consent, and treated with Spain for sovereign rights in Cuba, as if the republic had never been heard of.

If the Cubans, who were thus organized had, at any time, resisted the authority of the United States, or should do so now, they would be engaged in rebellion against the United States.

Without discussing the relations of the Tagalogs toward the United States in the Philippines, as compared with the attitude of the Cubans, who had declared their allegiance to the Cuban republic, it is enough to say, as to our right to govern them, that the situation in Cuba was far stronger against our rightful dominion there than it ever was in any part of the Philippine Archipelago. It is, however, undeniable that in Cuba, as in the Philippines, our national power must continue to exist under the treaty of Paris, and the government of all these islands must be conducted under the authority of the laws of nations until Congress shall otherwise provide.

To suppress an insurrection in any of these islands there is no necessity to declare war against them or that a state of war exists, even in the Philippines.

The world has a right to be amused at our discussion of the question whether the Philippines are a part of the United States, while we are voting armies, supplies, and money to suppress the insurrection of a part of one of many tribes in those islands.

Aside from considerations of policy and moral right, the question now presented is fourfold in its character—whether Congress shall proceed to provide legislative government for Puerto Rico; or shall we leave the island under its present government; or shall we abandon it, recognizing its independence; or shall we suffer it to float out among the nations, like a derelict ship at sea, subject to capture or destruction by any other power?

As to Cuba, the treaty—the supreme law—requires that we shall occupy the island. We can not abandon Cuba without the disgrace of violating our plighted faith to Spain. Nor can we abandon Puerto Rico or the Philippines without inviting anarchy, internecine war, and every form of disaster to the people.

When the treaty of Paris was made, Spain had subjects, soldiers, arms and munitions, archives, ships, and public property in all the islands. Her subjects are still in the islands, and property reserved to Spain yet remains in the islands. We have treaty engagements to protect all these in Cuba during our occupancy under a qualified sovereignty.

In all the ceded islands we have treaty obligations with Spain that those of her subjects who shall choose to remain in them shall enjoy these rights indefinitely, and they may signify their continued allegiance to Spain by a public declaration within a limited period. We must therefore provide the legal measures and the necessary officials for their securing this treaty right. We can only do this in virtue of our sovereign powers.

But, outside of treaty obligations, we owe positive duties, under the laws of nations, to Spanish subjects and to the people of other nations, to provide by law for the protection of their lives and property. In the case of Cuba this is also an express treaty stipulation. In the other islands it is the duty of sovereignty.

Under the laws of nations every sovereign is bound to use its authority and powers, certainly in time of peace, to protect the people of other countries in good faith in all the territory that is subject to its sovereign control.

This duty extends to persons and property, and includes the right to the safe and peaceable enjoyment of their possessions and pursuits.

In all these islands there is still a condition of social and racial disturbance between the natives and the Spaniards that is no less than rancorous and revengeful hostility; and between the Tagalogs and other tribes in the Philippines and the imperialists and republicans in Cuba and Puerto Rico there is a state of hostility that can only be controlled by the power of the United States. These conditions existed before and after the war with Spain.

Under the laws of nations we could not be permitted to banish the sovereign power of Spain from any of those islands and then withdraw from them, leaving the people of other nations and their property a prey to anarchy, violence, and spoliation, without responsibility to such nations. We must do our duty to the people of other countries, under the laws of nations, or we must pay the penalty of neglect.

It is our duty, under the laws of nations, to give to all those people the protection of organized, sovereign, and responsible government, and until such government can be established there we are bound to protect them with our sovereign powers.

There was no organized and recognized government in any of the islands, except that of Spain, at the time they were ceded to us, and it was our duty to govern them after such cession, or else to relinquish them to Spain or to some other recognized sovereign power.

There is no such recognized government now in any of these islands except that of the United States, and we are bound to other nations, whose citizens are in the islands, to provide for their safety; otherwise we will have to foot a tremendous bill for damages.

The abandonment of these islands is, therefore, impossible, and we must govern Puerto Rico and the Philippines.

In conducting that government we find—

First. That the treaty of Paris—the supreme law of the United States—is there, by agreement with Spain, ratified by the President and the Senate.

Second. This act extends the Constitution of the United States over the islands, at least to the extent of establishing there our sovereign authority, and of controlling the power, and regulating the duty of the President, and all officers and agencies of the executive department, in their dealings with persons and property in the islands.

Third. This constitutional control over the Executive power in the islands modifies the laws of nations, which comprise the code of laws that prevail in these islands, including Cuba, until they are displaced by acts of Congress.

Under the laws of nations the Chief Executive rules in these islands as the representative of all the powers of the United States until Congress provides for a substituted governing power.

The judicial power of the United States can not operate in these islands to control private persons or private property until Congress has made provision of law to extend these powers over them.

The Constitution operates on officers of the United States to restrain them from abuses of their official functions, and it extends, through the control of such officers, to the preservation of the property of the United States; but this proposition is a collateral matter that is not involved in any question that is now before the Senate and need not now be discussed.

Fifth. In virtue of the laws of nations and under the constraint of the Constitution and the treaty of Paris, the President has power to govern in the islands, through military or civil agencies, to the extent that is permissible under the laws of nations in the case of any supreme sovereign who has conquered or has obtained a foreign country by cession.

Sixth. This is in accordance with the laws of nations, as well as the Constitution of the United States, for the reason that the laws of nations are made a part of the law of the land, at least as to all places within our sovereign dominion, in which Congress has not established government.

The doctrine is very clearly stated in the opinion of the court in Hilton vs. Guyot (159 U. S.), part of which I will read:

> International law, in its widest and most comprehensive sense—including not only questions of right between nations, governed by what has been appropriately called the law of nations, but also questions arising under what is usually called private international law, or the conflict of laws, and concerning the rights of persons within the territory and dominion of one nation, by reason of acts, private or public, done within the dominions of another nation—is part of our law, and must be ascertained and administered by the courts of justice as often as such questions are presented in litigation between man and man, duly submitted to their determination.
> The most certain guide, no doubt, for the decision of such questions is a treaty or a statute of this country. But when, as is the case here, there is no written law upon the subject, the duty still rests upon the judicial tribunals of ascertaining and declaring what the law is, whenever it becomes necessary to do so, in order to determine the rights of parties to suits regularly brought before them.

I read further:

> No law has any effect, of its own force, beyond the limits of the sovereignty from which its authority is derived.

Seventh. The laws of nations are in full force in these islands, except as they are modified by our Federal Constitution, and the question now before the Senate is whether we shall modify these laws or substitute them with laws enacted by Congress, and, if we shall substitute them, to what extent and in what manner they should be modified or repealed.

Eighth. As a supreme military commander, the President, under the laws of nations, may use the forces of the United States, if furnished to him by Congress, and the local militia forces that he may employ to preserve order, enforce the laws, and repress civil commotion or insurrection or rebellion.

Ninth. As a civil ruler, he can make or modify civil laws in accordance with the laws of nations, which leave to a conquered or ceded country the laws that protect life, property, and personal security until some public reason makes it necessary to change them.

Tenth. The Spanish laws, therefore, in force in these islands are the first and recognized basis of civil administration until they are changed by the President or superseded by act of Congress.

If these definitions of the power that now governs in these islands is correct, it is manifest that until Congress shall include them in our municipal system the laws of nations are in force there, with all the powers they confer upon the President, as military or civil ruler and lawgiver. But his office of President of the United States restrains him, in either capacity, from overstepping the boundaries of his duty to this Government.

Shall Congress now proceed to exert its legislative powers over these islands, or is there some difficulty that stands in the way?

The bill under consideration is a proposition for this purpose as to the island of Puerto Rico.

This bill deals almost exclusively with the government of the people of Puerto Rico.

The property of the United States in Puerto Rico is not materially affected by its provisions. In dealing with the people, the first necessity is to ascertain by law those classes of people who, being subjects of Spain, are entitled under the treaty of Paris to declare their purpose to remain under that allegiance.

The remaining classes must be held to select their nationality in the United States by failing to align themselves as subjects of Spain, and the treaty legalizes and confirms the selection. This act imposes on us the duty of treating them as a part of the people of the United States, with the rights of national protection and the duty of rendering military or other public service as the laws shall provide. If any of them were slaves, they are emancipated. If they were peons, they are free.

The treaty gives Congress the power to assign them to citizenship of the United States. This, doubtless, was done because our Constitution does not confer citizenship upon any who were not born in the United States or are not received into citizenship by naturalization.

It is a new case, not covered by the Constitution, that Congress must provide for. These people do not fill either category, and their status as to citizenship is left to Congress in the treaty of Paris. Except as to the right to hold office, to inherit property, and to receive national protection against insurrection or foreign war or injury or injustice inflicted by a foreign power, citizenship of the United States is not a great addition to the natural or personal rights of one who is a denizen or an inhabitant of this country. Citizens of the United States, in common with denizens or inhabitants of the country, are equally entitled to all the protection given to "persons" in the Constitution.

As to the agencies that shall be selected to protect these rights, whether they shall be such as the laws of nations permit, or such as are known to the civil law or the common law of England, or such as the existing local laws provide, that matter is left to be determined by Congress under the Constitution. The form of protecting these personal rights is not prescribed in the Constitution. It is enough if they are not violated or abused.

Congress can assign to these people the character of inhabitants, like our Indians, under our protection and control, or of citizens of the United States, who were not born in or naturalized by the United States. There is no prohibition in the Constitution or in the treaty of Paris to either course.

But, as a matter of political wisdom and duty, it is very clear, I think, that they should be admitted to as full citizenship as we have given to the native inhabitants of all the other territories we have annexed to the United States.

In this matter our history is conclusive upon us, for we have not debarred from citizenship any native inhabitant of any country we have annexed to the United States.

All of them who have not chosen to retain their former allegiance have been made citizens of the United States, without respect to race or any other condition.

Citizenship of the States of this Union is a different matter, about which it is not now necessary to speak. No matter how Congress may dispose of this question of citizenship, it does not affect the main question presented in this case, which is, What will Congress do with Puerto Rico?

Congress may admit new States into the Union if their governments are republican in form. In the period of their growth from unorganized communities into States of the Union Congress has all the powers over them that belong to a local State government and to the Federal Government. These powers are plenary, but not absolute. They are measured, limited, controlled, and restrained by the Constitution of the United States.

In the nurturing and building up of unorganized or disorganized communities into statehood in the Union the discretion of Congress is measured only by the spirit of our Constitution, and the limits it imposes upon their powers, and the decisive mandate and guaranty that the government so established shall be republican in form.

In this process of State building the first requisite is that the place to be included in the operative power of our laws must be within the sovereign jurisdiction of the Government of the United States. No government can enact valid laws that will operate, effectually and of their own force, within the limits of another independent government. (159 U. S.)

If Puerto Rico is a foreign government or country, we can not pass laws to be executed in that island; but such is not the fact.

Puerto Rico is a part of the territorial domain of the Government of the United States, made such by treaty with Spain, the former undisputed sovereign of that island.

Its government now exists by the sufferance of the United States, under the laws of nations and also the obligations of the treaty of Paris, which binds us to assume and exercise sovereign powers over the people and soil of that island.

Puerto Rico is within the limits of the United States, having been so included by a treaty, which is a supreme law of the land, as provided in the Constitution. How it can be outside of the Constitution of the United States or free from its authority while it is within our constitutional limits is a proposition that I can not comprehend.

The Constitution, like any other law, has its application according to the conditions for which it was created. In some of its provisions it applies to the District of Columbia; in others to the States; in others to the Territories organized by Congress; in others to areas where the laws of nations supply actual government. In all places and at all times it applies to all officers who act in the name and by authority of the United States to enforce obedience to its restraints upon their official conduct. Every officer takes an oath to support the Constitution, and the President is sworn also that he will faithfully execute the office of President, and will, to the best of his ability, preserve, protect, and defend the Constitution of the United States.

Can he be exempt from this obligation, or can any officer under his orders be exempt while he is conducting government, civil or military, under the laws of nations, or the laws of Congress or the laws of war, at any place, or at any time, in the name and by the authority of the United States?

The only possible answer to this question is that he can not, and it covers fully every right and power of the executive department at all times and places. The Constitution binds these officials and governs them in every official act.

The powers of Congress, whether they are express or implied, are all delegated and limited. Congress has power to govern the territory that belongs, as property, to the United States. But it must belong to the United States in the sense of being under their jurisdiction. We could not, with the consent of Mexico, enact laws to govern a state or a territory of that Republic. The ownership gives the right to govern, and the Constitution gives the power.

We have seen, in our experience in Mexico and in Puerto Rico, to go no further for illustration, that the Executive of the United States has the power to govern, under the laws of nations, without the aid of a direct enactment by Congress in those countries that are subject to our military power, even before we became the owners of the soil. That power continues until Congress interposes to control the action of the Executive, or gives the power to govern into the hands of another tribunal. Congress is the supreme political power in the United States, and their enactments are decisive as to the attributes of all governments in the United States except the States of the Union. In the District of Columbia the government is not representative in form, but it must be in that form in the States.

Congress, having supreme legislative power over the Territories and not being expressly restricted by the Constitution, can delegate power to local tribunals for self-government, corresponding with the powers of the States of the Union as to legislation and as to the creation of offices, appointments to office, judicial courts, taxation, and many other of the functions of government.

But Congress can not delegate their political supremacy to a Territory so as to make it independent of the Federal Government, or give it any authority to hold intercourse with any foreign power.

That is a Federal power that only the Government of the United States can exercise.

The power to levy imposts and duties on imports from foreign countries is a Federal power that no State or Territory can exercise in its own right. The power to levy taxes for the support of the Federal Government is vested exclusively in Congress, and can not be delegated.

This power of Congress, when it is exercised, must be uniform and without discrimination as to every part of the country to which the sovereignty of the United States is extended by cession or annexation.

But Congress has chosen to leave Puerto Rico and Hawaii under the control of their local laws, as to every subject of taxation to be enforced and administered under the laws of nations up to this time. The tariff laws of the United States and the laws of internal taxation are not altered or affected by the cession of Puerto Rico or the annexation of Hawaii. The collection districts in those islands have not been made collection districts of the United States, and the revenues collected there are not customs revenues under the laws enacted by Congress.

To make them such Congress must extend the revenue laws over those islands, and in doing this no discrimination can lawfully be made for or against them as to the duties that are to be laid upon imports into them or from them into the United States.

There has been no illegality in the collection of duties on imports from Puerto Rico or Hawaii to the United States or in the imposition and collection of duties upon goods imported into those islands from the United States. These duties were collected under different systems of laws in force in these islands that are equally valid under the Constitution of the United States.

The laws of nations that still are permitted to control these relations between the United States and these islands are a part of the law of the land and are recognized in the Constitution. They stand in full force until Congress shall displace them with our municipal laws for the collection of customs duties. Until the ports of those islands are included in the United States collection districts there they are open to the commerce of all countries, under the local laws that we found in force when we acquired title to them. In order to change these conditions Congress must legislate, and the legislation must provide for the collection of customs duties on imports to these islands from foreign countries under the laws of the United States.

An act to prohibit the collection of duties on imports coming from Puerto Rico or Hawaii is not sufficient to cover the difficulty in the situation unless we wish to make the ports in those islands free to all the world, which would be a discrimination against all the other ports of the United States. When Congress begins to legislate on this subject, it can not stop short of so providing that the tax rate and its collections shall be uniform with that of all other ports of the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PETTUS in the chair). The Senator from Alabama will suspend a moment. Under the rule the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, the hour of 2 o'clock having arrived.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 8245) temporarily to provide revenues for the relief of the island of Puerto Rico, and for other purposes.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. As this bill is the one now regularly under discussion, the Senator from Alabama will proceed.

Mr. MORGAN. Our Government was planned with a view to the enlargement of its territorial limits and the expansion of its influence, not merely for the sake of convenience or profit or aggrandizement, but for the increase of the happiness of our people and the encouragement of the liberties of all men against the powers of despotism.

No bounds are set to the United States; no restraint limits our growth. The work of expansion began with the annexation of the Northwest Territory, ceded to the United States by Virginia before the present Constitution existed.

On the basis of that grand acquisition of territory as the "property" of the United States, the first Congress, composed largely of men who sat in the Congress of the Confederation and in the Convention that ordained the Constitution, projected a plan of Territorial government that was the first of its kind, and had no model in any other government. It was not a colony, or a dependency, or a suzerainty, or a sovereign State under our protection. It was the purely American form of government which we style a Territorial government.

It was built upon and adapted to the principles of our Constitution and the political theory of our Republic, which was new in the world.

It looked to the ultimate statehood in the Union of each Territory and prepared for maturing each, according to its special environment, as rapidly as could be safely done, into proper conditions for such a result. The assurance of this result was not the basis or predicate on which the right or duty of organizing Territorial governments was made to depend. That was expected, but it was not a condition precedent.

They were training schools for the great sovereign power that would necessarily ripen into statehood; but at what time that event should occur, with the consent of Congress and the people of a Territory, was left to the control of future events. If it never came, nothing was lost and no violation of the Constitution was wrought by the failure.

In the meantime these local governments are supplied with all the powers that are needed for autonomous government.

They are also aided in their revenues by apppropriations from the Federal Treasury.

Their chief officers are appointed by the President of the United States, to be confirmed by the Senate.

Their judicial courts are given plenary powers for all local necessities of civil government, subject to appeal to the Federal courts. Their legislatures enact all local laws, subject to revision by Congress.

They are, indeed, Federal States, organized and sustained by Federal powers and supplied with Federal money to aid in local government.

In local self-government they may become autonomous, but not independent or sovereign, and it is in this respect that they chiefly differ from States endowed with local sovereignty and admitted to share in the Government of the United States. In the Territorial condition they are controlled by the Constitution in the exercise of all powers given them by Congress, and Congress, in like manner, is controlled by the Constitution in all delegations of power to them. They have no power of government except such as is delegated to them by Congress, and Congress can grant them such powers from time to time as are found to be expedient for the conduct of government, republican in form, conformably to the Constitution of the United States.

Congress is not bound to grant to these political organizations full powers of autonomous government, or the same measure of powers to each Territory. They are not colonies, or dependencies, or provinces, but are governments of the United States, created by Congress, and their people, whether they are inhabitants, denizens, or citizens of the United States, are equally protected in their persons and property by the guaranties of the Bill of Rights in the Constitution. British, Dutch, German, or French systems of colonization have no analogy to our Territorial governments and furnish no rules for their interpretation.

Their colonies are formed for strengthening home governments, with no expectation that they can ever become sovereign or independent powers, while our Territories are the nurturing grounds for the sovereign independence of their people.

If they prefer to become States of the Union, and Congress consents to their admission, they can enjoy the highest liberty and a more exalted independence than belongs to states in any other confederation in the world. Before their admission into the Union as States Congress is the sole judge of the duty and the expediency of recognizing their sovereign independence as separate republics. If they can not stand alone among the nations as independent sovereign republics without our protection they have not acquired that condition and character of statehood that could be trusted with the sovereign and independent powers of government.

There is no criterion by which these conditions can be prescribed or settled in advance. For this reason, and for every consideration that relates to the preservation of the peaceful growth of a Territory in republican, popular government, no pledge of future independence can be safely given to the people of a Territory.

Indeed, if Congress could give a pledge of the sort, it would be unilateral and in vain, because neither the people nor the local government have any power to accept such a pledge from Congress and make it binding. An agreement to be binding must be made between parties who are competent to contract with each other. There are no such organized parties in Puerto Rico or the Philippines, and since the annexation of Hawaii there are no such parties in those islands.

In the case of the Northwest Territory Virginia was the party that contracted for the statehood of that country in the future.

In that Territorial government, and in the dealings of Congress with it, every question that has arisen as to Puerto Rico was settled. Territorial government was organized in the Northwest Territory in July, before the ordination of the Constitution, in September, 1787. As in the cases of Texas and Hawaii, the Northwest Territory had an organized government when it became subject to the Constitution of the United States.

That Territorial government continued in operation until August 7, 1789, when Congress, "in order that it may continue to have full effect," gave to the President the power of appointment and removal of officers which were to be appointed by Congress under the Ordinance of the Confederation adopted in July, 1787.

Every other provision of that ordinance was found to be in accordance with the Constitution of the United States and was accepted by Congress.

It was in this act of the First Congress, approved by President Washington, that our new and peculiar system of Territorial government had its origin.

It is of great importance that we should consult this act, that we may see and understand the real nature, purpose, and plan of this new creation of a government which provided for the first expansion of the area of the governmental powers and jurisdiction of the United States.

In 1740 this ordinance was extended to the territory of the United States south of the Ohio River without change in its provisions. In 1798 it was extended to the Mississippi Territory, purchased from Georgia, except the clause relating to slavery.

In 1803 the power of the President over territory acquired by treaty from France, a foreign Government, was defined and greatly enlarged by act of Congress.

The conditions in Louisiana, as to the mixed character of the population and the existence of Spanish laws there, was almost identical with the conditions in Puerto Rico to-day.

To provide for these conditions Congress enacted, in recognition of the laws of nations, as follows:

ART. I. No person, demeaning himself in a peaceable and orderly manner, shall ever be molested on account of his mode of worship or religious sentiments, in the said territory.

ART. II. The inhabitants of the said territory, shall always be entitled to the benefits of the writ of habeas corpus, and of the trial by jury; of a proportionate representation of the people in the legislature, and of judicial proceedings according to the course of the common law. All persons shall be bailable, unless for capital offences, where the proof shall be evident, or the presumption great. All fines shall be moderate; and no cruel or unusual punishment shall be inflicted. No man shall be deprived of his liberty or property, but by the judgment of his peers, or the law of the land, and should the public exigencies make it necessary, for the common preservation, to take any person's property, or to demand his particular services, full compensation shall be made for the same. And in the just preservation of rights and property, it is understood and declared, that no law ought ever to be made, or have force in the said territory, that shall in any manner whatever interfere with, or affect private contracts or engagements, bona fide, and without fraud previously formed.

ART. III. Religion, morality, and knowledge, being necessary to good government and the happiness of mankind, schools and the means of education shall forever be encouraged. The utmost good faith shall always be observed towards the Indians; their land and property shall never be taken from them without their consent; and in their property, rights, and liberty they shall never be invaded or disturbed, unless in just and lawful wars authorized by Congress; but laws founded in justice and humanity shall from time to time be made for preventing wrongs being done to them and for preserving peace and friendship with them.

The laws remained, and the President was empowered, as in the later case of Hawaii, to appoint persons to carry them into effect.

I need not go further in citing other instances to show that our system of Territorial government is entirely distinct from all systems of colonization that ever existed in other governments, or to prove that the powers of Congress are adequate to the establishment of government, republican in form, at any place within the limits of the sovereignty of the United States; for these Territories were not within the limits of the sovereignty of the United States; the United States did not exist under the present Constitution at the time Virginia ceded them to the old Confederation.

It is manifest, also, from this history of Territorial governments, from its beginning until this date, that Congress may adapt these governments to the condition of the people who inhabit them, giving to some of them greater powers and privileges than are granted to others, without violating any provision of the Constitution of the United States.

The Indians were the most numerous of the inhabitants of all these Territories at the period of the first organization of civil government over them. Their tribal titles to certain large areas of land were acknowledged and we treated with them on all subjects as if they were lawful governments. We have made hundreds of treaties with these various tribes under the treaty-making power of the President and the Senate.

Yet, in all these treaties and in all our legislation respecting the Indians, we have paid no attention to the protection of their rights of citizenship, while we count Indians that are taxed in our basis of national apportionment.

If this was a duty, Congress has had power to neglect it without doing violence to the Constitution.

I refer to this as showing that the right to govern in the Territories does not depend upon the equal application of the laws to every person or to all classes of persons in the Territories.

Their personal rights were chiefly protected by the restraints imposed upon those who enact and execute the laws.

To those who are curious to know how we can apply our plan of Territorial government, for instance, to the many islands and tribes of the Philippine Archipelago, I would suggest the inquiry whether we can not make treaties with them as we formerly made treaties with the Indian tribes, or as we now make contracts with their chiefs and headmen, subject to ratification by Congress. This is another feature that is expressly provided for in our original and peculiar system of Territorial governments, which may be very convenient now.

Sixty tribes, on as many islands, many of whom are unfit for our plan of civil government, may be governed somewhat as we have governed the Indians, if that is found to be necessary, under the sovereign authority of the United States, certainly without harm to them and possibly with great advantage to the entire archipelago. I do not commit myself to this plan, but suggest it as being worthy of consideration by Congress.

I am endeavoring to advocate for the present a Territorial government for Puerto Rico on the model of the Territorial government for the Northwestern Territory as nearly as may be advantageous to those people, and will point out some of the powers that were exercised in that government as being useful in Puerto Rico. The governor was required to own 1,000 acres of land in the Territory, and was appointed by the President.

The secretary was appointed by the President and required to own 500 acres of land. Three judges were appointed for life by the President, though it was not so stated in the act, and were each required to own 500 acres of land. Two of the judges, with the governor, were empowered to adopt such laws of the States as may be necessary, etc. The governor was commander in chief of the militia and authorized to appoint all militia officers below the rank of general.

Electors to vote for members of the legislature were to own 200 acres of land. The legislature was to consist of representatives and a council of five members appointed by the President. All bills were to be approved by the governor, who also had power to convene, prorogue, and dissolve the legislature.

Delegates to Congress were to be elected by joint ballot of the two houses.

Then follows a bill of rights.

This bill of rights applies to "inhabitants" of the Territory, and it omits several important rights secured in the Constitution of the United States, in reference to free speech, arrest without warrant based on affidavit, presentment by a grand jury, and the right to bear arms. It thus appears that, in our Territorial governments, Congress is not bound to extend to the inhabitants all the same facilities that the people of the States have for the protection of persons or property. A government is conformable to the Constitution that omits to protect many such rights.

Congress in 1789 levied customs duties on goods imported from North Carolina and Rhode Island into other States, because those States had not ratified the Constitution and were not in the Union, and in 1799 Congress established collection districts in the Northwest Territory, because it was a part of the United States. In Alaska we are collecting duties where no right of local self-government has yet been given to the inhabitants of that Territory.

In dealing with the Indian tribes Congress has exerted powers that seem to be at home nowhere except in some despotic government, such as forbidding trade with them and confining them to reservations under military guard, and denying them the most common rights of citizenship. No one seems to doubt that these persons may be thus treated conformably with the Constitution.

In the case of the Cherokee Indians and other civilized tribes in the Indian country, we granted them, by treaty and by statute, the right of local self-government, under which they have established governments modeled on our State system of government, with written constitutions and all the provisions of a State government of the best class.

In the treaties we provided for their representation in Congress by a Delegate to be chosen by them. Congress, however, never made the provision of law so that they could come here.

But their land system, it seems, was defective and led to great monopolistic abuses, to correct which their power is not adequate, and to remedy this and other evils for which white men are chiefly responsible Congress is now hastening to abolish those governments and to organize in their stead a responsible Territorial government.

All these arbitrary exercises of powers are consistent with the right and duty of Congress to provide for the welfare of this dependent people.

All this is not imperialism, because it is consistent with our republican form of government, and is intended alone for accomplishing the grand result of lifting these people up to a higher plane of civilization, where they can grow to the full stature of citizenship of the United States. The success of the effort has cost us heavily, and its success has at times seemed impossible, but there are results that are very good. Many thousands of Indian families are now living in comfortable homes, on lands owned by them, who twenty years ago were homeless wanderers, living in tepees and subsisting on wild animals, or were pillaging the white people on the frontiers.

In all these years Congress has persisted in taxing Indians without giving them a right to representation, but it has never taxed them unequally, nor has it levied taxes on their productions exported into the States or the other Territories. With all its power to govern, Congress is prohibited from levying duties or taxes that are not uniform throughout the United States. It is upon Congress that the prohibitions rest, in which the people of the Territories have their guarantys of justice and liberty regulated by law.

In the use of doubtful powers and the abuse of those that are clear, the only opening is found for the exercise of imperialistic power that can exist in our form of government. Where Congress indulges in such perversion of the spirit and purpose of the Constitution in order to foster one class at the expense of another, such legislation has the worst motive and the worst form of imperialism.

Expansion can go on to any extent without engendering this vice in legislation. In truth, the widening of the area represented in Congress narrows the power of the monopolists by bringing the few who grow rich with such spoil into contact with the many who suffer in the only forum where they can compel justice to be done through their representatives.

There can be no doubt that the freedom of trade between our States and Territories is the most fruitful source of our growth and prosperity. When our area is extended so as to include within our limits those countries that produce all we need, so as to save vast expenditures in foreign lands and heavy balances of trade against us, the freedom of trade that has so greatly benefited our States and Territories must increase our advantages very greatly without injury to any of our industries. For this reason I am not averse to the extension of our area under the treaty of Paris.

The taxation of the raw products of agriculture for the benefit of the manufacturer is sheer robbery. No object lesson was ever so painfully impressive in proof of this assertion as that which forced Congress, at this session, to return to Puerto Rico the duties on sugar and tobacco that have been collected since that island became our property. This tax was gathered from the producer in the lower price at which he was compelled to sell his productions. In this loss the laborer was forced to share by the diminution of his wages. It has amounted to more than $2,000,000. If this money had been left in their hands we would not be frightened into returning it to them by their clamors for bread. They would have won the fight with the tempest that destroyed their homes and fruit orchards, and we would cease from troubling. As it is we can not return it to the real sufferers. All we can do is to provide means for conducting public works, so that they can be paid for further work, which hunger drives them to perform, leaving their own fields to grow up with weeds.

This may save them from present suffering, but it does not pay them the debt we owe them for the reduced price of what they had already earned. That would have saved them from suffering.

So it is with every exaction upon labor and industry in farms, mines, and forests, that gives to the capitalist and monopolist a profit that is gathered from the toilers, through the exactions of the tax collector.

The taxing power there is employed for such purposes, reaches its hand down into the subsistence of the laborer, and shortens the supply of bread. When it is taken, the staff of life is broken, energy is lost, and hope departs. It is too late, after this despoiling, to make restitution.

In welcoming expansion I also welcome the freedom of trade that gives free markets to all agricultural productions in the wide fields of commerce, where corn, wheat, provisions, and cotton are exchanged for coffee, sugar, and tropical productions without import duties and under our own flag.

I welcome the opportunity at least to reduce, if it can not prevent, the power of the monopolist who uses tariff taxation to despoil labor.

I welcome the expansion that gives to our planters in the South a shorter route for their crops of cotton and to our cotton manufacturers a shorter route of travel for their goods to the 850,000,000 cotton consumers who inhabit the sixteen countries that are called the Orient.

I welcome a new home in the Philippines for such of our colored population as may find there the conditions that they so earnestly desire, under the flag of the United States.

I welcome the new demand for the products of our silver mines, to supply 13,000,000 people with a currency that is indispensable to their prosperity and which we are in duty and honor bound to supply to them.

I welcome a great American mart at Manila, where we will assemble under our flag the products of industry that are now priced and distributed to the Orient under the British flag at Liverpool.

I welcome the opportunity and the duty of extending the power and the influence of the Government of the United States to people who have neither freedom of person nor religion.

I welcome, Mr. President, at a cost which, it seems to me, is infinitely lower than the result we have obtained, that wonderful extension of our power as a Government, which can not be attributed to the wisdom of any man or any Congress or any power in this world; which seems to have come to us unbidden; which came in a way that addressed itself to our attention, under such conditions as that duty bound us to obey the mandate, and we went forward to perform a simple duty of humanity. The result and the reward are the extension and expansion of our power and our influence as a Government to a degree that no one had ever contemplated, that no man had ever marked out in advance, and for which no single individual in this world, not even the President of the United States, can claim credit, for I can not find the man or the government on this earth entitled to the credit of this great expansion. I must look aloft and recognize that it is the hand of God.

Mr. FORAKER. If no Senator desires to speak at this time, I shall be glad to resume the consideration of the proposed amendments offered by the Puerto Rican Committee about which there is no contest. We had progressed with the consideration of the amendments on yesterday until we had reached the bottom of page 19, where it was proposed that an amendment should be made by inserting, in line 23, after the words "subject also"—relating to the granting of franchises—the words "as to railroad, telegraph, and telephone franchises;" but there was objection made by the Senator from Alabama, now the occupant of the chair [Mr. PETTUS], and on that objection it was passed over. In view of the fact that the Senator is in the chair, I will pass that amendment over now and return to it when he is at his seat.

I ask, therefore, the consideration of another amendment, which is proposed on page 21, section 32, to strike out from lines 10, 11, and 12, which relate to the establishment of the district court of the United States for Puerto Rico, the following language: "which shall be attached to, and be a part of, the Second judicial circuit of the United States."

I will say, for the benefit of Senators who may not have the bill before them, that this amendment is to be made to section 32, which provides that Puerto Rico shall constitute a judicial district to be called the district of Puerto Rico, and the words to be stricken out are those which I have read, "which shall be attached to, and be a part of, the Second judicial circuit of the United States," the intention being to make it clear that nothing more is intended by this provision than the establishment of a Territorial court in contradistinction to the establishment of what is termed a constitutional court.

Mr. BACON. I should like to ask the Senator a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. FORAKER. Yes, sir.

Mr. BACON. I wish to ask if the question as to the propriety of that amendment is not very largely dependent upon the other question, as to what kind of a government in its entirety is intended to be erected there? In other words, if it is the purpose to erect a Territorial government, the provision as to the kind of court to be established is one that we can very definitely understand what should be the nature of. On the contrary, if Puerto Rico is not to be a Territory, in the ordinary sense of the term of the same character of government we now have in the Territories of the United States, then the question as to what kind of a court we are to have would largely depend upon what the difference is to be between the Territories as they now exist and the kind of government it is intended to form there.

Mr. FORAKER. In answer to the suggestion of the Senator from Georgia, it occurs to me that it does not make any difference whether it is to be called a Territory or a district or by some other political name, or whether we call it by any name at all. It must be conceded by all that it is not a State, and the view taken by many Senators is that a constitutional court—I mean such a court as is contemplated by the language of the Constitution—can not be provided outside of a State of the Union. If it be outside of a State of the Union, it may be a legislative in contradistinction to a constitutional court. It is thought by some Senators that to attach the United States court of Puerto Rico to the Second judicial circuit of the United States would be to interfere with the system which we have inaugurated and established and pursued in all our legislation with respect to the judiciary. It does not seem to me that it depends at all on what we are to call Puerto Rico.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Ohio a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. FORAKER. I do.

Mr. TILLMAN. I ask the Senator if we did not provide in the Hawaiian bill for the attachment of the circuit established there, or make the Hawaiian court a part of the Eighth judicial circuit on the Pacific coast?

Mr. FORAKER. The ninth judicial circuit.

Mr. TILLMAN. And if so, why is there a difference made between the Puerto Rican court and the Hawaiian court?

Mr. FORAKER. I remember that it was provided in the Hawaiian bill, as it was reported from the committee, that the United States court to be established in Hawaii should be attached to the Ninth judicial circuit. I remember there was some objection to that, but I do not remember now whether that objection prevailed.

Mr. TILLMAN. I never heard the slightest objection to that provision made by anyone on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. FORAKER. If some Senator will inform me as to that, I shall be obliged to him. But whether that provision prevailed or not, it does not necessarily follow that we should make the same provision here. It is a matter about which I did not have any difficulty in my own mind; but inasmuch as it is conceded by everybody that this is a legislative court, it was thought that the same provision ought to be made with respect to this court as to appeals going to the Supreme Court of the United States as is made with regard to all Territorial courts, if I may use that language without being misunderstood, namely, that they should go not by way of some circuit court of appeals, but directly to the Supreme Court of the United States. The other amendments which I have to offer are to that effect—that, being attached to this judicial circuit, they should be like any other Territorial court, a court with the jurisdiction we see fit to give, and that they shall go by appeal to the Supreme Court directly.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield?

Mr. FORAKER. I do.

Mr. SPOONER. I should like to inquire of the Senator whether the provision attaching the district of Puerto Rico to the Second circuit is still in the bill?

Mr. FORAKER. I am just moving to strike out that provision.

Mr. BACON. On what page?

Mr. FORAKER. On page 21. The motion is to amend by striking out from lines 10, 11, and 12 the following language: "Which shall be attached to and be a part of the Second judicial circuit of the United States." It does not seem to me that that affects at all the character of the legislation. Neither does it affect the status of the island of Puerto Rico. All concede that Puerto Rico is not a State of the Union.

Mr. SPOONER. What useful purpose would be subserved by making it a part of one of our judicial circuits if Congress has full power to provide for this right of appeal from the Territorial court?

Mr. FORAKER. None.

Mr. SPOONER. It seems to me to attach it to a circuit is rather a misfit. It would not be claimed that the circuit judges of the United States or the district judges of the United States could sit in that Territorial court, nor could it be claimed that the Territorial judge could sit in the circuit court of appeals or in the constitutional courts of the United States. I have not been able to see what advantage would be gained by that provision, and I hope it will be stricken out.

Mr. FORAKER. It was in recognition of what the Senator from Wisconsin suggests that, when my attention was called to it, I moved to strike it out. The truth is, when I drew this bill I had before me the Hawaiian bill, and I followed that provision without taking any careful thought about it; but as soon as my attention had been called to the fact that it was a court outside of a State of the Union, a court in which the judges of the circuits could not be expected to go and sit, and that it was in accordance with our practice heretofore to have all proceedings taken from those courts to the Supreme Court of the United States direct, I agreed to propose that change.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Ohio will agree with me that that provision was incorporated in the Hawaiian bill upon the theory that we were creating a constitutional court over there.

Mr. FORAKER. Yes.

Mr. SPOONER. Which would make it proper, of course, to make it a part of one of our circuits; yet the Senate struck that out; and I suppose the provision making it a part of the Ninth judicial circuit went out also.

Mr. TILLMAN. No, sir; it did not go out.

Mr. SPOONER. It ought to have gone out if it did not.

Mr. TILLMAN. That is a question. The Senate did not think so, and did not put it out.

Mr. SPOONER. I said I supposed it went out. I was not here when the bill passed.

Mr. FORAKER. I do not remember whether it went out or not. I know that something was said about it in the Senate; but whether it went out or not, it seems to me it ought to have gone out in view of what the Senator from Wisconsin has said; and I think this provision ought to go out of this bill for the same reason. Whether we make Puerto Rico a Territory or whether we make it a district, or any other kind of a political subdivision expressly by name, I think the Senator from Georgia will see, if assured that it has no relation at all to the character of the political subdivision, that it is proper that the words really ought to go out. I do not see how they will do any good there. It seems to me they are a misfit.

Mr. TILLMAN. I will state to the Senator that whether that provision went out of the Hawaiian bill or not can be settled by reading the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. FORAKER. I do.

Mr. TILLMAN. I have in my hand the bill for Hawaii, which passed the Senate and is now pending in the House of Representatives, and in section 88, on page 42, of that bill I find this language:

> Writs of error and appeals from said district court shall be had and allowed to the circuit court of appeals in the Ninth judicial circuit in the same manner as writs of error and appeals are allowed from circuit courts to circuit courts of appeals as provided by law, and the laws of the United States relating to juries and jury trials shall be applicable to said district court.

So it did not go out; and there was no argument here and no objection to it remaining in the bill, and no proposal to put it out.

Mr. FORAKER. My attention had not been called to the question at that time as it has been since. When we came to consider our own bill, which I was in charge of, I gave particular attention to all of the suggestions that I thought were well taken, and I undertook to conform to them, as I would have done in making the original draft of the bill if my attention had been seriously called to it; but, as I said a moment ago, in preparing this bill I had before me the Hawaiian bill. It was sought to there establish what we call a constitutional court, and I saw no objection to making that provision. The truth is that in the committee there was no discussion of it at all or no evolving of any ideas about it, but here on the Senate floor, as I remember, there was something said; yet the real objection to it was not stated, as it occurs to me it ought to have been stated, at that time.

Mr. BACON. What is that objection?

Mr. FORAKER. The objection just made by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER], and which I also made, that a Territory is outside of a State of the Union, and therefore not properly within our judicial system in the sense that the judges of the circuit court would be required to sit there, as they are in other circuits or other district courts.

Mr. TILLMAN. If the Senator will allow me a suggestion, I wish to direct his attention to the fact that the Hawaiian Islands contain only a population of about 140,000, a large number of whom are contract laborers, who are expected to return to Asia as soon as their contracts are out, and it is a very anomalous and certainly an extraordinary proceeding on the part of the Senate, if it shall see fit to do so, to provide a district court, with the right of appeal to the court of appeals on the Pacific slope, for that small and sparsely populated region—that we should provide this kind of judicial machinery for the Hawaiian Islands and then take Puerto Rico, which has a population of eight or nine hundred thousand and a larger commerce than the Hawaiian Islands now have or can have if the same opportunities are given for its development, and make there a different arrangement. I would ask the Senator to explain just why this is proposed to be done.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, in answer to the inquiry of the Senator from South Carolina, I can state that by the provisions of this bill we continue in force and in operation in Puerto Rico all the courts that they now have there in operation. It has been found by experience that they are sufficient to transact all the judicial business of the island. The bill provides, as the Senator will see if he looks at the preceding section, I believe it is, that we continue all the municipal courts, the police courts, and the various district courts, five in number, which are now in operation, and also the supreme court of the island. Then we provide a district court, the one now under consideration, to take the place of what is now known as the United States provisional court.

The only purpose of this is to provide, in recognition of what has been said here as to the propriety of it, that they shall do as they do in the Territorial courts that have what is called United States jurisdiction, go directly to the Supreme Court instead of going to an intermediate court. They have all the judicial machinery they need; all that anybody has suggested. It may be that Hawaii has more courts, some Senators thought it was provided with more courts than it really needed, but that was due, as was explained here, to the fact that Hawaii is a group of islands and the great number of courts provided for those islands were necessary to avoid unreasonable inconvenience to witnesses and suitors in attendance upon the courts. But there is no such difficulty as that in Puerto Rico. We have given them all the courts they have had and all that have been found necessary, and the sole question is whether this court which they now have shall be attached to a judicial circuit or not, and the reason for not so attaching it is one that ought to have prevailed in the Hawaiian case and probably will if attention is called to it in the House, namely, that they should not be attached to a judicial circuit as though it were one of the constitutional courts provided for a State and suitors be required to go through an intermediate court to the Supreme Court, but in their interests they should be allowed to go there directly.

Mr. SPOONER. If the Senator from Ohio will permit me, I do not find in the Hawaiian bill as it passed the House any provision——

Mr. TILLMAN. The House has not yet acted on the bill.

Mr. SPOONER. I mean as it passed the Senate.

Mr. TILLMAN. The bill has passed the Senate and has gone to the House, and the House have simply stricken out all of our bill and substituted all of theirs, which they reported from their committee.

Mr. SPOONER. I made a mistake. I should have said as it passed the Senate.

I do not find in the bill as it passed the Senate a provision attaching the district of Hawaii to the Ninth judicial circuit. While it is not proper, of course, to refer here to the House of Representatives, I will say that in another place, which shall not be mentioned by me, the provision which was in the section when it passed the Senate for a writ of error and appeal to the circuit court of appeals has been stricken out.

Mr. FORAKER. If there is no objection, I shall ask for a vote on it.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator from Ohio has finished I desire to say a word.

Mr. FORAKER. Yes.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, it is exceedingly important that whatever bill shall ultimately be enacted into law shall be harmonious in its provisions. It is exceedingly difficult for us to judge of any proposed amendment now, as to whether or not it will meet that requirement, by reason of the radical changes which are proposed in this bill as contrasted with the bill when first presented to the Senate. The bill as originally introduced provided for a Territorial government, a civil government which should take the place of the present military government, if I may so designate it. There was no very radical difference in principle between the Territorial government which was therein proposed for Puerto Rico and the Territorial governments which have heretofore been erected by Congress for Territories which were not then in a condition to be carved into States.

There was a distinct provision by which the people of that island should take their place as citizens of the United States. They were so designated in the bill. There was a distinct provision by which they should be admitted to the enjoyment, in the main—certainly it contemplated that they should be admitted into the enjoyment—of our liberal institutions. There was an absence of any provision which erected a tariff wall between this island and other parts of the territory subject to the jurisdiction of the United States. There was in it, and still is, so far as any action has yet been taken to change it, a provision for the election of a Delegate, who should take his seat in the other House of Congress in the same way that Delegates from other Territories take their seats.

The amendments which are proposed by the Senator from Ohio while they have not yet been acted upon, show that the purpose is to make an entire change in this scheme. There has already been reported from the committee a change to the effect that there is a tariff wall erected between Puerto Rico and other territory subject to the jurisdiction of the United States. There was on yesterday a proposition by the Senator from Ohio to change the provision of the bill which made all of the inhabitants who should not be subjects of Spain or who should not elect to be subjects of Spain citizens of the United States. The proposition as suggested by the Senator from Ohio yesterday, representing his committee and, so far as I know, his party, is that they shall not be citizens of the United States, but that they shall be citizens of Puerto Rico, entitled to the protection of the United States.

I only suggest this for the purpose of illustrating the changes which are evidently in contemplation and for the purpose of emphasizing what I have already said, that it is impossible to judge what will be in harmony with the general features of this bill until we have had a more definite and comprehensive presentation to the Senate of the particular scheme which it is intended shall characterize and form, if you please, the government which is to be given to these people.

Mr. FORAKER rose.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will pardon me a moment, I have not quite finished.

A court which would be entirely proper for one kind of a Territorial government, a court the relation of which we could well judge of if the Territorial government was to be such as we have heretofore been accustomed to, might be a court utterly unfitted for some other kind of government which is to constitute an entirely new departure in the control of the territories of the United States and be utterly dissimilar and unlike any Territorial government which we have heretofore had.

Therefore I say to my friend the Senator from Ohio that while I have no disposition to embarrass him in the work in which he is now engaged of endeavoring to incorporate such amendments as may not be objected to, I think the question what Federal court shall be in this island is a very important one and one which should be judged and determined after we have been informed more definitely as to what shall be the general nature of the government. I say to the Senator very frankly that if the government is to be such as originally provided for in this bill, I will say if it is to be such a government as I understand the original bill presented by the Senator from his committee provided for, then we may very rightly go forward and determine what kind of court it is to be; but if there are to be radical changes, and if the entire character and complexion of the Territorial government are to be changed, then we ought to know the character and extent of those changes before we are called upon to say what kind of a court it shall be.

Mr. FORAKER. In answer to the remarks of the Senator from Georgia I can only say that the proposed amendment now under consideration has no reference whatever to any contemplated changes in the bill in other respects. It is true that the change I proposed yesterday as to the provision about citizens, whether they should be citizens of the United States or citizens of Puerto Rico, is a debatable proposition; and because it was, we passed it over. But whether that amendment is made or is not made, or whether any other amendment that is proposed or is to be proposed is made or is not made, this amendment ought to be made, because, even if we were to erect a Territorial government out and out, calling it the Territory of Puerto Rico and giving it a Territorial court, this same provision that we propose to strike out ought to go out of the bill.

Now, we do not differ as to the judiciary of Puerto Rico and the judiciary of the Territories in any respect except only this, that in our Territorial form of government we are in the habit of giving both the Federal and local jurisdiction to the same court, one side being the local or the Territorial side and the other the Federal side. We provide as to all such Territorial courts that appeals shall be taken directly to the Supreme Court. Here in Puerto Rico we have made a departure as we did in Hawaii, to this extent, that instead of giving a Federal side to the local court we establish a Federal court that has no local jurisdiction, but a Federal jurisdiction only; and having provided that additional court, as I think it is conceded we have the power to provide, the question is whether or not we shall attach that court to the judicial system of the United States or whether we shall keep it detached, as is the case with all Territorial courts.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from Ohio allow the Chair, before 3 o'clock arrives, to lay before the Senate House bills for reference?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia:

A bill (H. R. 3597) to incorporate the Frederick Douglass Memorial and Historical Association;

A bill (H. R. 7502) to incorporate the Wesley Heights Railway Company of the District of Columbia;

A bill (H. R. 8466) to amend an act entitled "An act in relation to taxes and tax sales in the District of Columbia;"

A bill (H. R. 9047) to incorporate the Washington Telephone Company and to permit it to install, maintain, and operate a telephone plant and exchanges in the District of Columbia; and

A bill (H. R. 9143) to authorize the formation of guaranty companies in the District of Columbia.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the unanimous-consent agreement, the Senate will now proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After one hour and fifty minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

PUERTO RICAN REVENUES.

Mr. ALLISON. I submit a conference report, which I ask may be printed and go over.

The report was read and ordered to be printed, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9080) appropriating, for the benefit and government of Puerto Rico, revenues collected on importations therefrom since its evacuation by Spain, and revenues hereafter collected on such importations under existing law, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1, 4, and 5.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3 and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

Strike out the matter inserted by said amendment and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Now existing and which may hereafter be established in Puerto Rico, and for the aid and relief of the people thereof, and for public education, public works, and other governmental and public purposes therein until otherwise provided by law;" and the Senate agree to the same.

W. B. ALLISON,
EUGENE HALE,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

J. G. CANNON,
W. H. MOODY,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. PETTUS. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, March 21, 1900, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, March 20, 1900.

The House met at 12 o'clock m., and was called to order by the Speaker.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina, for one week, on account of important business.

BRITISH FORTIFICATIONS ON PACIFIC COAST.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I am instructed by the Committee on Military Affairs to report back a resolution with the recommendation that it lie upon the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa, Chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, submits from that committee the following privileged report, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War is hereby directed to inform the House of Representatives as early as possible what fortifications Great Britain is erecting, constructing, and completing along the northern frontier of the United States, especially at Puget Sound and other places on the Pacific Ocean contiguous to the State of Washington and the district of Alaska.

Mr. HULL. I ask the Clerk to read the report of the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred House resolution 175, report the same back to the House, with the recommendation that the resolution be laid upon the table.

Indorsements 1 and 2 of the report of the War Department on this resolution are herewith submitted and made a part of this report.

Mr. HULL. I call for the reading of those two indorsements of the War Department, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

[First indorsement.]

ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE, Washington, March 20, 1900.

Respectfully returned to the Secretary of War.

The information the Department possesses in this and like cases has always been held to be confidential, and for good and sufficient reasons has not been made public. It is remarked, however, that Great Britain, so far as the Department is informed, is in no instance erecting fortifications trespassing upon our rights.

H. C. CORBIN, Adjutant-General.

[Second indorsement.]

WAR DEPARTMENT, March 20, 1900.

Respectfully returned to Hon. J. A. T. HULL, chairman Committee on Military Affairs, House of Representatives, inviting attention to the foregoing report of the Adjutant-General of the Army.

G. D. MEIKLEJOHN, Acting Secretary of War.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, the question is on adopting the report of the committee, that the resolution be laid upon the table.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the report.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Are we to have no debate, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. SULZER. I should like to have twenty minutes on a side.

The SPEAKER. The motion to lay upon the table is not debatable.

Mr. SULZER. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for twenty minutes on a side. This is an important matter.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Then, on the motion to lay on the table, we demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. SULZER. Will the gentleman object to giving me five minutes? I want to explain this resolution to the House.

Mr. HULL. No; I will not object to your having five minutes, if the House wants to hear you.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER] asks unanimous consent to be heard for five minutes upon the report. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, this resolution was introduced by me in good faith and at the suggestion of patriotic people who have more concern about American rights than they have about British interests. There is a popular demand for the information called for in this resolution and the War Department should furnish it to this House, in order that we may be thoroughly informed of the extent of Great Britain's operations on our northern frontier.

There is nothing in the resolution which calls for secret information, and the answer of the Adjutant-General and the Acting Secretary of War in that regard is absolutely untenable. All this resolution does is to ask for such information, not incompatible with the public interest, as the War Department possesses regarding the erection, construction, and completion of British fortifications on Puget Sound and places contiguous to the State of Washington and the district of Alaska. There is no reason why we should not have this information from the War Department, and no one on the Republican side of the House has been able to give any good reason for this adverse report.

It is very strange to me that the Republicans, and especially those on the Committee on Military Affairs, are so sensitive in regard to this resolution, particularly that part of it which refers to Great Britain.

That part of the report of the Adjutant-General to the effect that Great Britain is not infringing on our rights is ridiculous in view of all that is transpiring to-day and which is pretty generally known by the people of this country.

We contend, sir, and the facts justify it, that while Great Britain is pretending to be our friend and is lulling to sleep the Administration, she is secretly and stealthily erecting great fortifications all along our northern frontier that can only mean one thing.

These great fortifications are not being erected because of England's love for America. They are being erected in order to take advantage of us when we least expect it. That is the truth about it.

Great Britain's fortifications at Puget Sound and along our northern frontier menace our Republic, and on the shortest possible notice she will be in a position to destroy the property of our people and lay waste our towns and cities.

It seems to me that the Republican Administration is being humbugged by the ministry of Great Britain. To-day it appears that Congress can not do anything, and does not do anything, without the consent and the approval of Great Britain. Everything the Administration does is apparently dictated from Downing street. England never was and never will be our friend. As Jefferson said, she will never be our friend until we are her master.

This resolution was adversely reported from the Committee on Military Affairs by a strict party vote. Every Democrat voted in favor of the resolution and every Republican voted against it. It is now before this House, and we intend to get the sense of the House by a roll call to ascertain who are the friends of America and who are the friends of Great Britain. The roll call will be a straw showing which way the political wind is blowing.

This resolution should have been reported favorably, and it should be passed by this House. It is important that every member have the information called for in order to intelligently vote on the military-fortifications bill which was reported a few days ago by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

I trust the members of this House will rise above party spirit and vote in favor of American rights against British interests.

The fact that this resolution has been reported adversely, if now sustained, will be evidence to the country that Great Britain has more influence here than the American people. There is a feeling abroad in this land, I regret to say, that the Administration has absolutely, abjectly, and ignominiously surrendered to Great Britain, and that British interests are now paramount to American rights.

The Administration has sacrificed American rights to British interests in Alaska. It has sacrificed American rights to Great Britain in the Hay-Pauncefote treaty regarding the Nicaragua Canal. Great Britain, it seems, dominates the policy of this weak, wobbling, un-American Administration, not only here but elsewhere, and is now seeking to entangle us with her European, African, and Asiatic troubles.

The Administration has aided and helped Great Britain in every way in its power to crush and destroy our two brave little sister Republics in South Africa. [Applause on the Democratic side.] In fact, sir, if it had not been for the undue, collusive, and unfortunate haste of Secretary Hay, after consultation, no doubt, with Lord Pauncefote, and after being told what to do by Downing street, regarding mediation in the South African war, there would have been a concert of European powers offering mediation, demanding a cessation of war, and insisting on peace with the independence of the two Republics in South Africa.

It is high time, in my judgment, for some one who believes in American rights, who believes in American principles, and who believes in and glories in our history of the past to stand up here and tell the truth regarding the humiliating surrender of American rights to British interests by this pro-English Administration.

We will get a vote on this resolution and we will see, and the people of this country will see, who are in favor of America and who are in favor of Great Britain, who are in favor of the Republic and who are in favor of the Empire. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired. The question is on agreeing to the report.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. SULZER. Division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 94, noes 83.

Mr. SULZER and Mr. RICHARDSON. The yeas and nays, Mr. Speaker.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 111, nays 96, answered "present" 28, not voting 115; as follows:

So the report was agreed to; and the resolution was laid on the table.

Mr. BELLAMY. Mr. Speaker, I voted "nay" on this question. I am paired with the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. GILL. He did not vote, and I therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I am paired with the gentleman from California, Mr. METCALF. I withdraw my vote in the negative and answer "present."

Mr. BROMWELL. Mr. Speaker, I am paired with my colleague, Mr. MCDOWELL. I notice that he did not vote, and I therefore withdraw my vote and ask to be marked "present."

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I am paired with the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. ROBINSON, a fact which I overlooked on yesterday. I voted this morning, and withdraw my vote and announce myself "present."

Mr. SHATTUC. Mr. Speaker, I am paired with my colleague, Mr. SHACKLEFORD of Missouri. I answered "present." Had he been here, I should have voted "yea."

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Speaker, I wish to withdraw my vote. I am paired with the gentleman from Texas, Mr. SLAYDEN, and should like to be marked "present."

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I answered "present" when my name was called. I am paired with the gentleman from New Jersey, Mr. FOWLER. Were he present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Speaker, I am paired with the gentleman from New York, Mr. DRISCOLL. I desire to withdraw my vote and answer "present."

Mr. VANDIVER. Mr. Speaker, I wish to know if I am recorded?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is not recorded.

Mr. VANDIVER. I desire to vote in the negative. I did not hear my name when it should have been called, there was so much confusion.

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman in his seat, listening to hear his name, when it should have been called?

Mr. VANDIVER. I was not in my seat. I was nearer to the Clerk's desk than my seat.

The SPEAKER. And listening to hear his name?

Mr. VANDIVER. I intended to be. Temporarily I may not have been listening, but I was standing here for that purpose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman should be listening to hear his name called when it was called in order to vote.

Mr. VANDIVER. That is what I came down here for, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. As the Chair understands the gentleman, he was not giving attention when his name was called.

Mr. VANDIVER. Perhaps just at the moment my attention was directed to something else; but I was here for that purpose and intended to give attention to it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman is not entitled to vote. The theory is that the second roll call is to accommodate gentlemen who failed to vote on the first roll call and that they should be listening to hear when their names are called.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I would like to inquire if my colleague, Mr. CRUMPACKER, voted?

The SPEAKER. He did not.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Then I desire to withdraw my vote and be marked "present."

Mr. MIERS's name was called, and he answered "present."

Mr. NORTON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, when my name was called, I voted "no." I am paired with my colleague, Mr. SOUTHARD, and I thought the pair expired yesterday. I wish to withdraw my vote and answer "present."

Mr. NORTON's name was called, and he answered "present."

Mr. BERRY. Mr. Speaker, I am paired with the gentleman from Vermont, Mr. POWERS. I voted in the negative, and wish to withdraw my vote.

Mr. SPIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I voted "no" on the roll call. I find I am paired with Mr. THOMAS of Iowa. I wish to withdraw my vote and answer "present."

Mr. SPIGHT's name was called, and he answered "present."

Mr. MCCULLOCH. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. TERRY, is absent on account of sickness, and I ask that he be excused.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the gentleman will be excused.

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. Speaker, I understood the Clerk to read my name as paired with somebody. That is a mistake; I am not paired.

The SPEAKER. The pair will be withdrawn.

The following pairs were announced:

Until further notice:

Mr. TAWNEY with Mr. COWHERD.
Mr. EDDY with Mr. ROBB.
Mr. SHOWALTER with Mr. TERRY.
Mr. ADAMS with Mr. SLAYDEN.
Mr. BURLEIGH with Mr. LEVY.
Mr. DRISCOLL with Mr. BURLESON.
Mr. THOMAS of Iowa with Mr. SPIGHT.
Mr. SMITH of Illinois with Mr. GAYLE.
Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine with Mr. BRADLEY.
Mr. TAYLER of Ohio with Mr. FOX.
Mr. GIBSON with Mr. TATE.
Mr. MCCALL with Mr. GAINES.
Mr. CROMER with Mr. GRIFFITH.
Mr. BOREING with Mr. FITZPATRICK.
Mr. WEYMOUTH with Mr. BROUSSARD.
Mr. GROSVENOR with Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana.
Mr. PUGH with Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama.
Mr. LOUDENSLAGER with Mr. STALLINGS.
Mr. DAYTON with Mr. MEYER of Louisiana.
Mr. SHERMAN with Mr. DRIGGS.
Mr. BARNEY with Mr. ALLEN of Mississippi.
Mr. HENRY C. SMITH with Mr. RANSDELL.
Mr. CRUMP with Mr. RYAN of New York.
Mr. BROMWELL with Mr. MCDOWELL.
Mr. GAMBLE with Mr. NOONAN.
Mr. BISHOP with Mr. LESTER.
Mr. GILL with Mr. BELLAMY.
Mr. SOUTHARD with Mr. NORTON of Ohio.
Mr. GROW with Mr. CHANLER.
Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH with Mr. RUCKER, until April 5.
Mr. GROUT with Mr. LIVINGSTON, until March 28.
Mr. LINNEY with Mr. ROBINSON of Nebraska, until March 26.
Mr. FARIS with Mr. ZENOR, until March 26.
Mr. BULL with Mr. BAILEY of Texas, until March 23.
Mr. MAHON with Mr. BREAZEALE, until March 22.
Mr. SULLOWAY with Mr. CATCHINGS, until March 22.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan with Mr. ATWATER, until March 24.
Mr. PEARCE of Missouri with Mr. CROWLEY, until March 24.
Mr. POWERS with Mr. BERRY, until March 24.
Mr. SHATTUC with Mr. SHACKLEFORD, until Thursday next.
Mr. KAHN with Mr. RUPPERT, until March 21.
Mr. KNOX with Mr. NAPHEN, until March 20.

For this day:

Mr. HOPKINS with Mr. MAY.
Mr. FOWLER with Mr. BARTLETT.
Mr. MILLER with Mr. SCUDDER.
Mr. FREER with Mr. SWANSON.
Mr. THROPP with Mr. QUARLES, until March 26.
Mr. STEWART of New York with Mr. UNDERWOOD.
Mr. WEAVER with Mr. MCLAIN.
Mr. RUSSELL with Mr. MCCLELLAN, for Fifty-sixth Congress.
Mr. CRUMPACKER with Mr. MIERS of Indiana, until March 27.
Mr. DICK with Mr. WILLIAM E. WILLIAMS.
Mr. BAKER with Mr. CAMPBELL.
Mr. STEWART of New Jersey with Mr. CLAYTON of New York.
Mr. CUSHMAN with Mr. DINSMORE.
Mr. REEDER with Mr. CRAWFORD.
Mr. COUSINS with Mr. DE ARMOND.
Mr. METCALF with Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky.
Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin with Mr. FOSTER.
Mr. PEARRE with Mr. SALMON.
Mr. ACHESON with Mr. ALLEN of Kentucky.
Mr. O'GRADY with Mr. BENTON.
Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH with Mr. WILSON of South Carolina, during first session Fifty-sixth Congress.
Mr. PACKER of Pennsylvania with Mr. POLK, during session of Fifty-sixth Congress.
Mr. WRIGHT with Mr. HALL, during first session of Fifty-sixth Congress.
Mr. POWERS with Mr. BERRY, from March 17 to March 24, inclusive.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

FRANK H. NEWCOMB.

Mr. CORLISS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution (S. R. 51) recognizing the gallantry of Frank H. Newcomb, commanding the revenue cutter Hudson; of his officers and men; also retiring Capt. Daniel B. Hodgsdon, of the Revenue-Cutter Service, for efficient and meritorious services in command of the cutter Hugh McCulloch, at Manila.

The Clerk read the joint resolution at length.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Is this the same bill that was objected to a few days ago?

Mr. CORLISS. It is; and the gentlemen who objected then, having since examined the bill, are satisfied to allow it to pass. It has been recommended by the President and the Department. If the gentleman needs further information, I will ask the Clerk to read the communication from the President.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. It occurs to me that the thanks of Congress are a matter of too much importance to be extended to every officer of our Army and Navy who may exhibit gallantry in service. We expect all our officers to be gallant; and while I would like to see the merit of these gentlemen recognized, I am opposed to putting on the records of Congress this highest rank of national legislation for every man on account of gallantry in the service; and therefore I object to the consideration of this bill.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. JENKINS addressed the Chair.

Mr. LOUD. I have already yielded an hour for these requests for unanimous consent. I hope the gentleman from Wisconsin will withhold his matter until to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman demand the regular order?

Mr. BELL. I call for the regular order.

POSTAGE ON SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded. The Clerk will read the order fixing the business for to-day.

The Clerk read as follows:

On motion of Mr. LOUD, by unanimous consent, it was ordered that H. R. 6071, "A bill to amend the postal laws relative to second-class matter," be made the special order for Tuesday, March 20, said consideration to be continued until conclusion, but not to extend beyond Thursday, March 22. (Order made March 1.)

Mr. LOUD. I would like at this time to see whether we can not arrange—I do not know with whom we can arrange it, because I do not know who represents the opposition, if opposition there be to this bill—there was no minority report from the committee and at the time the bill passed the committee there was no opposition to it——

Mr. LITTLE. I suggest that my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON], be allowed to control the time on this side of the House.

Mr. LOUD. I should like to ask the gentleman how much time he thinks ought to be occupied in discussing this bill? Three days, it is true, have been set aside to be occupied if gentlemen think we ought to occupy that much time.

Mr. MOON. I think it would be satisfactory to our side to have a final vote about 4 o'clock on Thursday.

Mr. LOUD. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask consent that during to-day and to-morrow and until 2 o'clock on Thursday this bill be considered under the order or rule governing general debate; that at 2 o'clock on Thursday we proceed to consider the bill under the five-minute rule for amendments until 4 o'clock, at which hour the previous question shall be considered as ordered upon the bill and pending amendments, including the committee amendments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California submits the following proposition: That to-day and to-morrow and up to 2 o'clock on Thursday be occupied in general debate on this bill; that at 2 o'clock on Thursday the House proceed to consider the bill under the five-minute rule, subject to amendment, until 4 o'clock the same day, at which time the previous question shall be considered as ordered upon the bill, the committee amendments, and the pending amendments in the House. Is there objection?

Mr. MOON. I suppose it is understood that the time for general debate be equally divided between the two sides, the gentleman from California representing his side of the question and some one on this side the other.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I ask that the gentleman from California control the time in favor of the bill, and my colleague [Mr. MOON] the time against it.

The SPEAKER. It is further asked that the time to be occupied in general debate be controlled on each side, respectively, by the gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD] and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON]. Is there objection?

Mr. RIDGELY. Before consent is granted to this proposition, I wish to suggest to the gentleman in charge of the bill that two hours will hardly give sufficient time for consideration of the bill under the five-minute rule. It very often happens that we lose our chance to offer important amendments by reason of the time for a vote arriving before we have reached that stage in the consideration of the bill. I ask, therefore, that more time be allowed for the consideration of the bill under the five-minute rule.

Mr. LOUD. This is a bill of only four pages. It seems to me we ought to be able to dispose of amendments in two hours. The proposition I have submitted is substantially what was agreed to yesterday by gentlemen representing the other side, and I supposed it would meet with general assent.

Mr. MOON. It will be satisfactory to us to give all of Thursday to the consideration of the bill under the five-minute rule.

Mr. RICHARDSON. It is suggested that we devote to-day and to-morrow to general debate and fix Thursday for consideration of the bill under the five-minute rule.

Mr. LOUD. I consulted yesterday with the gentleman on the other side, and upon an agreement then reached with him and his confreres I have made certain arrangements, one of which was that a particular gentleman was to close this debate on Thursday. Of course it would cause some embarrassment to change the arrangement now.

Mr. MOON. I do not desire to change the agreement if it is satisfactory all around.

Mr. RIDGELY. In view of the statements which have been made, I will not insist on my objection.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Why not take the final vote at 5 o'clock instead of 4.

Mr. LOUD. Well, members do not desire to stay here much after 5 o'clock, and as there might be two and probably at least one roll call, it would keep us here until half past 5 or 6 o'clock. I thought we were consulting the convenience of everyone.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, has the bill been read?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. LOUD (interrupting the reading). I will ask that the further reading of the bill be dispensed with. I do not think anyone will insist upon it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CLARKE of New Hampshire). Unanimous consent is asked by the gentleman from California that the further reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HEPBURN. Will the gentleman have any objection to offering the committee amendments at this time, or at some time during his remarks?

Mr. LOUD. The committee amendments are offered, and will be pending under the unanimous agreements. The committee amendments are contained in the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, my physical condition will prevent me from making the presentation of this bill that I would like to make to the House.

In 1898, after a similar bill had gone down to defeat, I had determined that I would never again present a similar measure to Congress; because members of Congress must understand that the chairman of a committee ordinarily has work enough to do without taking up measures that Congress is not disposed to consider favorably.

When I returned to Congress in December, I met the old members of the House, with many of whom I had associated for years; and when they approached me, the first question that was asked was, "Are you not going to bring up this bill again before Congress? I voted against it last time, but voted under a misapprehension of the conditions contained in the measure."

I do not believe I exaggerate when I say that at least 200 members of this body on one side and the other urged me from day to day to bring up this proposition. That is one of the reasons why it is up here before you again. This measure, you know, in a much more radical form than that in which it is presented to-day, passed in 1897, and in a modified form was defeated in 1898. Now, the author of this bill has no pride in its passage. The author of the bill did not even draw it, which may seem a peculiar statement. The measure was drawn in the Post-Office Department about the year 1894 or 1895, I forget which, by the then Third Assistant Postmaster-General. He was at that time considered to be a pretty good Democrat. I do not know what he is now. He drew a bill covering, as he said, some of the evils, or remedying some of the evils, that then confronted the Department. The only part in the authorship of this bill I ever had was to modify very materially the bill which he had drawn.

Now, as illustrative of the sentiment in Congress, let me revert again to the many members of this House who urged me to bring this measure up. Let me revert to the conditions existing in the committee, that there was substantially no division, for if there had been a division for a moment, Mr. Speaker, I still insist that there should have been a minority report. I do not think I am betraying any of the secrets of the committee when I say there was but one vote cast against it when it was finally reported.

Mr. LITTLE. I hope my friend will do me the justice to say that I was not present.

Mr. LOUD. I will state the full facts if the gentleman desires to have me do so. I will give the gentleman credit to say that he was not present at the time the bill was reported. There was no opposition to this bill, Mr. Speaker, sixty days ago. There was hardly a member on the floor of the House who had given the matter any consideration who did not believe some legislation of this character should be adopted, I think. We had a hearing before the committee, and heard only the opponents of the bill. It is a fact, however, that after one day had been spent in hearing the opponents to the bill, the committee, without any apparent division, immediately after hearing only the opposition, ordered this bill reported.

Since that time a concerted fight has been made against the passage of this bill. I suppose every member upon the floor has received letters and protests in one form or another from his constituents against the passage of this bill, and while it may be an unfortunate thing to discredit a man's intelligence or his sincerity, I yet venture the assertion that not one man or woman in fifty who has protested against this bill has the slightest conception of its contents.

There was organized in this city a body, self-assumed, styling themselves a committee of publishers, not even deigning to give their names, and from that organization emanated all the circulars that have gone out broadcast over the land. The average editor of a country publication has accepted it as a fact that because there is a self-assumed body styling themselves a committee of publishers in the city of Washington, near the seat of government, that have informed them that this bill is prejudicial to their interests, they think that this committee are here and can determine, and that it is good policy to follow them.

Now let us see who the committee of publishers are. One of them is Mr. John L. Elderkin, representing the Robert Bonner Sons, of New York, a firm whose heart no doubt is constantly bleeding for the poor country publisher. Connected with him at times, but not here all of the time, has been one Patrick Farrelly, the manager of the American News Company, and the third member of this committee representing the great publishing interest of the country is one Orville J. Victor, at one time a book dealer or publisher, now, I believe, suffering from the results of the misfortunes that sometimes overtake men in their lives, and he is here representing somebody opposing this bill. Now, there is nobody else. No one else excepting these three men; one representing this poor American News Company, and others who are representing publishers of books.

How many of you have had protests? I shall not deal with them, except one. It is a sample of the others. This committee of publishers have the faculty of manufacturing petitions to fit every man's case. Oh, their hearts bleed as much for the country apothecary as it does for the newspaper publisher, and they weep as well for the downtrodden colleges of the country. But here is the proposition from one F. M. Lupton. Propositions of this kind were made in 1898. And let me say that if what I hear is true, while they made many propositions to the people of this country, they did not fulfill the propositions, or, in other words, keep the contract. I hope that they will in this case, however, fulfill the compact they have entered into with the people who have been gulled by this circular. They say:

> We inclose a petition which we respectfully ask you to first sign yourself and then circulate among your neighbors and friends, asking them to sign also. When you have secured as many signatures as you conveniently can, fill in at the head of the petition the name of the member of Congress from your district and mail the petition to him, addressed as follows: "Hon. ——, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C."
> By doing this you will aid very much in defeating this objectionable bill, which, should it pass, will drive out of the mails all cheap books and seriously curtail the circulation of periodicals, making reading matter much more costly and less plentiful than it now is. If you will secure not less than ten signatures to the petition and send the same to your Congressman as above directed, and will also sign and return to us the blank at the bottom of the next page stating that you have done as requested, we will, to pay you for your trouble, send you four of our best 25-cent books (value, $1 for the four), each containing a complete novel.

Now, in some instances the poor boy or girl, tempted by this offer, in his eagerness to get 10 signatures to their petition, has torn off the certificate and sent it to the member of Congress, and the petition has been lost in the office of Mr. Lupton in New York. Now, here is a sample petition. I am not an expert on handwriting, but there is a deliberate fraud upon Mr. F. M. Lupton, because one man signed every name attached to that petition. I have many more of the same character in the committee room. Every man who can read can see the evident fact that while the man who wrote those signatures did attempt to disguise the handwriting in certain instances, he never will make a success as a forger.

There are many other petitions in the room which contain the alleged signatures of members of one family. We will say their name is Jones because it is not Jones. We have petitions signed by 11 Jones', evidently the grandfather and the grandmother, the father and mother, the brothers and sisters. Why, what a temptation to the young boy and girl in this country to say to them that simply by getting 10 signatures to a petition of that character and sending it to this man they can receive as a reward four nice books worth $1.

I would not touch upon this matter, but every morning as I come to the Capitol I am met by members of Congress, who say, "My heavens, LOUD, it is getting pretty hot; I am getting a hundred letters a day; my mail is flooded with petitions; and I do not know whether I can stand it or not." Now, that comes out of petitions of this character. I remember the Iowa delegation, as an illustration, considered, I believe, the ablest delegation that ever occupied seats upon the floor of this House, containing more members of ability and more orators than this body ever had before from any one State in the country or any five States. [Applause.]

The president of the University of Iowa—no doubt you have had a letter from him—protested most earnestly against the Loud bill. He sent this book down here and said that if that bill passes, it will substantially throw the "University of Iowa" out of existence. Why, look at it. It is a beautiful publication. Under that act, he says, "We will not be permitted to mail it at the pound rate." These things come up here by the hundreds; and if I had time enough to correspond with every man who has corresponded with a member of Congress, there would be no opposition to this bill. That publication never was admitted as second-class matter.

I have received a letter from the president of the Stanford University, of my own State, in which he says: "Pass the law, and it will deny us the right to the United States mail that every other citizen has." Why, they send these circulars out to these colleges and say we are going to close the mails against the colleges. I wrote back to the Stanford University asking what amount they mailed under the second-class privileges. They replied they did not know what class they sent out, but that they sent out the annual catalogues. You can not mail the annual catalogue of a college under the second-class privilege. There is another college in Iowa that I might refer to if I had the time. I have gone over all of them. I except the fellow that issued this.

Now, here is a typical publication of an incorporated institution of learning. I have got a hundred of them in my committee room. I will not take the time of the House in referring to them. There is the publication and there is another one, emanations from so-called incorporated institutions of learning, business colleges. They mail them by millions. When I was in Chicago a year ago last fall a railway mail clerk came to me to talk about this business-college mail. He said: "Why, on my last run up to St. Paul 5,000,000 of these were put on the train at Milwaukee, from La Crosse and other places. Why," he said, "it paralyzes us, and we have to work all this mail out before we can get away from the car." It delays the first-class matter, because it is mixed all up with it. While I am willing to admit that some incorporated institutions of learning use the mail for legitimate publications, there is not one in a thousand of that character as compared with the publications of this character.

Mr. STEELE. Will the gentleman express an opinion as to this publication?

Mr. LOUD. Well, it looks pretty nice. Any gentleman can examine it. It is a publication, I suppose, of a business college.

Mr. STEELE. It is a normal college—a teacher's college.

Mr. LOUD. There is nothing in it but the advertisement of the college.

Mr. STEELE. It has the advertisement of the college.

Mr. LOUD. Now do you know what privilege these institutions were given? I am surprised to know that members of Congress do not investigate this matter more fully. Do you know the privilege that they have, a greater privilege than any other publisher of the country. Every other publisher must get a list of subscribers. The very essence of the second-class law was that no publication should be entitled to the special privilege or special subsidy, if you please, unless it shall have a list of subscribers. The very basic principle was that nothing should be entitled to that privilege unless it commended itself so favorably to the people of this country that they were ready and willing to pay an amount of money for that publication.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Will my friend explain how it happens that this abuse arose, and whether it can not be corrected by an order of the Postmaster-General?

Mr. LOUD. Just one further thought about these publications. They do not have a list of subscribers, and these publications, designated as college publications, are issued in hundreds or millions, and there is not a man in the world who would pay any more for them than as old paper. They have the use of that privilege under the law, and the Postmaster-General can not stop it, because in your legislation in 1894, by a special act, you permitted publications by incorporated institutions of learning to circulate through the mails without a list of subscribers.

Mr. DALZELL. Before the gentleman leaves that, I would like to ask him as of what class do these college publications go through the mails under the existing law?

Mr. LOUD. You now refer to this publication of the University of Iowa on psychology, and I answer, the third class.

Mr. DALZELL. That is not affected by your bill?

Mr. LOUD. Not at all.

Mr. DOLLIVER. With the exception of the college advertisements to which the gentleman has referred, I speak of the abuse of sending these books and serials through the mails and this tonnage. Why can not that abuse be corrected by an order of the Postmaster-General?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Under existing law?

Mr. DOLLIVER. Yes.

Mr. LOUD. Because the Assistant Attorney-General, who is the law officer of the Post-Office Department, in 1885 or 1886 determined that question. Now, let me give you an illustration. There is a great deal of talk about the return privilege. There never was a provision of law even to this day that permitted the return at pound rates. The statute only permits a publisher to send his publication to a subscriber or news agent, and permits the news agent to send to a subscriber or another news agent.

In 1885 a wise Assistant Attorney-General had this question referred to him, and he held that a news agent who got these publications had the right to send to another agent, under the law; hence this very wise Attorney-General said that after it had gone from A to B, another agent, that A immediately became another agent and it could return to him. Why, A never could become another agent; he was an original agent to which this publication was sent, and another agent simply meant another one; and he never could occupy that position. Yet, a wise Attorney-General said so.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Can not that decision be corrected now?

Mr. LOUD. Well, I may say to you that the Post-Office Department ever since the year 1886 has been appealing to Congress to pass some legislation. I suppose if the eminent gentleman from the State of Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER], a man that has great strength of character, were to become Postmaster-General, he would hesitate a long time before he would overturn the precedents of half a century, and I assume the gentleman to be as strong as the average man. The Department has asked for legislation upon this question ever since that period.

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. LOUD. I can not yield now. They appealed to Congress year after year for some expression from you. Once the House passed this bill, and the last time it was considered and was defeated. Now, then, what is it confronting this country? You have got to the point where you can not stand still; you have got to go ahead or you have got to go backward. Before the Post-Office Committee to-day, and to many members of this House, every library association in this country, having organized into one head, is appealing and now demanding of Congress the privilege of sending its books through the mail at second-class rates.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Will the gentleman permit me a question?

Mr. LOUD. No; I will yield to the gentleman later. Let me say to you that the books of libraries are a matter of the highest education. No man can deny that. They are more entitled in equity to the favorable consideration of our Government than anything now admitted.

Now, then, you have either got to go backward or you have got to go forward. There are many things now not entitled to this consideration that you either must give it to or cut off some privileges that you have extended. Let us see whether we can afford to do it or not. I know with the average man that does not cut much of a figure, but let me say, without fear of successful contradiction, that the Government to-day is losing at least $45,000,000 a year on the transportation and handling of its second-class mail matter. Unless you restrict and take out some of this matter that is not entitled to favorable consideration you must go ahead.

Take the books of all the libraries in this country, and your amount will swell from forty-five million to one hundred million. Take the advertising of every business house in this country, as much entitled to favorable consideration as this advertising sheet, because it is nothing else than advertising, and if you shall permit this man—because after the act of 1894, previous to that being a man, he became a corporation—if this man shall be entitled to send this advertising at the rate of 1 cent a pound, thirty-five to a pound, costing 25 cents a pound to handle it at least, without the question of transportation, if these people are to have this privilege, then you must in equity concede it to every man in the country.

What would it cost? Let me say at least $250,000,000 a year more than you shall receive from it. Now, do you want to go ahead or do you want to stop? I have no interest in this matter more than you. I am chairman of the Post-Office Committee, and have perhaps been a willing subject to be used as a buffer to try and keep the expenditures down to as low a figure as possible. There is pending before that committee to-day—and I could picture the average members of this House jumping over one another to vote for them—bills which involve an increased expenditure of more than $10,000,000 a year for increase of salary alone.

Now, I occupy that unfortunate position. As chairman of that committee, the direct representative of the Post-Office Department, let me say that every Postmaster-General since John Wanamaker has recommended this or some more radical measure; and two Presidents of the United States, one a Democrat and one a Republican, have thought it of sufficient importance to recommend it in their messages to Congress.

Now, it is for you to determine. I know that for a gentleman who has a college of this character in his district it is a hard matter to vote against such legislation as will preclude that college, but a member of the House of Representatives is sworn to do his duty to the whole people and not to one. There is not a man in this country but what would ask and gladly receive a special favor from Congress. Now, the favor that this man gets must be paid for by taxation. The $45,000,000 a year that we lose on the transportation of this second-class matter must be made up by taxation from every man, woman, and child in the United States.

In the minds of many people there is hope for 1-cent postage. Let me give expression to the thought, after careful investigation, and it will be borne out by another gentleman on the floor who has made the subject a study for many years, that 1-cent postage can never come to this country until every article of matter that is put into the mail pays at least its cost. Now, this National Board of Trade that is sending circulars all over the country in their statement say that if you cut the railroad mail pay down a little you will get 1-cent postage. Let me say that 1-cent postage to-day would mean the taking out of the revenues of nearly $40,000,000 a year. And, unfortunately, there is not money enough in railroad transportation to meet it.

I have said much more than I desired or anticipated when I came to my seat this morning.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. LOUD. Let me express one thought more and then I will yield for any question.

If I had had the time and the strength I could have relieved the membership of this House from much embarrassment that confronts them to-day. In 1896, when a bill similar to this was up for consideration before the House, I put myself for more than a year in communication with the commercial interests of this country.

Perhaps I might say that I opened a little bureau of my own extending its business throughout the country. And at that time came back the responses from the great interests of this country to the extent of more than ten millions of men, who had carefully investigated this question for one year and who at that time gave expression to their thought. Ten millions of the citizens of this country prayed that Congress might enact some legislation that would relieve us from this heavy burden. I have not the strength now to engage in such work; I have too many other things to do and to think of.

These people who are financially interested—this committee of publishers I am speaking of—have circularized the country. There is no expression here for this bill, because no expression has been asked. But let me tell you that the sentiment of the great people of this country is in favor, not alone of the bill that is presented here, but if this question be ever taken to them they will express their sentiment that every man who uses the postal service should pay his proportionate share of the expense.

A friend of mine said to me the other day: "I would like to vote for this bill, but my convention is about to come off and I am a little bit afraid. I wish it came on a week later; I wish we could vote on this bill next week." Let me say, Mr. Speaker, there is not a member on the floor of this House that should not welcome this question. If any man desires to make it an issue in the campaign, it is one that the Representative should welcome, for the great American people, you will find, will respond to the right when they know what the right is. The great mass of the people do not look to the interests of any one individual; the great mass of the people are interested in equity to all and special privileges to none.

Now I will yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER] for his question.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I would like to ask the gentleman a question or two, not as an enemy of the bill, because I have followed the gentleman's counsel about this bill in two or three Congresses and voted for it. But I have desired to know what effect upon the newsdealers throughout the United States this bill is calculated to have, in the matter especially of returning their unsold periodicals and newspapers.

Mr. LOUD. Well, Mr. Speaker, I did not suppose there was any considerable sentiment in this country in favor of protecting the interests of the great news companies at the expense of the United States Government, and hence I have never regarded this as a serious problem. Let me say, however, that this bill will put the news agents upon exactly the same footing with the publisher to-day. By the decision of the Assistant Attorney-General the news agent was given a privilege above the publisher.

How or what the motives were I can not tell, but when this decision came it put the publishers of this country at the mercy of the news dealers, because in dealing with the news agents they can get their returns at a lower rate in an indirect way, but they can not get them themselves. The publisher of this country, if he desires to have his publications returned to him, must pay 4 cents a pound; but if he deals with the news agent he can get them back for about 1½ cents a pound. The news agent makes a profit out of the beneficence of this great Government of ours. That is to say, the news agent charges a cent to send the matter out and a cent to bring it back, and when he comes to settle with the publisher he charges 3 cents, making quite a respectable profit for doing this business.

Mr. BELL. Is it not contended, and do not the hearings before your committee show, that in sending this literature to the news agent it is sent in quantities, saving an expense of at least 25 per cent in transportation and handling?

Mr. LOUD. I am very glad the gentleman asks me that question, because it is true that such is the case when they use express or freight. Let me tell you now that the Government gets none of this matter where the hauling might be profitable to it. When an individual copy of a book or publication is sent from New York to the interior of Pennsylvania the mails must be used; but 50 pounds of any publication sent to the city of Chicago or St. Louis does not reach the mails at all.

Mr. BELL. Now, then——

Mr. LOUD. Let me finish my remark. Now, it is possible that if the Government had a monopoly of this business it could make a profit out of the large package business—that is, where a carload or trainload of matter goes to Chicago from New York City it could get the transportation from a railroad company at 15 cents a hundred pounds. These very men utilize that privilege. When they send out an amount exceeding 20 or 25 pounds within a radius of 1,000 or 1,200 miles they do not bother the Post-Office Department, because they can do better somewhere else, because the matter does not require any handling. Now, that matter does not require any handling.

Mr. BELL. You do not confine yourself to my question.

Mr. LOUD. Well, probably I did not understand you.

Mr. BELL. In the hearings before your committee witnesses connected with that business swore that when these copies were sent to a news dealer the average number was about 25 in one package, and it saved the handling of 25 separate pieces of mail, and therefore was a great saving.

Now, another thing. I want to ask if this was not shown before that committee, that in transporting these publications, for instance, from the city of New York to the city of Chicago, generally the matter would be sent by express between New York and Chicago and that the short hauls went by mail? For instance, they went from New York to Chicago by express, for distribution from Chicago, and then when the matter was sent to Peoria and Bloomington and other near by points it was sent by mail.

Mr. LOUD. I do not remember any such showing as that before the committee.

Mr. BELL. It is published as a part of the evidence.

Mr. LOUD. Of course, this must be the fact, that where they can not transport this matter more cheaply or as cheaply by freight or express they transport it in the mail. Now, that is a fundamental fact, and that is all there is about it.

Mr. BELL. These men showed that the transportation by mail for these short distances was retail and not the wholesale.

Mr. LOUD. Let me say to the gentleman that Mr. Farrelly before our committee testified that the news companies handled in round numbers about 20,000 tons of matter.

Mr. BELL. Yes.

Mr. LOUD. He gave about 11,000 tons as going by freight and express and about 9,000 tons going by mail.

Mr. BELL. The short distances being covered by mail.

Mr. BINGHAM. Oh, no; the long distances.

Mr. LOUD. No; Mr. Farrelly testified that within the thousand-mile limit they sent by freight or express.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Is it not a fact that the testimony before us showed that the mail got the long and unprofitable hauls and that the express and freight companies got the short and profitable hauls?

Mr. BINGHAM. Why, certainly.

Mr. LOUD. There can not be any doubt about that.

Mr. BELL. There is unquestionably a dispute about that.

Mr. LOUD. But there can not be any doubt about the fact.

Mr. BINGHAM. It is a simple business proposition.

Mr. LOUD. It is a plain business proposition.

Mr. BELL. Will you allow me to ask you one more question?

Mr. LOUD. Yes, I will.

Mr. BELL. The distinction that the news companies drew was this. Of course if they were going to send a lot of mail across the continent they would undoubtedly send that by mail, but as a general proposition they say that where the haul was midway, for instance, it would be by express, and then they would distribute from that point and use the mails for all the encircling short distances.

Mr. BINGHAM. Oh, no.
Mr. LOUD. That is not true, permit me to say to the gentleman.
Mr. BELL. The man swore that it was true.
Mr. LOUD. But it is not true, and can not be true, as a business proposition. That is self-evident.
Mr. DALZELL. The man who swore to that thing has a queer idea of business.
Mr. LOUD. They only send by mail for the short distances where the packages are 1 or 2 pound packages, and of course no express company or anybody else will handle packages of that character at the rate of a cent a pound. No one in the world could do it and live except the United States Government, and then only because we are a patient, long-suffering people.
Mr. BINGHAM. If the gentleman will permit me——
Mr. LOUD. Certainly.
Mr. BINGHAM. I was out of the Hall during the earlier part of the gentleman's statement. I presume the Department have furnished the gentleman the figures upon which they base their estimate as to what the saving would be if this legislation is enacted into law. Second-class matter now carried is excluded, which would be excluded under this bill. I should like to ask the gentleman what is the estimate of the Department as to the benefit in dollars and cents to the Department?
Mr. LOUD. Well, Mr. Speaker, if anybody has ever made an estimate I am perfectly willing that he shall father the estimate. I can not be brought into that business, because it is merely a wild guess.
Mr. BINGHAM. I wanted to know if the Department had made such an estimate.
Mr. LOUD. The present Postmaster-General in his report, which I suppose the gentleman has read, and who has suggested some legislation to remedy the evil, estimates that it would save $20,000,000 a year.
Mr. BINGHAM. That is what I am coming to. Now, does the bill do that?
Mr. LOUD. I will say that this bill goes further than the present Postmaster-General at first suggested. Now, you can not get me to say anything more.
Mr. BINGHAM. I merely wanted to get the information.
Mr. LOUD. I will not enter the field of prophecy.
Mr. BINGHAM. I understand the statement has been made. The statement has been sent to me, in a petition by the Travelers' Association, that if this proposed legislation is enacted into law $20,000,000 a year will be saved in the administration of the Post-Office Department. I merely wanted to know if that had the authorization of the gentleman; and if so, upon what basis that conclusion is reached.
Mr. LOUD. I do not know anything about it; neither is there a man under the sun who can do more than make an estimate. The deficiency and the saving is merely a secondary matter with me. I hold that this class of matter which this bill proposes to exclude is not entitled in any way to be subsidized at the expense of the people of this country, and I do not care anything about deficiencies or how much it will save. It will save something.
Mr. BINGHAM. Oh, yes.
Mr. LOUD. It will save something.
Mr. BINGHAM. Then the gentleman has made no estimate?
Mr. LOUD. I can not make any estimate.
Mr. OLMSTED. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?
The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from California yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?
Mr. LOUD. Yes.
Mr. OLMSTED. I should like to ask the gentleman whether, in his judgment, the letter postage of the country is or is not profitable to the Government?
Mr. LOUD. Why, I will answer the gentleman by saying that out of about $95,000,000 of postal revenues about seventy or seventy-five million dollars comes from less than one-tenth of the mail carried, and that is first-class matter.
Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. And the first-class matter pays eighty-five or ninety times as much as this matter.
Mr. OLMSTED. The next question which I wish to ask the gentleman is suggested by a letter which I have received from a constituent who publishes a small periodical in my district which he thinks would be excluded, or which he did think two years ago would be excluded, by this or a similar bill. He said that one issue of his little periodical on which he paid the small postage of the second-class rate brought in to him letters which, together with his replies, yielded the Government over $100 in letter postage; and I wanted to ask the gentleman whether he did or did not think that the abuse, if you please to call it that, of these second-class rates, did not nevertheless result in a great increase in the letter postage which constitutes the most profitable revenue of the Post-Office Department?
Mr. LOUD. Well, I will say that that is the species of argument——
Mr. OLMSTED. It is not an argument; it is a question.
Mr. LOUD. I say that is the species of argument that will be presented on the floor of this House. I am one of those who believe that business pursues its ordinary and normal course; that if the Bungtown Journal shall not bring quite as many letters back to it, as an illustration, why, some other place will. That is all. There is no dispute that you are forcing and overdoing business by reason of the circulation of matter of this character.
Mr. OLMSTED. It may increase the postal receipts from first-class matter.
Mr. LOUD. That is one of those unknown fields that I do not care to investigate. I know that there are legitimate publications enough in this country now to meet the wants and demands of the people, which this bill will in no way touch or harm.
Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Will the gentleman explain the effect of this bill on the newspapers, if any?
Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. The gentleman has not referred to the newspaper press. In view of the numerous misrepresentations of this bill, I should like to ask the gentleman if this bill in any way affects the metropolitan or country newspapers of the whole country except by the curtailment of the sample privilege?
Mr. LOUD. That is all.
Mr. MOODY of Massachusttts. Is there any cutting off of lists of exchanges or any change in the law in any way, except to reduce their sample-copy privilege?
Mr. LOUD. None whatever. And I want to say one word with reference to exchanges. Several gentlemen have urged that this would cut off exchanges. There is no warrant of law now for exchanges except by construction of the Department. There is not a word in the statute on the subject.
Mr. RIDGELY. Will the gentleman permit a question?
Mr. LOUD. Excuse me. I can not answer one question until I have finished answering another.
Mr. RIDGELY. It bears on your statement.
Mr. LOUD. Well, wait until I answer this question. There is not a word or line in the statute to-day that permits exchanges. Somebody says to me that this bill cuts them off. We do not touch that question at all. There is no law for it now and we do not make any law for it. It is based on a construction by the Post-Office Department and treated as a subscription. John Smith, publisher of one paper, exchanges with William Jones, the publisher of another paper, and the Post-Office Department have held that that was value received, and I suppose they will hold the same if this bill passes, in view of the fact that it does not in any way touch that question, either directly or by implication.
Now, then, I feel that I must close, and I will try to explain, as briefly as I can, what this bill does; and it does very little.
Mr. RIDGELY. Will the gentleman now yield to me for a question?
Mr. LOUD. I yield to the gentleman.
Mr. RIDGELY. I understand the gentleman to state that the bill in no way affects the provision respecting newspapers, except that it does reduce the number of sample copies. Does not the bill permit a ruling that would deny the newspaper the privilege of circulating a reprint, in case it should have a demand for more than the regular number?
Mr. LOUD. Let me say to the gentleman that the statute now is as emphatic as it can possibly be drawn by human mind—absolutely prohibits it—and we do not touch the question in this bill. It is a subject we do not touch.
Mr. MORRIS. I wish to ask the gentleman a question, and in asking the question I will state to him that I voted for his bill last year and I want to vote for it this year. I hold in my hand a communication from one of my constituents which I think is based upon misinformation, and I ask this question so that the chairman of the committee may give the great authority of his name to the statement which will be made in regard to it. Here is a letter that is from a president of a university.
Mr. LOUD. The gentleman is not going to read all that letter?
Mr. MORRIS. No; I am going to read enough of it for you to answer the question, and if you will answer it it will satisfy——
Mr. LOUD. I will say that the gentleman presented that letter to me, and I asked him if he would possess his soul in patience until I should read that letter I would then attempt to answer it.
Mr. MORRIS. If the gentleman prefers it, I will withhold it for the present.
Mr. LOUD. I do prefer it, because I can not answer every ingenuous letter which is sent to a member of Congress. I do not know what the motives are. I can not tell until I have time to digest that letter.
Mr. MORRIS. I will simply state to the gentleman that this letter is prompted possibly by some misinformation which has been given to the writer, and I want the gentleman to correct that possible misinformation.

Mr. LOUD. I have no doubt about that.

Mr. BINGHAM. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him one question on a matter which forms part of the report, in order to get a knowledge as to how he reaches the conclusion as to the money saving to the Government that is made in regard to this second-class matter? Postmaster-General Smith says:

> For this costly abuse, which drags on the Department and weighs down the service, trammels its power and means of effective advancement in every direction. It involves a sheer wanton waste of $20,000,000 or upward a year.

Do I understand the gentleman in charge of the bill that it involves this saving to the Government of twenty millions? Has he made any investigations as to how that conclusion has been reached? I will say to the gentleman that I have sent to the Department in the past three days inquiries about the matter, but the Postmaster-General did not get back until to-day. I want to know how he reaches that conclusion as to the money phase of the question.

Mr. LOUD. I want to say, in all kindness to the gentleman—and he knows that I love him—that I never inquired, and do not care.

Mr. BINGHAM. It is a matter that the House cares about.

Mr. LOUD. That is a presentation of the Postmaster-General, and my opinion as to how he reached that conclusion would have no significance.

Mr. BINGHAM. It would possibly enlighten the House.

Mr. LOUD. I never would have reached that conclusion myself. It is a question that any man would have to guess at.

Mr. BINGHAM. He puts it in round figures.

Mr. LOUD. He is the Postmaster-General and he is not the man you are asking the question of. I am not responsible for him. I think probably he has a great deal better knowledge of the matter than I.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Can you state how this saving will be brought about?

Mr. LOUD. I can do that, if I ever can get down to my bill.

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question for information?

Mr. LOUD. Certainly.

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. I want to know how this bill affects publications made by colleges, newspapers edited by colleges and sent out for the dissemination of knowledge as to the college, and also touching historical societies? Why is it that in your fourth section you make a certain arrangement permitting benevolent associations and other institutions to have the benefit of second-class matter and exclude colleges? I simply ask for information.

Mr. LOUD. I will say to the gentleman that I went over this college business——

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. I asked you at the time, and you would not hear me.

Mr. LOUD (continuing). I went over this subject, except one question he propounded.

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. Will you allow me to go a little further? I want to say that the State of Mississippi has appropriated $2,000 for the issuance of bulletins from the historical society, and under this bill they are precluded from the mail as second-class matter, as are college papers that are denied the privilege.

Mr. LOUD. The gentleman asks why we struck this off and permitted the fraternal society to still continue to send. Now, I will say to the gentleman that we permit the publication of business colleges to retain the privilege that other publications in the country have.

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. Under what section?

Mr. LOUD. There is a general law that governs publications, that it shall conform to certain requirements. Every publication in the country except these people are compelled to have a list of subscribers, and they are exempt. We propose in the bill to remove them from the special class, and if they publish a publication that any man, woman, or child desires to purchase or pay for at a nominal rate, for as little as 25 cents per year, if they think enough of it to pay that, they shall be entitled to the pound-rate privilege, and if it is circulated in the county to circulate without paying a cent.

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. These colleges do not have subscribers; the publications are sent out for the purpose of disseminating educational literature and building up the institution.

Mr. LOUD. Does the gentleman assume that the publication is sent out as an educational publication?

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. Yes; but I am talking about institutions of learning.

Mr. LOUD. Has the gentleman ever investigated the question to see what 90 per cent of the matter is that is sent out from these institutions?

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. I have not investigated it only as to my own college, and that it is for the purpose of building up the institution. I do not understand why they are excluded from the mails when the benevolent associations and trade unions are permitted to go in.

Mr. LOUD. If the gentleman will permit me, I will answer that question now. I have tried to answer the first part of it. I do not believe that the advertisements of even a college are entitled to be subsidized by the United States Government. The gentleman asks me, and I have answered why I want to exclude those. He asked me why the bill admits the fraternal society. If I had my way, I would not admit the publications of the fraternal society. But the fraternal society now is paid for, but not strictly under the law applying to other papers.

Let me illustrate to the gentleman. I see that these people say in their circulars that the fraternal societies will become great advertising papers. Let me say that there is not a fraternal society in the United States that can so far forget the object for which they are organized as to depart from the legitimate purpose and principles they enunciate. Every member of a fraternal society pays his dues into the lodge, and they must have an organization under the lodge system. Every lodge pays its dues to the grand lodge, and every fraternal society in this country avails itself of this privilege, through its grand lodge, to subscribe for this paper, and then it is sent to each and every member of the society. And thus, in an indirect manner, it is a subscription.

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. You have not explained why you admit trade unions and prohibit schools and colleges which offer to disseminate knowledge and in furtherance of education.

Mr. LOUD. Then I am afraid, Mr. Speaker, I will have to give it up. I have given the explanation of fraternal societies.

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. The boys in college all pay their expenses, so far as that is concerned. The papers of the institution are for the purpose of disseminating knowledge and the advantages of the college.

Mr. LOUD. If it were for the purpose of disseminating knowledge, there would be no objection to it, but it is not.

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. Then you exclude the good for the bad.

Mr. LOUD. If there is 99 per cent of bad, I do not want the article.

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. Well, there is no proof that there is 99 per cent of the bad.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Is it not true that college publications are left in this bill just as they are under the present law?

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. Are they?

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. I think they are.

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. Here is an express provision in section 4 that I think excludes them.

Mr. LOUD. If the colleges will pay for the publications the same as the fraternal societies and the trade unions do, no man will object to it.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman from California permit an interruption?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from California yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. LOUD. Certainly.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. I have heard the conference between the gentleman from Mississippi and the gentleman from California, and it seems to me that they are at cross purposes upon the question and answer. Now, I understand the gentleman from Mississippi to ask the gentleman from California with reference to college publications, not the historical, scientific, and other publications of societies that are referred to by section 6 of the bill, but purely college publications. Am I right?

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. My amendment refers to publications of historical societies and colleges.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. I am speaking now with reference to college publications.

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. My amendment includes publications of historical societies.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. With reference to college publications, is it not true that they will retain their privilege under this bill just as they have it to-day? I mean now college publications, strictly speaking. I hope the gentleman from California will answer that question.

Mr. LOUD. Did you ask me a question? I thought you were answering the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HENRY], and I beg your pardon. I was looking up a statute, thinking you were talking to the gentleman from Mississippi, and was not listening.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Then it is no use for me to press the inquiry.

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. I think it would be right to adopt an amendment at the proper time to insert "or historical societies or incorporated institutions of learning," so that it could go to the country that we are as much in favor now of extending educational advantages as we were in the past, and that we propose to put educational institutions on an equal footing at least with trade unions.

Mr. LOUD. I hope they may be put on that plane.

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. Will you accept such an amendment as I have just stated?

Mr. LOUD. That would not put them on the same plane at all. No; I would not accept the amendment.

Permit me to repeat that the great and growing evil confronting the postal service to-day in the management of the mail service is the emanations from colleges. That is the growing part of our second-class matter, represented not by publications which the gentleman thinks of as going through the mails under that designation, but publications of this character [holding up a pamphlet]. I can take you down to the Post-Office Committee room and show you at least 200 publications sent here by the Post-Office Department, with no more merit than that; and I can show you 100 of these publications circulating where one of the other publications circulate.

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. Every law has its evils; and you must not sacrifice the good on account of the evil.

Mr. LOUD. Where the evil is so much greater than the good—where it is as 99 to 1, I think the gentleman——

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. Then, as I understand, the gentleman would draw a line in favor of trade-union publications as against the educational interests.

Mr. LOUD. Now the gentleman is interjecting into my speech a suggestion which is unworthy of him.

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I simply wanted to find out whether the gentleman would accept this amendment, and I have done so in the hope that it would strengthen his bill; but I believe he will not accept it.

Mr. LOUD. Let me ask the gentleman in return, would he vote for this bill if his amendment were inserted?

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. I will if you will let me put in the bill some more amendments which I am going to offer. [Laughter.] I want several others.

Mr. LOUD. Of course.

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. I think we ought to amend the bill as we go along.

Mr. LOUD. I knew the gentleman was not in favor of this bill.

Mr. TONGUE. Does this bill in any manner affect the monthly magazines, such as the North American Review and others of that class, except as to the return of magazines?

Mr. LOUD. It does not affect them except as to sample copies, although I understand that publications of the character referred to by the gentleman do not use sample copies.

Mr. TONGUE. So that the only practical effect of this bill in respect to such publications would be on the question of returns.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. McClure was before our committee; was the first witness who appeared before it. He was asked if he used sample copies, and he said no; that he did not care anything about them.

Mr. TONGUE. So that the bill affects only the return privilege.

Mr. LOUD. That is all. And they can not get returns now. It is only the news agent who enjoys the return privilege.

Mr. TONGUE. One further question. Does this bill in any way affect, in any manner whatever, the mailing of text-books to colleges and schools unless they be in the form of cheap literature with paper covers? I mean regular text-books.

Mr. LOUD. No; you can not mail them now at second-class rates.

Mr. BINGHAM. They must pay regular book rates.

Mr. TONGUE. I am aware of that; but some colleges do not seem to know it, and I want to put the information on record.

Mr. LLOYD. Allow me to call attention to the fact that catalogues of State universities or colleges do not now go through the mails at the second-class rate, and that publications of schools, if they be issued at least four times a year, now go through the mails at second-class rates and will do so under this bill.

Mr. LOUD. If they have a list of subscribers.

Mr. LLOYD. If they have a list of subscribers.

Mr. LOUD. Which is the character of most publications issued by the boys in colleges.

Mr. LLOYD. They have a list of subscribers.

Mr. LOUD. Yes; and this bill will not in any way affect them.

Now, I will attempt very briefly to explain what this bill contains. Section 1 eliminates from the pound privilege serials in the form of novels. Section 2 eliminates from the second-class privilege sample copies except as provided in section 3. The question may be asked, Why stop the sample copies? A very learned gentleman wrote me a letter the other day saying, "If second-class matter is now profitable to the Government, why should we cut off any of it?"

The gentleman does not seem to understand that if it were profitable we would not want to cut it off, but in fact it is a loss to the Government to the extent of some $45,000,000 a year. This country in its early days never anticipated that this privilege should be extended beyond the subscriber. We do not care very much about the sample copies of legitimate publications; but this circulation of sample copies is the only means of subsistence that certain advertising papers of the country now have. For illustration, here is a publication [holding up a pamphlet] which it must be apparent to your mind and mine is simply an advertising journal; yet, it contains reading matter enough to be admitted under the second-class privilege. It obtains a list of subscribers by offering premiums or by one means or another, so that it has, perhaps, a subscribers' list of 300,000.

They send out up to a million and a half of sample copies. They make affidavit that they have a monthly circulation of a million and a half or a million and three-quarters. A sharp advertising agent knows what an advertisement is worth in a paper of that character. Permit me to say that I could mention one of them to-day having nearly a million sample copies a month which demands and receives as high as $4,000 a page for each insertion of an advertisement, because of course a man who has a thing to advertise knows that it is worth more to advertise in a paper that reaches one million and a half than one that goes to only a half million.

Now, section 3 as amended—and that is as the committee presents it—permits the mailing of sample copies up to 50 per cent of the list of subscribers, not exceeding 500 sample copies.

The metropolitan journals of the country do not care anything about sample copies. Permit me to say, as I said on a former occasion, that the American Newspaper Publishers' Association, representing more than 90 per cent of the circulation of daily newspapers throughout the country, have repeatedly at every session since 1896 unanimously indorsed this measure. So it is only the poor country paper, as represented to us, that desires the privilege of sample copies, and we thought if we gave 50 per cent of the actual subscription list, in view of the fact that he now had the right to mail in the county in which his paper is published absolutely free, and does mail some forty to fifty million pounds a year of his publications in the counties where they are published without paying a single cent to the Government——

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. And will continue to under this bill?

Mr. LOUD. And will continue to under this bill. We thought it a sufficient privilege to grant. Now, that is all this bill does.

Of course I know somebody says this provision here about subscribers is a change of law and that it is irksome; that it will cause a good deal of trouble. Now, let us see what the proposed provision in this bill is. A great deal of objection is raised to this provision here, which reads as follows:

And must have a legitimate list of subscribers who voluntarily order and pay or agree to pay for the same.

That is the language in this bill. I am perfectly willing to swap that language for the present law, if anybody thinks the present law is better. Now, here it is:

Postmasters must require satisfactory evidence that publications offered for mailing at the pound rate have a legitimate list of subscribers by each of whom or for each of whom, with his consent, express or implied, payment of the subscription price has been made or agreed to be made.

If anybody prefers the present law to what is in this bill, speaking for myself, I am willing to swap.

Mr. SNODGRASS. Is that all there is now existing in the law with reference to their circulation?

Mr. LOUD. That is all of that provision. There are a great many provisions, of course, in relation to publications. That is the only provision relating to subscription lists or lists of subscribers.

Now, that is all there is in this bill. Of course there is a provision at the end here in relation to separations which some members have raised objection to. It is wholly immaterial to the bill. The Department asked to have it in there in order that they might get at this fellow that we are after. This bill is not after the legitimate publisher. It does not affect him.

This provision was put in in order that the Department might be in a position to compel this advertising man to separate his matter. All of the legitimate press throughout the country do it to-day. This fellow refuses to do it. I do not care whether it is in the bill or not. It never will be enforced against a publication with a circulation of less than fifteen or twenty thousand. It could not be, because the separation of that paper would be a matter of impossibility. The Department would be compelled to furnish more mail sacks to a paper of that character than it could possibly afford, and it would hinder the Department rather than aid it. But where a publication has 100,000, 200,000, or 300,000, or 500,000, or a million and a half of copies, as they have in some instances here, then the Department desires to have the power to compel these people to make a partial separation.

Mr. SNODGRASS. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. LOUD. Certainly.

Mr. SNODGRASS. Can you state the provisions of the existing law that authorizes the mailing of sample copies of newspapers, whether it is limited or unlimited?

Mr. LOUD. Well, it is unlimited, I will say. The language reads just the same as this bill would if you were to change the word "excluding" to the word "including." That is the only change there is in this section from the present law. The present law includes sample copies, and this excludes them except as hereinafter provided.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from California yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. LOUD. I want to get through, Mr. Speaker, for I am very tired. I was sick when I started.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. LOUD. Yes; I will yield.

Mr. MANN. In reference to the college publications I wish to ask this question: There are a great many land-grant colleges which are conducting experiment stations, the results of which they send out by mail. They are not sent to lists of subscribers. I infer that they would not be allowed to be sent as second-class matter under the provisions of this bill. Would the gentleman have any objection to an amendment authorizing matter of that sort to be sent out as second-class matter?

Mr. LOUD. Well, let me say in perfect frankness to the gentleman that the object of this bill is to curtail rather than to extend the privileges that now exist. This would be an extension of privileges.

Mr. MANN. I will say that these experiment stations are supported by money contributed by the Government of the United States, but the experiment-publications are issued by the colleges.

Mr. LOUD. I should not feel disposed to have the result of this bill a broadening of the law rather than a contraction of it.

Mr. GRIGGS. Experiment-station bulletins are now sent out under the frank of the Agricultural Department.

Mr. LOUD. The gentleman behind me says that they are sent out under frank. I do not know anything about it.

Mr. LATIMER. Not those which are printed by the colleges.

Mr. MANN. That is a mistake, I will say to the gentleman from California. The publications to which I refer pay postage now. I know the colleges are objecting to the bill on that ground.

Mr. GRIGGS. If the gentleman will allow me, I did not say that the publications to which he had reference were sent out under frank. I said that bulletins from experiment stations conducted by the Government of the United States went out under the frank of the Agricultural Department, and that statement is true.

Mr. MANN. But not the publications of experiment stations conducted by agricultural colleges.

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. And their reports.

Mr. GRIGGS. If they are agricultural experiment stations of the United States, their bulletins are sent out under frank.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will pardon me, the United States contributes a certain amount of money to land-grant colleges conducting experiment stations, and these experiment stations are conducted by the colleges, and they have to pay second-class postage on what they send out.

Mr. GRIGGS. I do not dispute that. I think that is very probable.

Mr. LOUD. You want to give them a privilege that they do not now have, and I would rather it would be separated from this measure.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Does this bill of yours change the law in this respect?

Mr. LOUD. No. If you defeat this bill, you will not give them any further privilege.

Mr. MANN. They claim this bill is objectionable to them. I do not know about it. They claim that they have now the second-class privilege. I do not know about it, for I am not posted. The gentleman who has the floor knows a great deal more about that than I know.

Mr. LOUD. Gentlemen of course can readily understand the difficulty in asking a hypothetical question unless you understand all the facts about the case.

Mr. MANN. Of course the gentleman is aware that the colleges have been sending a great many communications to Congress opposing this bill on the ground that it interferes with their publications. Now, I scarcely see how it interferes with the ordinary college paper, and I suppose all their communications had reference to this sort of publication.

Mr. LOUD. Now, let me say to the gentleman that one gentleman who most earnestly protested claimed that he now had the right to send a certain publication through the mails, and I sent out and found on investigation that he did not have the privilege and never had it. So the gentleman can readily understand the difficulty of asking a question relating to a special subject.

No college publication or any other in the world can be admitted to the second-class privilege except it appear on the editorial page or outside. Gentlemen can see on that "Application has been made." It was made and denied. If it had been admitted, it would have so stated; and every paper is compelled to have that in a prominent place in the paper.

Mr. BROSIUS. And it must have a bona fide subscription list.

Mr. LOUD. It must have, except these people.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Your bill does not change it at all.

Mr. MORRIS. If the gentleman will allow me, I will read from a letter here. I think the answer to it the gentleman can make, and your answer will, I am quite sure, clear up a good deal of the difficulty in the man's mind who wrote to me in regard to State colleges. Here is a letter from a president of a college whom I know, and whom I know to be sincere and honest in these allegations which he is making; but I believe that he is mistaken, and I want him to be corrected as to this question. Now, in the very first paragraph he reputes to this bill what I do not think it does. And I want to ask the chairman of the committee about it:

On January 20, 1900, Mr. LOUD, of California, introduced in Congress a bill (H. R. 6071) to amend the postal laws relating to second-class mail matter; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Office and Post-Roads, of which Mr. LOUD is chairman. Your attention—is especially called to the fact that the publications of "all institutions of learning and all strictly professional, literary, historical, or scientific societies, including the bulletins issued by State boards of health, are excluded from the mails as second-class matter."

That is, mine—

Is that a fact or not, or is the law allowed to remain just as it is now in reference to this character of publication?

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, I must have talked for an hour and a half to very little use if the gentleman could have sat under me all this time and still asked that question. I feel, Mr. Speaker, that I have not alone weakened myself, but wearied the House, if I have not conveyed to them even the simplest thought.

Mr. MORRIS. I beg the gentleman's pardon for having asked him a question.

Mr. LOUD. I have stated as emphatically as I could that this bill did exclude the publications of incorporated institutions of learning except they have a legitimate list of subscribers; and if I have said that once, I have said it a dozen times.

Mr. MORRIS. But does the bill change the law as it is now in regard to this class of publications?

Mr. LOUD. Certainly it does; otherwise it would not exclude them; and if it did not exclude them, it would be of very little moment. I have spent so much of the time of this House in talking for an hour and a half that I must be dull indeed if I have not conveyed to a single mind here the thought that I have had.

Mr. BROMWELL. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. LOUD. I set forth the reason as to why it was thought advisable to discontinue what have grown up to be the greatest evil that confronts the Post-Office Department.

Mr. MORRIS. The only thing that I got out of what you said was that you held up a lot of advertising circulars published by these colleges, and said that was what you were after. Now these have been excluded. That is what I am trying to get at, and I am just as opposed to it as you are.

Mr. LOUD. You can not exclude them in any other way than this. There is no man living that can put English words into a sentence that will keep one college out and let another one in. It has been tried too long.

Mr. MORRIS. But the question is this: Does this law of yours that you are trying to have passed leave all historical societies and college publications—legitimate ones of colleges—free to have this rate or not?

Mr. LOUD. Permit me to say once more, Mr. Speaker, no. I thought everybody understood me. Did no one understand what I was saying? I would like to know if anyone understood me. Did you [pointing]? [Laughter.]

Mr. OLMSTED. May I submit an amendment to the gentleman's bill?

Mr. LOUD. I can not accept any amendment now. I may later on.

Mr. BROMWELL. Permit me to ask the chairman of the committee a question, just to clear up this point a little bit, if possible.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. LOUD. I yield.

Mr. BROMWELL. If these college publications had regular subscribers and were issued at regular intervals, in accordance with the law, then does your bill make any change in their status?

Mr. LOUD. No; they would be entitled to the privileges which every other publication in the country has. We take away no privileges that every publication in the country has. Now, Mr. Speaker, I feel that I must close my remarks on this question, misunderstood as this evidently is by the House. There are, perhaps, within the sound of my voice fifty members who fully understand this measure; but nevertheless it is unfortunate, looking at this question as I do, that not exceeding fifty members of the House, called upon as they will be on Thursday next to vote upon a great question, have seen fit to seek light upon that question.

The question, so far as I am concerned, I leave to the House of Representatives. No man can have a personal interest in this matter. Feeling that in my humble way I have performed my duty as a member of this body, as chairman of the Post-Office Committee, and a citizen, I leave the responsibility with you. Whatever the result, I am content, knowing it to be the judgment of the representatives of the people, at least apparent for this moment. I am done. [Applause.]

Mr. LITTLE addressed the Chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Tennessee yield to the gentleman from Arkansas?

Mr. LITTLE. It is understood that I shall have one hour.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Speaker, it has been with no little misgiving that I have been led to conclusions in reference to this bill differing not only from the majority of the committee, but from several of my distinguished colleagues on the committee of my own political views. I confess that my views upon this bill turn more upon the general policy pursued by the Government heretofore than upon any technical provision of the bill. It has been, and was, the policy of the Government when the present system was adopted to encourage the ready dissemination of literature of the sciences and of art—I might say also of the newspapers of the country—not for the benefit of those who circulated them, but for the benefit of the great body of intelligent readers of the country. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that a correct understanding of what has taken place under the existing law will vindicate the wisdom of that policy. I believe the charge that the second-class mail matter creates a deficit in the national revenue with reference to the postal service is not correct. I believe if you will take from the mails second-class matter, that would bring about a great reduction in the use of first-class postage and a proportionate reduction in the current revenues, you would see and confront a greater deficit in the public service than you do to-day.

I do not understand that there is any general public demand for a change of existing law. I have never heard from a single one of the intelligent constituency that I have the honor to represent upon this floor protesting against the existing law. I have, during the pendency of this measure, received two printed petitions stating, in a postscript for me, to do what I thought right about the matter. My constituents are not controlled by petitions with an offer of so many volumes of a particular book, if they could engage their services thereby; and the result is that while it may have troubled my distinguished friend from California and others upon this floor, I can assure them that the gentleman from the Second district of Arkansas has not been harassed in that way or troubled by his constituency. They are not made of that sort of stuff.

I know, and I concede, that there are abuses under existing law, and will be under any law you can pass, unless you shut off and stop the postal system. It is not fair to hold up an example of a particular advertising sheet and in that way seek to cut off many of the valuable privileges, as I believe, that the great reading people of the country now enjoy under existing law.

Neither do I subscribe to the proposition that the postal revenues demand its repeal. In the first place, I might be allowed to suggest that I am not wedded to the theory that the postal system, the only thing in the Government that reaches every man, should of necessity be supported absolutely by the revenues arising from that service, because I believe it the most valuable service in the Government to the people. If it were necessary to improve that service for the benefit of our people, I for one would be willing to vote for a direct appropriation to do it. I believe when I say that that I voice the sentiment of the intelligent people of the country.

The postal deficit for the present year is estimated at six and one-half million dollars. The deficit for 1901 is estimated at $3,000,000. So it can be seen that we are rapidly, under the present system, extinguishing the deficit that has grown up under the postal system, and it will not, in my opinion, be longer than 1902 when you will see the deficit under the postal system wiped out and a healthy surplus left. I know that will be true if you will begin the economy at the right end of the line and say to the railroad companies that transport the mail of the people, "You shall do it at prices within the range of those which you charge for like service to private corporations and individuals." If you do that, you can put pneumatic tubes into every city in the Union, and you can put your free delivery into a great many of the neighborhoods of our country, but I would not give the snap of my finger for a rural free delivery if nothing is to be delivered which may interest the boys and girls of that country who are striving for the best literature of the land.

Now, let me call attention to a few figures; I shall not deal very much in that line, and I shall speak only in round numbers—millions. For the years 1893, 1894, and 1895 the receipts of the Post-Office Department were $76,000,000. This law in regard to second-class matter went into force, I believe, in 1894, and during those three years the revenues from the postal service amounted to substantially the same figure, the deficit during the first year being $5,000,000, the second year $9,000,000, and the third year $9,000,000.

Now, we begin to reach the period when this objectionable matter against which gentlemen have declaimed was admitted to the mails. Let us see what was the effect. I find that from 1895 to 1899, a period of five years, there was an increase of revenue from $76,000,000 to more than $95,000,000. Now, to be perfectly fair, I want to allow 10 per cent for the natural development of the country; therefore from this increase of $20,000,000 we will deduct $2,000,000. I want to deduct, also, 10 per cent for the McKinley "prosperity" which gentlemen on the other side claim, but which we do not believe has yet reached the people.

Mr. BROMWELL. Has the gentleman the amounts of revenue for each year separately? He has given to us the aggregate of certain years.

Mr. LITTLE. I am reading from the report.

Mr. BROMWELL. If it will not interfere with the gentleman's argument, will he be kind enough to read the amount of revenue from 1895 to 1899, giving each year separately?

Mr. LITTLE. Certainly; I will gladly do so. For 1895 the revenue was $76,000,000; for 1896 it was $82,000,000. That year—the year ending June, 1896—was the year before the great McKinley cyclone of "prosperity" had struck the country. For 1897 the revenue was $82,000,000. It will be seen the revenue did not grow at all for those two years. For 1898 the amount of revenue was $89,000,000; and in 1899 it was $95,000,000. Now, if the gentleman can draw any consolation from those figures he is welcome to do so. I do not care upon what ground you may base this increase. You may allow 20 per cent for the natural growth of the country; you may allow 20 per cent for the "prosperity" which you claim as the result of Republican rule, making $8,000,000 to be deducted from the $20,000,000 of increase. In that way you may find out the amount of increase represented by second-class matter passing through the mails.

Here is the trouble in considering this question. You say, "Why, there is paid into the revenues only three and a half millions on account of second-class matter." That is true, and the amount looks small. But do you know that that figure represents only the smallest part of the revenues which have sprung into use under this system?

Some gentlemen here represent rural districts. I represent a city of the size of the city of Tupelo, represented by my friend from Mississippi [Mr. ALLEN], and I am acquainted also with the surrounding country. I know something about that sort of life. A sample copy of a fashion magazine is sent into a neighborhood. In the back of it you find advertisements of patterns with the prices. Ladies get together, examine that magazine, and Mrs. Smith says, "I would like to have that pattern;" Mrs. Jones says, "I would like to have this other pattern."

So it goes on. The result is that probably on account of that one copy of that magazine coming into that community there are sent out fifteen letters, paying first-class postage, as do the answers to those letters. And those letters would never have seen the mails had not these inquiries been inspired by the very literature which you are seeking to drive from the mails. Any man who will carefully examine on that line will, I believe, become convinced, unless he is enslaved to his own preconceived opinion, that second-class mail matter adds more revenue, directly and indirectly, to the revenues of the Government than any other class of matter that is admitted into the mails. I think there can be no doubt about that. If that is so, why do you want to strike down this system?

It may be said that under this provision of law certain species of periodicals which ought not to be classed as second-class matter do go through the mails at that rate. The Postmaster-General himself in his report has said that a large class of matter passing through the mails as second class ought really to pay postage as third-class matter. Now, if he can not make the distinction, why should we undertake to strike down what I believe to be one of the best services in the Government, simply because some little fictitious or fraudulent business concern can pass its publications through the mails as second-class matter when they ought not to be so ranked?

Mr. BURKE of Texas. If the gentleman will allow me, I wish to ask him how he can reconcile the statement he has just made with the statement of the Postmaster-General that first-class matter conveyed through the mails amounted, in round numbers, to 128,000,000 pounds, for which there was received in postage $65,000,000, while of second-class matter there were 352,000,000 pounds, amounting, in round numbers, to three million and a half of dollars? How can those figures be reconciled with the statement the gentleman has just made?

Mr. LITTLE. I thank my distinguished colleague on the committee for the suggestion, for I might have been misunderstood in the proposition I announced. We all know that the revenue received from first-class mail matter constitutes the principal source of profit to the Post-Office Department. The net profit on first-class mail matter, I believe, is estimated at something like seven-eighths, or in the neighborhood of that, as I recollect. I concede that on the direct amount paid on second-class mail matter there is a loss.

Mr. BURKE of Texas. That is what I thought the gentleman was bound to concede.

Mr. LITTLE. Certainly; I do concede it.

Mr. BURKE of Texas. I understood the gentleman to say that there was no loss, but that it paid a greater revenue to the Government than any other class of mail matter.

Mr. LITTLE. I greatly regret that my distinguished friend did not understand me. I said that the amount that was paid on second-class mail matter and the amount paid on first-class and third-class mail matter that was inspired through that channel constituted, and I believe does constitute, the great body of the mail receipts to-day.

I illustrated it, as I will illustrate it again. Here is a little pamphlet, the Riverside Series, advertising the best literature in the country at exceedingly cheap rates. This goes down into some county in my district. Some ambitious boy gets hold of it. He never read Longfellow or Burns or Milton or any of these distinguished poets, but his soul is hungry for something good to read. He takes this advertisement and he goes to his father and says, "Papa, can you not get me this book? It will only cost 4 cents or 5 cents or 15 cents; can you not get me that? And here is Mary, who wants one of these books." Papa says, "Why, certainly; here is a quarter. Take that and get it."

The result of that is that the Government gets the postage upon the letter, it gets the fee for the postal note, and perhaps they write to inquire for more prices and the answer comes back, and out of that little pamphlet directly might flow 20 communications of that sort that would never have seen the mails, and a character of mail upon which the Government makes a profit of from one-half to seven-eighths. Why, sir, when you strike out the second-class matter, you remove the cause, at least, from that character of correspondence.

And that is not all. I believe, as I said in the beginning, that this policy was the wisest policy connected with the postal service. I say that because, as we all understand fundamentally, the very basis of our institutions and our Government depends upon the intelligence and morality of our people. If that be true, can the Government do a wiser thing, can the Government do a greater service to the people of this country, than to afford an opportunity for the cheap and ready distribution of the best literature, both literary, scientific——

Mr. BURLESON. Religious——

Mr. LITTLE. That the best literature of every class may go through the mails to improve and inspire our people wherever there may be a star-route service in all the broad land.

Why, we hear that this matter is shipped from New York to Chicago, and possibly St. Louis, where large quantities are going; but the boy or the man or the woman who lives out in the country who desires this literature, who can not afford to pay for it being sent by express, or where the quantity is too small to have it shipped by freight, under the present law they can drop their postal note into the post-office, and the literature that they want will be forthcoming.

Why, gentlemen, have you forgotten, have you not read in these hearings the opinions of the educators from almost every State in the Union in which they commend this series in the highest degree? Would it be trespassing too much to read one of them? I beg the pardon of the House for doing so. I read one letter from Mr. Otis Ashmore, superintendent of schools at Savannah, Ga. I have no acquaintance with this gentleman, but I know the discriminating judgment of that people well enough to know that he is not only an intelligent but an honest man. Here is his opinion. He has not been bought by a circular promising him two or three volumes of a 2-cent publication. I guarantee that. Listen to his words:

SAVANNAH, GA., January 25, 1898.

Any legislation restricting the dissemination of good books and pure literature such as contained in the Riverside Literature Series would, in my opinion, be a grave error. The uplifting influence of such reading upon the great masses of the people is unquestioned, and our Government should encourage the easy dissemination of such reading matter as will tend to inculcate those sentiments and principles which broaden and beautify life and which strengthen and purify our national life.

OTIS ASHMORE,
Superintendent of Schools.

Ah, gentlemen, it is not the man who can afford to buy costly literature that we want to reach. It is not the man who can pay a dollar and a half or two dollars for a bound volume that we want to reach. It is the great body of the struggling people and the ambitious boys who are thirsting for knowledge within whose reach the present law puts the best literature of the world at such figures that they can afford to pay for it. Why, sir, with my present views, I think this Congress could well afford by direct appropriation to pay the deficit rather than to strike down this one element.

Gentlemen seem to think that the serial stories and the reprint of books are the objectionable features of the present law. It is that part which commends it to me in the very highest degree, because I know what it is myself. If you will excuse a personal reference, I would have no hesitation in saying to you that if I had had the privileges that this law gives when I was a boy I would have been much more of a literary man than I am to-day. God bless that class. It is they for whom we should strive. It is their uplifting that ought to appeal to every heart, and I believe and hope it does.

Now, this second-class matter can be shipped by express, but as the law now exists every post-office is a delivery stand for this magnificent literature, and if you strike out the reprints of books, you strike from the law the gem that to my mind glitters more brightly than all the rest. Because, I tell you, that is the class that we want to reach. Some gentlemen have intimated that it is the great corporations that want to defeat this bill. Ah, gentlemen, it is not the case. Great national book companies would not be hurt; but the little fellow who is attempting to establish a book concern at another place might be crushed by having to seek the delivery of his literature through similar lines. To-day every business interest of this character, from the great literary house to the news stand, has established a delivery at every door where our great postal service extends, and that delivery inspires more communications, more first-class mail matter, more third-class mail matter, and I believe it has done much to bring the service up to the standard where we find it to-day. I would not disturb it.

Not only that. Gentlemen talk about the sample copies of newspapers. Who is ever hurt by a sample copy of a newspaper? When we have a good paper, let them send it at the 1 cent a pound rate. Let it go to the people. If they can build up a circulation in that way, let them do it. The people have never complained of this expense. If the publication is bad, they will eschew it. If it is good, they will accept it. And right here permit me to digress for a moment. When this law first went into force, the trashy literature of the country sought the mails. It was the yellow-back novel, the Jesse James books, or the story of the Younger brothers, or some other outlaws; but to-day, owing to the discriminating judgment of the great intelligent reading masses of the people, you will find that, in my judgment, not one-tenth of the amount of that kind of literature is distributed to-day that was formerly distributed. No man can tell precisely the percentage, but I give that as an estimate; and it is as exact as some of the estimates made on the other side.

Mr. BROMWELL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LITTLE. Yes.

Mr. BROMWELL. The gentleman intimates that this yellow-back literature is decreasing in the mails. Does the gentleman know that very recently in the New York post-office there were 2 tons of the book Sapho, that is exciting a good deal of comment just now, entered for second-class mail privileges?

Mr. LITTLE. I was not aware of that fact.

Mr. BROMWELL. Two tons in one office.

Mr. LITTLE. I was not aware of that fact, and it does not change the position that I take.

Mr. DRIGGS. I should like to ask the gentleman a question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Arkansas yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. LITTLE. Certainly.

Mr. DRIGGS. Is it not true that if we pass this bill it will still be possible for the Police Gazette and such papers as that to go through the mails as second-class matter?

Mr. LITTLE. Ad libitum.

Mr. DRIGGS. I thought so.

Mr. LITTLE. There is no doubt about that, and therefore I say it is unjust and unfair toward the system to hold up a spurious publication here and there and put it against the superior benefits that are enjoyed by the people under the present law.

Let me tell you, gentlemen, I do not intend by my vote or by my hand to lay violence on any legitimate publication of this class. I believe it pays its own expenses, directly or indirectly. I believe it is a great boon to the American people. They are improving. They are reading more, they are learning more from day to day as time goes on, and this service has done much to inspire it. The bill "gives the newspapers 500 sample copies, but no more." Give them as many as they want to pay mail upon. If I want to establish a newspaper—and the Lord knows I never will—if I am able to send a thousand sample copies or ten thousand sample copies, why tie my hand and say that I shall pay a different rate, and pay it by licking a stamp and sticking it upon every paper? It is not right.

Ah, gentlemen, if you would weigh your mails you would find that the great metropolitan journals coming to you, weighing a pound and a pound and a half, constitute the great bulk of the second-class matters about which there is so much complaint. Let the newspapers go on as they have been. I am willing to it. Let intelligence struggle on, and I warrant you the good judgment and the improved taste of the American people will continue to vindicate the wisdom of this law. Not only that. You hear about commercial schools and college periodicals which are to be excluded by this bill because they have no bona fide subscription list. They are not intended to have, in the nature of things. But take my own State as an illustration. In the city of Fort Smith we have a commercial school, and a magnificent school it is. They issue a magnificent periodical, with articles in it intended to inspire the young and to create in them a thirst to excel in knowledge.

Not only that; the colleges of my State—all of them, I believe—issue their periodicals and catalogues, filled with the very choicest literature, and they are read by the young people of the State, and it kindles ambition, it touches a flame and inspires the boys of our country to higher aims and nobler purposes. I would be willing to extend rather than deprive these people of any privileges they now have. There is not a discreditable sheet in my State of the kind indicated, and I believe the Postmaster-General has power to exclude the obnoxious matter from the mails under existing law.

Mr. COWHERD. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. LITTLE. Certainly.

Mr. COWHERD. Do I understand the gentleman to say that these papers are published by the college boys?

Mr. LITTLE. Many of them are.

Mr. COWHERD. Then, would not these be legitimate publications? College papers have subscription lists, that are subscribed to largely by the boys themselves.

Mr. LITTLE. Oh, no; each boy, as I understand, gets it.

Mr. COWHERD. He can pay his own quarter.

Mr. LITTLE. They are sent to the friends of the boys all over the State.

Mr. COWHERD. Then they have a paid subscription, and they are admitted to the mails.

Mr. LITTLE. It has no subscription that I know of. I know that this commercial school publication has none.

Mr. COWHERD. A commercial school publication is simply an advertising sheet issued by the school, but a college paper is issued by the boys and has a subscription list.

Mr. LITTLE. That may be true. I do not know about the subscription among the boys. They send out hundreds and hundreds of copies all over the State, and the papers contain the choicest literature and choicest debates, and all that sort of thing, between the boys. If it is all right now, let well enough alone. That is the position I take upon this bill—that there is no demand emanating from the country to strike down this service as to these publications. I am satisfied, the country seems to be satisfied, and the Post-Office Department wants to preclude them. We have it suggested by the gentleman, the distinguished chairman, that there are numerous schemes pending before the Post-Office Committee—the pneumatic tube, the economic postal bill, and Lord only knows what—and I tell you that when you strike down this service, ninety-nine times out of one hundred it will be superseded by a service that will be very inferior in its beneficent effect upon the whole people of the country.

Mr. Speaker, in this perilous time in the history of the Republic, let us encourage in every possible way the dissemination of knowledge; encourage the circulation of the best literature. Let us uphold the hands of the press, the suburban or country press, the more important of all to the great body of the people. Let it have the greatest possible liberality, and by its aid we may trust to the intelligence and patriotism of the people for the perpetuity of our institutions. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Speaker, I shall reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, I now yield forty-five minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BELL].

Mr. BELL. Mr. Speaker, I would like to consume a little time in referring to the history and the business of the Post-Office Department. You will bear in mind that this bill has not been touched from the standpoint of principle. In 1825 and prior thereto we, like other countries, had a postal rate, and high it was, as it was in all countries at that time; but the idea began to permeate the American mind that the best way to govern a great nation was through education. We also had a system under which the wealthier classes paid the greater burden of the public expenses.

We also had the principle permeating the public mind that those who used luxuries should be taxed, because it was an evidence that they were more able to bear the burdens. Also the idea permeated the public mind that a premium ought to be offered the poor in the great arid West and other portions of the country to read and to educate. Therefore, the Post-Office Department and Congress for the first time in our history said we would establish what we now know as a second-class postal rate. That second-class postal rate referred, in 1825, to magazines and pamphlets, and it gave a lower rate than any other of the classifications on these particular publications.

In 1845 this was extended by carrying weekly publications within 30 miles of the place of issue free. Now, bear that in mind. There is a premium offered for the first time to the people, giving them free publications within 30 miles of the place of issue. In 1851 Congress established a rate of 5 cents for every 13 copies of a weekly newspaper. In 1861 Congress extended these privileges not only to the subscriber, but to the news dealer in every town in the land, that they might have an incentive to force their reading matter on the people and encourage them to educate.

That went on and on, until finally we developed this system and this principle that is now attempted to be rooted out or destroyed, as it were, root and branch. Congress said we now transport mail at a cost of 8 cents. Now, keep that in mind. And Congress said that the great financial institutions, the great railroad companies, the great business establishments, send out a thousand or ten thousand letters where the poor man sends out one. Therefore Congress said we will put first-class mail matter, including letters and postal cards and like material, at 32 cents a pound, making a profit on that kind of postage of 300 per cent. Why? Because, said they, these industries are able to bear the burden.

What else did they say? They said then we will have a fourth-class rate. What shall that contain? We shall provide for the carrying of merchandise, of cut flowers, of picture albums, and such things as those bought by people who are able to indulge in such luxuries, and we will put them at 16 cents a pound, and we will make 100 per cent on every pound of mail matter carried under the fourth-class rate. Why? Because these are luxuries and they are used by a class of people who can afford it.

Now, you have got the two extremes, the only two parts of the postal system in its formative period that it was ever intended to make a single cent of profit upon. First, 300 per cent on the first class and 100 per cent on the fourth class. Then we come to the second class, and what did Congress say about the second class? It referred to fixing the second class as giving the people a franking privilege on the second-class matter, speaking of it as a franking privilege, and they said on every pound of mail matter we carry under what is known as the second class we propose to lose 7 cents. Why? So that class of citizens who are unable to educate themselves may be educated at the public expense.

What shall it include? They said it shall include newspaper publications that go beyond the county limit, first making all within the county absolutely free, which costs over $1,000,000 absolute contribution under the second-class rate. Now, what else did they say it should contain? They said it should carry not only magazines and newspapers, but they said it should carry the periodicals; and so far as our friends talking about periodicals being an innovation and an abuse of the privilege is concerned, the very history of the formative period of the Post-Office Department shows that that is absolutely false, because we had in former years—prior to 1885—a second-class rate of 2 cents a pound. But the people of the United States were so anxious to place this literature—the best that is known to the library—into the hands of the people at large in the sparsely settled portion of the country that they said, "We will cut down the rate from 2 cents a pound to 1 cent a pound."

Now, let us see what were some of the arguments ten or twelve years ago, in 1888 and 1889, for instance, upon this subject. On the 8th of July, 1889, in the city of New York, ex-Postmaster James used this language:

> The constant tendency of our postal system has been toward the extension of the privileges of the mails in every branch of correspondence and every form of literary production. Its facilities first made possible the cheap production of newspapers, and later on standard works of literature, by placing upon all periodical popular reading matter the lowest rate of postage ever known in a civilized land, viz, 1 cent per pound throughout the United States. This low rate has developed the popular library periodicals.

Until 1876, 1877, and 1878 you did not know of such things as "popular libraries." Such things were unknown to history. They began under this system; they grew up under it, and are, in fact, an incarnation of this idea. Ex-Postmaster-General James further said:

> This low rate has developed the popular library periodicals like the Franklin Square, the Seaside, and others, by which the best standard works of English literature, like Green's History of the English People, Macaulay's History, the works of Dickens, Scott, Cooper, George Eliot, and Shakespeare, have been published in 10 cent volumes and made accessible to the people of the most distant States and Territories, and enabled the present generation to possess every important new publication in science as well as fiction. In no other country have the masses ever before enjoyed such an inestimable intellectual privilege, and no money expended by the Government in any of its multiform agencies has ever conferred such enormous advantages.
> This extension of reading good books by the masses is in itself one of the marks of progress of civilization and of the widening benefits of a government of the people and for the people. This impulse and direction, of course, must not be changed. There must be no steps backward.

That is the language of ex-Postmaster-General James. Now, our friend from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] was in 1888 on the Post-Office Committee. Let us see what he thought of these periodical publications, or, if you please, republications of the choicest literature known to literary people. Here is what Mr. CANNON said on the floor of this House on the 2d of February, 1888:

* * * Under this legislation the best classes of literature—for instance, the Waverly Novels, Dickens's works, and the new translation of the Bible—have been sent by publishing houses through the mails, unbound, stitched, at the rate of 2 cents a pound, so that they could be sold to the people at 10 cents a volume. In this way during the last ten or twelve years the best classes of literature, where there is no copyright, and sometimes where there is copyright, have been circulated through the country by our great publishing houses and sold, postage paid, at 10 cents a volume. Publications of this kind have come from the Harper's, from Munro, and nearly all the great publishing houses of the country.

As a consequence of this, you may find in the homes of our farmers and laboring men throughout the length and breadth of the country, in this cheap form, issued at 10 cents per volume, a class of literature to which, prior to the adoption of this policy, some people in very good circumstances could scarcely have access. In my own case—and perhaps I am somewhat more able to buy such books as would be useful to me than many others—I know that I avail myself frequently of these cheap publications, because I do not feel that I could afford to buy the same books in their higher-priced forms.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Emerson's works, for instance, are sent out in that way.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, yes; Emerson's works. The Bible has been sent out that way. Anything that is merely printed, stitched, and not bound, and that is not otherwise prohibited from our mails, goes through the mail at 2 cents a pound.

That was when the rate of postage was 2 cents a pound—before the reduction to 1 cent. Mr. CANNON further said:

Now the newspapers of the country, daily and weekly, everywhere go at 2 cents a pound. They constitute, as I recollect, over three-quarters of all the mails.

And let me say the newspapers to-day constitute three-fourths of the mail matter, in my judgment.

They go at this low rate, having substantially the franking privilege—

Bear that in mind—the franking privilege—

because it is believed to be in the interest of the people for the dissemination of intelligence. For one I will be slow myself, and will ask the House to be slow, before we cut off the privilege of the workingman and the farmer, the million, to get this literature at this low rate.

* * * * * * *

What I have just read constitutes a portion of the history of the country, and it exhibits the establishment of second-class matter in the Post-Office Department, which includes magazines, newspapers, and these unbound or stitched books.

Now, the Post-Office had in view a further policy, and that was to encourage the man who was well able to buy books to buy them and to read them. The Post-Office Department had determined that it cost about 8 cents a pound to transmit the mail.

Now, what was the policy there? The Post-Office Department and this House and the Senate said, we will give the privilege to the poor for such literature as does not go into libraries now, under the second-class rate of 1 cent a pound. We want to make no profit on the man who is able to read and who wants to read. Therefore we will take the books that are bound in regular library form, whether in cloth or morocco bindings, and put the postal rate at the actual cost of 8 cents a pound under the third-class rate. Now, there is your system in a nutshell—the first and fourth class matter are to be made to pay the expenses of the second-class matter. The third-rate matter was presumed to bear its own expense, and no profit exacted from library books. Do you want to tear down that system? That is the question.

I followed the gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD] as best I could this morning, and I wish to say that there is only one thing that commends this bill to me at all, which is that the gentleman from California is the father of the bill. I have seen the gentleman right so often; I have seen him so courageous in defying his party and in defying wrong in this House that whenever I see him father a bill I examine it very thoroughly before I oppose it; but I am so well satisfied that he has passed over the principle and the reason that have brought the present system into vogue, and that he is only looking at the fallacious policy of making every Department bear its own burden of expense, that I take it he is now riding a hobby, and that I am justified in parting company with him on this measure, because he is unquestionably in the wrong.

Now, sir, I jotted down here a few things the gentleman said, and I must say, with all due deference to him, that his argument, in my judgment, fell short in every particular because his premises are faulty. There is no soundness in it. There is nothing underlying it in my judgment except a serious conviction on his part that he is giving the public an improvement in the service and that he is doing the public a benefit. I do not doubt the gentleman thinks that. I believe in his sincerity and I believe in him, but not in his bill.

He starts out by saying that he brought up this bill because so many gentlemen had suggested to him the idea of bringing it up again. I say if any man did that it was a man who has not studied the system of the Post-Office Department of the United States, a man who has not studied the free-school system of the Government of the United States, because this is a handmaid of the free schools of the country. They go hand in hand and were intended to be an aid to each other. And when you talk about your expenditure out of the Treasury, I want to say that we spend between $100,000,000 and $200,000,000 annually in the United States out of the county and State treasuries for free education.

Mr. TALBERT. Has not this bill been changed so as to meet some of the objections that were urged against it?

Mr. BELL. In some few particulars; but those are only minor objections which I care nothing about.

Now, sir, the very idea of the gentleman spending an hour here holding up these little frivolous circulars was enough to stamp his whole idea as fallacious. Now let him strike at larger game. He objects to those items because he says they are purely advertising matter and do not improve the human intellect.

I want to go back with him, and to say that the whole theory and idea of the people of the United States in admitting newspapers to a free circulation in the county of publication at the Government expense, which is said to cost millions of dollars per annum, is to educate the people and to give them reading matter free and induce them to educate themselves.

But now what have the newspapers done? This newspaper which I hold in my hand (the New York Herald) has the undoubted right of admission to the mails. It goes through the post-office at a loss of 7 cents on every pound. The people of the United States contribute to the New York Herald 7 cents for every pound that goes through the post-office. I have here last Sunday's edition of that paper, and I have picked this out because it is more conservative than most of the newspapers of the country.

Mr. TALBERT. The pictures are intended for the children, I suppose.

Mr. BELL. Three-fourths of this Sunday edition is composed of advertisements, pure and undefiled.

Mr. OLMSTED. Have you read the personals?

Mr. BELL. Thirty-one pages of this newspaper that is transmitted at public expense at a loss of 7 cents a pound are nothing but advertising matter that has nothing to do with educating the human mind, and I want to say that the advertisements in one issue of the New York Journal or World will swallow up every little advertising sheet that the gentleman can find in a month's hard work. [Applause.]

You may pass by, if you will, the Sunday Journal and all the Sunday papers, but here is the Philadelphia Inquirer, which comes to your desk and mine daily, a good, conservative paper. This paper came this morning. I had a newspaper man measure it, and two-thirds of the daily issue, saying nothing about the Sunday issue, is pure and undefiled advertisement, and that is transported at the public expense and at a loss of 7 cents a pound on every pound transported.

Mr. TALBERT. Under the present law.

Mr. BELL. Under the present law; and when the Loud bill passes—if it ever does—this paper will go on and all the other daily newspapers will go on just as they are to-day, and you will be transporting through the mails all of this advertising matter of these papers at a loss to the Government of 7 cents a pound. Yet you will cut off that privilege from these other advertising papers.

Mr. TALBERT. Will you cut it off from the county papers, the country papers?

Mr. BELL. No; the country papers will go right along. The law now is and will continue to be that newspapers are transmitted in the county where they are published absolutely at the expense of the Government, at a cost to the Government of over a million dollars per annum.

Mr. BARTLETT. I understand that this bill proposes to limit the number of country papers that can be so circulated to 500.

Mr. BELL. Yes, it was limited to 500 sample copies.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. If the gentleman will permit me, I want to state——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Colorado yield?

Mr. BELL. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I want to state to the House for information that I have an amendment that I am going to offer at the proper time, raising the per cent of sample copies that may be transmitted to 100 per cent, and the number from 500 to 2,000 sample copies. I give notice of that amendment now.

Mr. BELL. Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not wonder that the chairman of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads floundered when he was pressed as to what this would actually save. I do not wonder that he would not express an opinion, because the hearings before that committee and previous committees have so punctured the assertions of the Postmaster-General that you dare not hold them up as approximately accurate in the light of the hearings. I want to say that the gentleman who is the representative of the great news dealers' organization was before that Committee. And what did he say? I read from the hearings:

The CHAIRMAN. I understand that, but Mr. McClure, I think, stated this morning that not exceeding 40,000,000 pounds would cover all the magazines, and he included the Ladies' Home Journal, and I understood him to include publications of that general character. The daily paper does not use the mails at all, and there are no serial novels—that is, it is an insignificant matter. Where does this weight come from?

That is the question asked by the gentleman from California, the chairman of this committee, and he asked it of a man who knows more about this literature probably than almost any other man living.

The chairman of the committee had the impression, and so did Mr. Wanamaker, that this great weight came from the serial publications. I want to say that if any advantage is to be given to any of these publications, for heaven's sake, let us give it to the serials. They compare like daylight to dark with many of the newspapers that go through the mails.

I have a lot of sample copies that these gentlemen interested in this bill have probably sent to all of you. I hold one of them in my hand. It is the poem Evangeline. It goes through the mails and can be had for 13 cents. In the front of it there is an engraving of the author, followed by his biography. Then follows the beautiful poem. That is used in every school in this city and practically every high school in the United States of any standing. Children buy them and use them, and if you are going to discriminate against anything, strike out this advertising matter in the newspapers and let your children have the choicest sayings of Lincoln, of Longfellow, of Scott, and of all the other great men who have gone before us. Now, what did this man Farrelly say? In reply to the question of the gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD] he said:

The daily newspapers do use the mails.
Then they have testified falsely—

Said Mr. LOUD.

No; they testified as to the percentage of their circulation. They did not say how many copies.

Mr. LOUD. If the gentleman will permit, he will see by the very statement of Mr. Farrelly that the statement which you have just made is not correct. You stated that I said the daily newspapers did not use the mails. Now, you can see from the remark of Mr. Farrelly that you are mistaken.

Mr. BELL. I should be glad to yield to the gentleman, but my time is going.

Mr. LOUD. But you can see there is an error. I never said anything of the kind.

Mr. BELL. This is from the hearings, and I will straighten that out, if not correct; but it is so printed here as a part of the hearing.

Now, then, here is Farrelly's testimony in testifying as to the percentage of their circulation by mail:

They do not say how many copies of the Washington Globe go into the mail, but they tell you what percentage, and it sends thousands of copies through the mail. If all of the daily newspapers went through the mail there would not be postal cars enough to carry them. In the case of the Journal, the World, and the Herald alone, they send to the city of Boston over the line of the New Haven Railroad every Sunday morning ten cars packed and loaded with the daily press.

Ten cars on Sunday morning to Boston!

In place of having 400,000,000 pounds, if all the daily press was thrown into the mails it would increase it more than tenfold.

Now, I do not wonder that one not familiar with these things would be confounded.

I have told you about the serials and so-called books, where they get their figures for 50,000 tons, mentioned by Mr. Wanamaker. I do not know, but, to the best of my knowledge, the figures I gave you—5,000 tons—

And so the chairman did right to believe that that was really entitled to statement as fact.

Mr. LOUD. I never said it.

Mr. BELL (continuing):

Their figures for 50,000 tons mentioned by Mr. Wanamaker. I do not know, but to the best of my knowledge the figures I gave you—5,000 tons—would come within the mark. Therefore, assuming that everything intended to be excluded by this bill would be excluded, that in place of the Government saving millions of dollars a year the most that could be saved, on a liberal estimate, would not exceed $900,000.

And now we are getting down to a pretty small thing.

If you pass this bill and the Postmaster-General asserts his authority of censorship, you would not save more than $900,000. When you do that you strike at a fundamental principle of abridging the liberty of the press on the plea of relieving the Department of an imposition which I do not think exists.

I want to say to the gentlemen who were here last year—because I see my time is going by very rapidly—that last year we had this same matter up, and we went over it thoroughly and we developed the fact—and if we had time, we would do it again—we developed the fact that not since 1878 has there been a lowering of transportation charges for the mails of the United States growing out of an exposure of that, and as a matter arising out of that exposure there was a committee appointed by this House for the purpose of inquiring into these facts, and that committee hired an expert to look over the figures and to see how the freights and express and how passenger travel had been lowered by the railroads since 1878.

Now, a digest of the evidence of that joint Congressional committee is found in the Chicago Tribune of March 10, 1900. I find the following:

Annual revenues of a passenger car, $10,528.
Annual revenues of a mail car, $15,588.

Now, think of it! He goes on:

Decline in freight rates since 1878, 35 per cent.

This is taken, as I understand, from the Interstate Commerce Commission:

Decline in passenger rates since 1878, 17½ per cent.

Mr. TALBERT. Since the passage of this act?

Mr. BELL. Yes. [Continuing to read.]

Percentage of mail to gross railroad earnings (1878), 1.879.
Percentage of mail to gross railroad earnings (1898), 2.747.

Just the reverse all the way, and against the Government all the time.

Percentage of increase, 1878-1898, $46,000.
What a 25 per cent reduction in pay to railroads last year would have saved the Government, $8,895,009.

That is official information.

Mr. LOUD. What is the gentleman reading from as official information?

Mr. BELL. I am reading from an article in the Chicago Tribune, taken from the digest of evidence before the joint Congressional commission by Professor Adams, the statistician.

Mr. LOUD. The gentleman does not, certainly, claim that that is official?

Mr. BELL. That paper claims that this was the expert employed, and he made the figures, and publishes it as official.

Mr. LOUD. That is simply the publication of some of the figures and not others.

Mr. TALBERT. Did the gentleman get them from an official document?

Mr. BELL. The documents have not been given out. The Chicago Tribune takes the official figures of the expert and publishes them.

Mr. LOUD. Permit me to say they have not seen them, because the report was not published.

Mr. BELL. They are given in an article of three and one-half columns in the Chicago Tribune.

Mr. LOUD. It is not true.

Mr. BELL. As you are so technical about wanting these things under seal, I will take something now that you can not deny.

Mr. LOUD. That is "Cowles."

Mr. BELL. It is Mr. Cowles's language, giving the conclusions of ex-Postmaster-General Vilas, gathered by Cowles, and I will give you the language. If the Government of the United States or the Post-Office Department would require the railroads of the country to lease their cars for a reasonable percentage, and to carry the mails at the same proportionate rate that they carry freight and passengers, there would be an enormous surplus from year to year.

Now, here is what Mr. Cowles, a very eminent gentleman, said in language extracted from General Vilas, which I will quote:

The difficulties of solving this problem do not diminish with the lapse of time; they steadily increase. The peril to the public is not lessened, but augments yearly. There must be legislation adapted to the conditions of time, or this wretched system, with its inequalities, its injustice, unnecessary expenditure, irritating complications, and risk of signal disaster, must remain a reproach to the Department until some serious misfortune awakens decisive action.

When Mr. Vilas was Postmaster-General he made an urgent appeal to Congress that it should take action against the extortion of railroads in the carriage of the mail, and said that until Congress did this these unfortunate conditions would remain a reproach to the Department until some serious misfortune awakened decisive action.

It seems that the disaster has come; that the extortion from the people does not bring a single complaint from the authorities for relief from the railroads, but they appeal to Congress that the people may be deprived of the choicest literature that the poor have enjoyed for the past twenty years at a nominal cost, but never mention the real cause of the deficiency.

November 26, 1887, Postmaster-General Vilas said to Congress that 432 cars then in the postal service—342 in ordinary use, 90 in reserve—could be bought or their duplicates manufactured for $1,600,000, while the entire annual cost, embracing all necessary labor and ordinary repairs, would not be over $720 for each of the 342 cars in ordinary use, or $246,240, making a total of $1,846,240.

Yet, for the mere use of these cars, including cleaning, etc., the Department was then paying $1,881,580 a year, and the amount demanded for the ensuing year was $2,000,000; this in addition to the 8 cents per pound under the general item of transportation of mails by railroad.

On one line $59,037.75 was annually paid for the use of four cars that could be built and fully equipped in the best modern style for less than $17,500, and this in addition to the full weight pay for transportation, amounting in this case to $504,573.69 annually.

Mr. Vilas estimated that its purchase of its postal cars would save to the Government at least $1,500,000 a year against which the only charge would be the cost of casualties.

It can not be objected—

He said—that the Department is unable to assume the charge of these cars. The Department can easily discharge these functions. It might receive the custody of all the cars in the service and thenceforth care for them on a month's notice.

See general freight and passenger post, page 65 et seq.

In February, 1897, Senator Gorman said, in discussing the railway mail compensation in the Senate:

That the great power of these corporations who control everything, who are powerful enough to make and unmake public men, is so omnipotent that no executive officer has been found in the last twelve years, except in the single case of Postmaster-General Vilas, who has attempted to reduce the compensation for mail transportation, and within six months after he had left the Department every economy which he introduced had been wiped away and the company received not only what they had received before, but their compensation was increased, and never during my long service in this body—except in this one instance, have I known of a Postmaster-General who had made bona fide effort to control this railroad extortion which everyone knows to exist.

The United States Senate—

Near about that time there was a considerable scandal about the padding of the mail and the open fraud perpetrated. During the quadrennial weighing season in March, 1896, upon the Seaboard Air Line, from Portsmouth, Va., to Atlanta, Ga., 300 sacks of documents, with Senators' and Representatives' franks upon them, were sent to various stations in Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, and Georgia. The sacks weighed from 100 to 125 pounds each, and the railroad agents had slips of paper with franks of Senators and Representatives which they evidently used without authority and kept them going over that line of the road so as to be weighed repeatedly; also great piles of newspapers were bought and they were kept going from place to place for weeks for the sole purpose of being weighed fraudulently, as the weight at that time would establish the weight for four years.

Hon. William L. Wilson, Postmaster-General, turned this over to Attorney-General Harmon to prosecute the railroad officials. However, they were strong enough to prevent prosecution. If this had been some weak individual citizen who had robbed the Government out of $25, he would have been pursued with all the power of the Attorney-General's Office until he would have been safely landed in prison.

Can anyone wonder that the ordinary citizen is losing confidence in the disposition of our governing forces to treat all citizens with equal consideration under the law?

While these things were warm the Post-Office Committee of the Senate made some inquiries into the relations of the Second Assistant Postmaster-General to the railroads. They asked Mr. Nelson, the Second Assistant, what he was doing immediately prior to his appointment to the Post-Office Department. He replied that he was the superintendent of the Cincinnati, Hamilton and Dayton Railroad.

Senator CULLOM asked him if his predecessor, J. Lowery Bell, did not also come from one of the great railroads to the Second Assistant Postmaster-General's office. Mr. Nelson replied:

He is the traffic manager of the Central Railroad of New Jersey.

This explained and does explain the helpless condition of the people of the United States. The special interests of the country intrench their officers and employees in the Departments of the Government, and the interest of the public is sacrificed for private gain.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I would like to extend my remarks in the RECORD, as our time is so short.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Without objection, that leave will be granted.

There was no objection.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes more to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. BELL. In addition to paying a rental charge equal to the value of the car per annum, they have to pay 8 cents a pound.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. The gentleman is in error in that.

Mr. BELL. It so states in this book.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Yes; in Mr. Cowles's book; but that is not authority.

Mr. BELL. Now, another thing. It is shown by all good judges that in greater portions of the United States you pay many times as much to carry the mails as you do to carry the express. Why? The express companies, as I understand, give the railroad company 40 per cent of their earnings for the carrying.

Now, our friends say that the express companies underbid the second-class post-office rate for all the short distances. The express companies do underbid them. They carry the express all through New England for from 35 to 47 cents a hundred, and the express companies carry from Ohio and Pennsylvania to the Rocky Mountains for the same price that the railroads will carry the mail. They have underbid them everywhere. Bear in mind that the express companies underbid in their zones. They do not underbid clear across the continent, but for 600 or 1,500 miles they will underbid your 1 cent. The express companies pay a big dividend, and they pay out of this underbid to the railroad just 40 per cent for carriage. Now can you see?

Mr. HILL. Is not that on particular shipments?

Mr. BELL. Yes; where it is necessary for them to bid on this second-class matter to get it. There are two great express companies to be benefited by this bill—the Southern and Adams express companies. They come in and bid against us when we put it down to 1 cent a pound, and they will get your newspapers to carry, and carry them from New York into Chicago for less than 1 cent, and they only get 40 per cent of that—that is, for fourtenths of a cent a pound they carry them from New York to Chicago. When you pass this bill and put these republications on the 8-cent rate, the express will go up with it.

A few days ago I wrote to James Lewis Cowles, of Farmington, Conn., the author of that splendid book, A General Freight and Passenger Post, a graduate of Yale College and an accomplished authority on transportation, for his views on the relation of the express companies to the transmission of the mails, and the following is his reply:

The Loud postal bill should be entitled "A bill in behalf of the express companies and against the public weal."

"Adams Express Company list of offices and tariff from Boston."

This on the front page, and on the rear the following:

Adams Express Company and Southern Express Company constitute the largest express organization in the world; over 50,000 miles and 12,000 offices. And please note the following advertisement: "Business for the offices of the Southern Express Company is forwarded on through waybills on through passenger trains, and at one through rate, and in all respects is treated as though handled by one company."

Now, turning over to page 211 of this most interesting pamphlet, we find, under the heading "Freight classification," this advertisement:

"Newspapers, daily, forwarded on the day of issue, between all points, except in New England, where present local rates (35 to 37 cents per hundred) will be continued. When no wagon service is rendered either in receipt or delivery"—

That is to say, in cases similar to the ordinary mail service—

"and when special mail or newspaper trains are not used, one-half cent per pound for each company carrying."

And since the Adams and Southern express companies handle all express "at one through rate and in all respects as though handled as one company," of course this half a cent a pound covers all the 50,000 miles of this largest express organization in the world "and all its 12,000 offices."

The business manager of the Boston Globe acknowledged to me, indeed, no longer ago than on Thursday, March 15, that this rate of one-half a cent a pound carried Boston dailies all the way through from Boston to Chicago.

And when wagon service is rendered—that is to say, when these daily newspapers are collected and delivered, yes, and insured—even then the tax is but 1 cent a pound.

Newspapers other than daily, which are registered in the United States Post-Office as second-class matter, shipped by publishers and news dealers (other than daily papers) are not so kindly treated as are the dailies by this greatest of all express organizations.

The combined Adams and Southern Express Company find it profitable, however, to carry such papers, provided they are registered in the United States Post-Office as second-class matter, at the following rate: "Between points west of the Ohio and Pennsylvania line"—that is to say, covering all the district between the Ohio-Pennsylvania line and the Pacific Ocean—"for 1 cent a pound"—this, of course, covering collection and delivery as well as insurance, for this is the usual express custom, and there is no extra charge for insurance up to $50—"for 1 cent a pound," the only restriction being that the "minimum charge per package be 5 cents."

And similar rates prevail for all the district in the zone east of the Pennsylvania-Ohio line, including distances all the way from Eastport, Me., to Charleston, S. C.

And then comes this further provision: "Newspapers returned by dealers to shippers may be taken at the same rate, prepaid, applied when forwarded to dealers."

And now we come to that particular portion of second-class matter concerning which the honorable chairman of the House Postal Committee has so much solicitude—periodicals, paper-covered books. (Page 212, Adams Express Company Tariff Book.) "Periodicals which are registered in the United States post-office as second-class matter, shipped by publishers or news-dealers."

On this kind of matter the Adams Express Company makes the following rate:

"Between points west of the Ohio and Pennsylvania line, covering the entire district between the west line of Pennsylvania and the Pacific, 1 cent a pound; minimum charge per package, 5 cents; charges prepaid (as are postal charges); and the only restriction on this service or on the corresponding service for any other kind of registered second-class postal matter is this, the above rates, 1 cent a pound, and the minimum charge are for each company carrying."

And, of course, since the Adams and the Southern Express are one and the same organization, this 1 cent a pound rate covers all the offices of this organization west of the west line of Pennsylvania, and a similar rate of 1 cent a pound covers all the eastern zone east of the west line of Pennsylvania. And please remember that this cent a pound rate covers collection and delivery, and, since no provision is made to the contrary, it also covers an insurance on all the packages carried at 1 cent a pound up to $50.

And there is this further provision, that "periodicals returned by dealers to shippers may be taken at the same rate, prepaid, that applies when forwarded by dealers." And now please bear in mind that these provisions cover all kinds of sample copies and all such works as Messrs. Houghton & Mifflin's Riverside Series.

The only differences between these profitable express rates—for our American express companies are not eleemosynary institutions and they do not advertise for unprofitable business—the only differences between these profitable express services and the corresponding postal services are as follows: While the express companies carry daily newspapers, station to station, within their respective jurisdictions anywhere between the Atlantic and the Pacific coasts (according to their advertisements) for one-half a cent a pound, the Government is not permitted to handle the daily papers at all for less than 1 cent a pound; and as to other second-class matter, the minimum charge of the post-office is 1 cent for the whole country, while that of the express companies is 5 cents for the service of each company within either of the two zones into which the country is divided by the Pennsylvania-Ohio State line.

But this 5-cent minimum charge of the express companies is not always adhered to, and this is a very great advantage to the express companies and to the railroads, who can reduce their rates to even less than 1 cent a pound if they please, as Mr. LOUD says they do please within zones of 500 miles.

On the occasion of the meeting of the Mississippi Valley Medical Association at Louisville, Ky., October 4–8, 1897, the minimum charge was but 1 cent, and this included both collection and delivery between all points covered by the Ohio-Pennsylvania line on the east and the Rocky Mountains on the west and the city of Louisville.

Again, let it be remembered that the express rates cover insurance. The post-office, on the other hand, insures only first-class matter and that only up to $10; it makes no collections and only delivers in the free-delivery cities.

It may be seriously questioned whether, on the whole, the express companies do not perform the greater service on second-class matter. They must do so, indeed, or they would not get the business. The advantage of the uniform cent-a-pound rate of the post-office is this, that it places the whole country in one zone and it treats everybody alike, and most of all, it is stable—not changeable at the whim of a single individual. It gives equal service to all news dealers and publishers.

The one grand cause of the prevailing postal deficiences is the unconscionable tax levied by the railroads on the Government through their agents in Congress. The railroads tax the Government, in addition to their charge for the rental of postal cars, over 5 cents a pound for a service which the express companies advertise to render the daily newspapers for 5 mills a pound, and which the Eastern railroads render to the daily newspapers for a charge 20 per cent less than this express rate.

If Congress will force the railroads to serve the post-office on the same terms which the express companies serve the daily newspapers, instead of deficiency in the postal revenues there will be a large surplus, and the cent-a-pound rate on second-class matter will largely contribute to that surplus.

The truth is that so long as postal cars continue to be owned by private railroad corporations the basis of compensation should be space, not weight. This was the contention of Vice-President Clough, of the Great Northern Railroad, last winter, and Mr. Clough is right.

"What costs the company in the performance of the mail service," said Mr. Clough, "is not the weight of the mail hauled, but the car space afforded. The expense for running a passenger train or a car in a passenger train is almost exactly the same to the company whether it be full or empty. Whatever occupies space in a car or train puts the same cost upon the company, whether it be light or heavy, up to the limit of weight which the space is able to safely carry."

The adoption of Mr. Clough's suggestion as a basis for railway mail pay would be a very great improvement upon the present system. It would practically put an end to such frauds as those discovered on the Seaboard Air Line in 1896. And as to the right basis for the payment for car space we have some very interesting testimony.

Mr. Hoar, counsel for the New York Central, Boston and Albany syndicate, tells us that a rate of about 6 cents a car mile, $30 a car for the haul of 500 miles, Buffalo to Boston, yields a profit of $5 a car (one-half a cent a bushel on a thousand bushels of grain) on grain carried by the great fast freights of that combination. If this be true, and Mr. Hoar ought to speak the truth when he speaks before a legislative committee, then surely 12 cents a car mile ought to be good pay for a railway postal car, and a corresponding payment for any amount of space used would be good payment for that space.

According to the estimates of Edward C. Boynton, given in the Railway Review, of Chicago, of March 10, 1900, page 136, the cost of operation of a three-car passenger steam train under the best conditions ought not to be over 30 cents per mile or 10 cents per car mile, and of course if there were more cars in a train, the cost would be proportionately lower. And Mr. Boynton goes on to say that with electricity applied to this service this cost may be reduced to 14 cents, or less 5 cents per car mile.

I hope the members of this House will fully realize the injury they are doing to every stationery store in every struggling country settlement in this land when they vote for this bill.

I hope they will realize the injury they are doing to every ambitious boy and girl in every class of English literature in every high school in every country settlement in the United States when they raise the price to them on every paper-bound book that is used in the class room.

I hope they will realize what they are doing to every poor lover of literature in the country settlements when they raise this tax on them needlessly while at the same time sitting here and knowingly permitting the great railroad combinations of the country to extort every nickel that they add to these books when they raise the price which will in many cases equal the price now charged for the publication; and every cent of that raise will go into the well-filled coffers of these express companies, who will not carry these paper-covered and stitched books at 1 cent a pound, but will immediately raise the rate to the same as they now charge for bound books.

You will be entitled to the thanks and plaudits of the express companies and to none others.

Mr. F. M. Lupton, of New York, says he sells certain works of Bulwer, Scott, Thackeray, Hawthorne, and George Eliot now at 3 cents each, and if this bill passes that the increase on the transportation alone will amount to more than the present cost of these publications.

One of the protesting publishers very cogently says:

The passage of this bill will render it impossible to mail the bulk of publications which now enjoy the privileges of second-class matter at 1 cent a pound, unless the prices of the same are increased to the public to cover the extra postal charges which will be involved under the proposed law, and of course increased prices to the public will necessarily mean a large curtailment in the output.

At the present time the news dealers of the country are enabled, by the liberality of the postal laws, to maintain agencies in every community where the popular journals and magazines can be procured, a convenience which can scarcely be estimated highly enough to the residents of the small towns, full of intelligent and reading people, scattered over the Eastern, Western, and Southern States. Any blow at these news agencies is a blow at the cheap magazines, the daily press, and the illustrated journals, which, outside of great cities, make their way to the homes of the people through the local agents and the mails.

Mr. MOON. I now yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HENRY].

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, this bill is hostile to the educational interests of the country. There is here such a restriction placed upon the press and educational interests that I feel that every man ought to assert himself and show to the country where he stands on this question. We have received protests, Mr. Speaker, from the presidents of colleges, from newspaper men, and from historical associations throughout the entire land protesting against the passage of this bill. The argument of the advocates of this bill, and it is about the only argument that they have offered, is that it is expensive and brings a deficit to the Government.

Mr. Speaker, I hold that the advantages that the present law offers to the people are paramount to the expenditures which are brought to the Government, and on that account it should receive from us such consideration as it deserves. I am not one of those who believe that educational interests should be stifled because a department is not paying expenses; but when you can send literature throughout the land, put choice literature within the reach of the common people, and by that I mean the poor people of the country, it is, in my opinion, money well spent. The educational advantages offered are paramount to the expenditure. It goes to the people and builds up the educational interest of the country.

And we had better spend it in that way than by making free donations to Puerto Rico, a part of our territory, from whom we withhold constitutional rights. This literature goes into every household and is read by many people who are unable to buy the more costly bound books. Thousands of people read these books who could not enjoy them if they had to purchase them in costly bindings of morocco or cloth.

But the advocates of this bill claim that much which is bad and of no merit is carried through the mails with the good literature under the present law. This I grant. Almost every law is abused. But the question is, Does this bill relieve this trouble? Under it the "yellow" literature may be carried at second-class rates—the Police Gazette and other objectionable papers to which reference has been made by the gentleman who preceded me—while we are to exclude from the mail that class of healthy literature which goes into the homes and colleges of our people.

Mr. Speaker, I want to know—and I have asked the question of the chairman of the committee—upon what theory did the committee, in section 4 of this bill, grant the second-class privilege to benevolent or fraternal societies, trade unions or orders organized on the lodge system, and withhold this privilege from historical associations and institutions of learning? The gentleman fails to give me a reply. I beg him to tell me why it was the committee had seen fit to grant benefits in favor of these associations and withhold from educational institutions that to which they are equally entitled. I propose at the proper time to offer an amendment to that section of the bill; and on this subject I ask the Clerk to read a letter which I have received from the chancellor of the University of Mississippi.

The Clerk read as follows:

UNIVERSITY OF MISSISSIPPI, CHANCELLOR'S OFFICE.
University, Miss., March 5, 1900.

DEAR SIR: I beg to call your attention and, through you, the attention of other members of Congress from this State to a bill now pending, introduced by Mr. LOUD on January 20, 1900 (H. R. 6071), to amend the postal laws relating to second-class postal matter. This bill affects institutions of learning and will seriously hamper them in carrying out a policy which many have inaugurated for the benefit of the public.

Many universities are publishing quarterly or oftener magazines which include much of the best thought of the professors and advanced workers in the university. Such publications are issued for the purpose of disseminating useful information, and serve to carry the best thought of the institution to thinkers outside of its walls. At the same time, of course, the work of the institution is shown and commended to the public.

As far as such institutions are affected, and as far as "historical or scientific societies" are affected, a blow is aimed at the dissemination of knowledge and the means of culture which I am sure would not be intended if the matter were thoroughly understood. Our State historical society, which has its headquarters here and to which our legislature has just voted $2,000 for the issue of bulletins and papers, will be seriously hampered in its work if this bill becomes a law.

We are planning at the University of Mississippi to issue quarterly or oftener a periodical which shall commend the work of this institution to the public and be the means of giving publicity to the best thought of our professors. Many universities are doing the same thing. All such work will be seriously crippled if the above-mentioned bill should become law.

I beg, therefore, that you will look carefully into the matter and will urge your colleagues from this State to do the same, and that you will be able to prevent the injury to the dissemination of learning which is threatened.

Yours, very truly,

R. B. FULTON.

Hon. PAT. HENRY, Washington, D. C.

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. That comes to me from the chancellor of the University of Mississippi; a great institution of learning; an institution which sends out through the country papers undertaking to show the educational advantages offered by that institution, undertaking to show why the people should send their children there to be educated; a State university; yet, sir, under this bill the papers issued from that university are excluded from second-class matter, while the bill permits trade unions to send through the mails any matter which they seek to promulgate.

I do not understand—and while I was on the floor I begged the chairman of the committee to inform me, but he refused or failed to do so—why he makes a discrimination against institutions of learning in behalf of benevolent associations, trade unions, and other associations instituted under the lodge system. I have never gotten any reply. Before we embarked upon the sea of imperialism America and American statesmen paid more attention to education, to its advantages and to its dissemination, than they did to the circulation of articles and doctrines promulgated by benevolent institutions and trade unions or orders organized under the lodge system.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MOON. Does the gentleman from Mississippi desire more time?

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. Yes; only a few moments.

Mr. MOON. I yield the gentleman five minutes.

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Speaker, I asked the gentleman from California, the chairman of the committee, whether he would accept an amendment to insert in that part of the bill, section 4, page 3, line 16, after the word "persons," the words "or historical societies or incorporated institutions of learning." He said he would not do so; and he asked me whether I would support the bill if he did. I replied that I would not say I would unless he would accept other amendments which I desired to offer at the proper time. Now, as to the restrictions on the press.

Mr. Speaker, there is no man here who has not recognized the potency of the country press. There is no man here with any experience of newspaper matters who does not know that newspaper editors can not afford to be hampered by a 50 per cent restriction in the circulation of sample papers, nor by the 500-copy limitation provided by this bill. I want to know, how can you build up a country paper without sending out sample copies? This is necessary in order to get subscribers. Yet you restrict them, and require a voluntary subscription list. I will, therefore, at the proper time move an amendment to strike out that section pertaining to "sample copies," believing, as I do, that it is an unnecessary restriction and tending to cripple the country press.

I believe the law should stand as it is and that each paper should be permitted to send out as "sample copies" as many of its papers as it deems proper. The country newspaper is the educator of the community where it circulates. It goes into every home. It enlightens the community in regard to the current issues of the day. The people look forward to its coming with eager expectation.

Now, I appeal to you, Mr. Chairman, to know for what reason you propose to stifle this institution. The newspaper is the very bulwark of our liberty, and any restriction placed upon its dissemination but retards our progress and fetters our people. Mr. Speaker, in the name of these papers, I protest, and I will, at the proper time, offer an amendment to strike out that part of this bill restricting sample copies.

Now, so far as the cost is concerned, it goes to our people. They are satisfied with it, they are not complaining against it, and it is better for us that these educational advantages should go forth among the people than that we should cut them off in their hour of usefulness. This bill should be defeated.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOON. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. STOKES].

Mr. STOKES. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to this bill upon the broad ground that in its operation, if enacted into law, it will necessarily prove destructive to large vested interests in this country—interests that have been built up under the provisions of the law as it now exists. The law as it stands was enacted upon the idea that the Government of the United States could not adopt any policy which would be more contributory to the development of the material and intellectual interests of this country than by encouraging in every way the circulation of news and literature. What are these large vested interests that have grown up under the fostering care of the law as it stands?

We have the large publishing houses of this country presenting to the school interests of the United States the choicest specimens of American and English literature. This has been demonstrated over and over again in this discussion and in previous discussions, and samples of these works have been exhibited upon this floor. They are doing a legitimate work. It is a profitable work, a work that has been developed by the best brain and nerve, the ripest scholarship and thought, of the universities and publishing houses of the country. There is scarcely a school in the United States that is not the direct beneficiary of the system built up under the existing law.

Not only that, Mr. Speaker, but the great rural press of this country owes its existence as a potent factor in the politics and progress of the country to the provisions of the existing law. I want to say, in behalf of that great factor in the advancement and progress of the nation, that it has contributed more, I believe, to the material upbuilding of the country than perhaps any other one agency throughout our broad land. The country newspaper published weekly, under the privileges accorded by the existing law, has been enabled to reach down into the very remotest sections of our country, districts that before were rarely visited by any newspaper at all, and rarely, if ever, brought in touch with the broader, better thought of the world. I say that has become a vested right, just as the privilege enjoyed by the great publishing houses has become a vested right, and the vested right in each case has inured to the benefit of the great reading masses of the country, the poor people who are not able to buy bound volumes, in most cases.

Not only that, Mr. Speaker. We come now to consider the reasons why this existing law should be changed, if it should be changed. We are told by the chairman of the committee who presents this bill——

Mr. McPHERSON. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. STOKES. Yes.

Mr. McPHERSON. I wish you would tell the House wherein the country newspaper in any twelve months, if this bill becomes a law, will be injured to the extent of a 5-cent piece? Will you, upon the other hand, not tell wherein the country newspaper will be very much benefited by the passage of this bill? The gentleman seems to think the country newspaper will be ruined by this bill if it becomes a law. I challenge every word of the gentleman's statement.

Mr. STOKES. Does not the gentleman admit that it takes away certain privileges that the country newspaper now enjoys?

Mr. McPHERSON. Not a thing on this earth, and no man who has read this bill carefully will make that statement.

Mr. STOKES. Why, the gentleman has evidently not read the terms of the bill.

Mr. McPHERSON. I have not only read it, but I was on the committee that reported it and have studied it carefully, and I challenge every word that the gentleman says when he says this bill is an attack upon the country newspapers.

Mr. STOKES. If I had the time, I should like to read the terms of the bill for the instruction of the gentleman.

Mr. McPHERSON. I will give you thirty minutes of my time to answer that question.

Mr. STOKES. In the first place, it limits the sample copies which these papers are allowed to send out. It seems to me that is taking away a privilege that they now enjoy.

A MEMBER. Only a part.

Mr. STOKES. Only a part, but to that extent it impairs the privilege which they now enjoy.

Mr. DOLLIVER. How many does it allow?

Mr. STOKES. It limits it to 500 at the outside, and to 50 per cent of the bona fide subscription list. On the other hand, as to the circulation of newspapers inside of the county of publication, as I understand, that is also limited.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. The gentleman is mistaken about that.

Mr. STOKES. Then it is the circulation outside of the county. That is what I meant to say.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. The gentleman has stated all the curtailments of the privileges of newspapers under this bill—the limitation of the sample copies.

Mr. STOKES. That is sufficient to establish the contention that I make. It does discriminate; it does take away privileges which the newspapers now enjoy.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Simply as to the sample copies. It limits the number to 500.

Mr. STOKES. That is a very valuable privilege, and hence it is a discrimination against the country newspaper. I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that there are other vested rights which have accrued to the people who read the country newspapers, to the people who read the Riverside Press, to the people who read the choice literature that is sent out and has been sent out under the auspices of existing law. I say it is a vested right, because the people have been taught to look to the Government to convey this choice literature at a very cheap rate, by allowing its transmission through the mails at a nominal rate of postage. What is the proposed reason for the change? As I was saying, the able chairman of this committee has given us the reason, and I want to say as a tribute to that gentleman that his conduct on this floor on many occasions has been such as to secure for any proposition that comes from him the respect of every member, or at least command our careful examination.

But what is the reason which he offered? He says it is because there is a deficit in the Post-Office revenues. He says that this deficit is due to abuses existing under the present law.

Mr. LOUD. If the gentleman will excuse me, I did not raise that question at all. I do not consider it an argument of any particular value. I did not deal with that phase of the question.

Mr. STOKES. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I respect him too much to misrepresent him. That position has been taken by others who occupy the same relation to this measure that the chairman of the committee does. I want to ask, Mr. Speaker, how long it has been, and why it should be under any circumstances, that the Post-Office Department alone, of all the Departments of this Government, should be selected to be made self-sustaining?

You do not ask that of your War Department. You do not expect the Navy Department to be self-sustaining. You do not expect the Department of Agriculture to be self-sustaining. But when you come to the Post-Office Department, that Department alone of all the Departments of this Government which comes into direct touch with every individual citizen of the Government, then you want to apply the rule which will compel it to be self-sustaining. For my part, Mr. Speaker, I can not see the justice of that proposition. I believe that the Post-Office Department should be run in the interest of the entire people of the country, that they are entitled to the best possible service, and that the question of cost is secondary. I believe that the test which should be required in every Department should be a universal test, and that should be the attainment of the best possible service to accomplish the end which the Government had in view in the establishment of that service.

As I was saying, Mr. Speaker, when interrupted by the gentleman from California, there is no reason why that department of the Government which touches every individual citizen, the humblest citizen in the remotest hamlet, should be held up and required to pay its way.

There is a deficit in the revenues of the Post-Office Department, but it is an annually decreasing deficit; and now, when the vanishing point of that deficit is well-nigh in sight, it is proposed by this bill to wipe out at one stroke the accrued benefits of a generation of beneficent administrations.

I am here to assert that there is no justification for this radical action, even if that deficit were due, demonstrated to be due, to the abuses practiced under the privilege of second-class mail matter. But is it due to that privilege? Is the deficiency complained of due to the abuses of the second-class matter privilege? Right here, Mr. Speaker, I want to say that there are none of the abuses complained of that require radical general legislation of the sweeping character proposed by this bill. There is not an abuse now practiced upon the Department that can not be eradicated by a departmental order. Why, then, disturb general conditions which are generally conceded to be beneficial?

But I contend that the deficiency of the postal revenues is not due exclusively to second-class mail matter. More than that, I am sure that there are other leaks far more potent in a contributory way to the result. Chief among these is the enormous demands made by the railroads of the country. I ask the attention of the House to some figures.

The railroads of the country are drawing from the Treasury of the United States for carrying mails something like $38,000,000 a year in the aggregate. This means that the Government is paying at the rate of $40 per ton per 100 miles for transportation of its mails. Do they earn it? Certainly not, when we compare this rate with the rates which the same railroads charge for other classes of transportation.

The most carefully compiled statistics demonstrate that these same railroads are carrying passengers at the rate of $20 per ton for the same unit of distance. These same railroads charge the express companies only $4 per ton per 100 miles, while they carry the freight for an average of 82 cents per ton. This, in turn, means 6.58 cents per pound for mail, while the charge for express is only 6 mills per pound. This is a bad enough showing by comparison, surely.

But this is not all, Mr. Speaker. Besides all this, not content with drawing twice as much for transportation of mail as they do for passenger transportation and ten times as much as they charge for express transportation, they draw $6,250 a year rental for postal cars, cars which cost to build not exceeding $4,000 apiece at the outside, and some not more than $2,500. It seems incredible, Mr. Speaker, but that is the frozen truth.

Now, I maintain that if this single leak is stopped, there would be no deficit in the postal revenues. If the railroads were compelled to carry the mails at the same rates they carry other classes of matter, the saving in the one item alone would wipe out the only respectable excuse for this legislation. Why attack this minor abuse, if it be an abuse, and ignore the greater abuse? Why the anxiety to stamp out that entire branch of the system which touches in a beneficent way the great masses of the poor people, while no attempt is made to choke off the vampire railroads that are sucking the substance of the people and impoverishing the system?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. STOKES. I ask leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

Mr. MOON. I desire to yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN].

Mr. BROWN. Mr. Speaker, I had not thought of making any remarks at this time upon this bill, but the challenge of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. MCPHERSON], so vehemently made to the House, so defiantly thrown out, induces me so say a word at this moment. I understand that the gentleman from Iowa called upon any member of the House, and particularly upon the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. STOKES], who was then on the floor, to show how this bill, if enacted into law, would do any harm whatever to the country newspaper.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have been hunting a way to support this bill, because I recognize the fact that here is a considerable abuse, perhaps we ought to say a great abuse, that ought to be remedied, but so far I can not find the way; and when the gentleman from Iowa so defiantly challenged any member here to show how this bill, if made a law, will be a detriment to the country newspapers, I felt like accepting his challenge and responding to it at once.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I should be glad to have the gentleman do so.

Mr. BROWN. If the gentleman is as fair a man as I take him to be, I think I can satisfy him that here is a proposed injury to the country newspaper. I do not care to indulge in any fulsome eulogy of the country newspaper. The country newspapers and their editors will take care of themselves. They are entirely competent to do so.

But it is a fact, Mr. Speaker, that the editors of the country newspapers are not pleased with this proposition. One of the reasons is the curtailment of the number of sample copies which they may transmit in the mails. Now let us see about the challenge of the gentleman from Iowa. Let us take the case of a country newspaper that has only 300 subscribers; and, Mr. Speaker, unfortunate as it may be, there are a great many country newspapers that do not have more than three or, say, five hundred subscribers. What is it that is given by this bill to the publisher of that kind of a newspaper, if he has 300 subscribers and is publishing his little paper out in some nice village? What is he told? He is told that the utmost limit of sample copies that he may circulate through the mails is 150 copies.

Now, I submit to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. MCPHERSON] whether or not that may not operate to that publisher as an injury. I claim that it can, and that it will. It is not often, perhaps, that a country publisher, with an issue of 500, would desire to print more than 250 extra copies; but sometimes, as I undertook to point out once before, in the last Congress, when this bill or a similar proposition was before the House, the country publisher wants free access to and free use of the mails for all the sample copies he desires to send out; and he does not want to be limited to 50 per cent of his regular subscription list. That is one place where this bill would be an injury to the country publishers in the district so ably represented by the gentleman from Iowa who hurled over our heads this fierce challenge a few moments ago.

Mr. MCPHERSON. It was not fierce. I simply wanted you to hear it.

Mr. BROWN. I was sitting close by the member, and it shook me up considerably. I do not know what effect it had on the balance of the House. [Laughter.] I want to call attention to another thing that I have not heard referred to in this discussion, and I say that it is another instance where an injury is liable to be done to the country publisher. I would like to have the attention especially of the gentleman from Iowa to this matter. This bill defines the conditions upon which a publication may be admitted to the second class. There are a number of these conditions.

Now, I call the gentleman's attention to the fourth condition, one of the conditions on which a publication may get into this second class. One of the things which the publisher must show when he buys his little hand press or his cylinder press, as the case may be, and rents an office in the gentleman's district and buys new type and starts out to publish a good little newspaper—one of the things he must do, one of the conditions he must comply with before he can get into this second-class rate, is to show that his newspaper has a legitimate list of subscribers. Now, I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that it seems to me that the gentleman who framed this bill and the committee reporting it had a very erroneous and inadequate appreciation of the manner in which a newspaper is ordinarily started.

Mr. LOUD. Will the gentleman yield to me right there?

Mr. BROWN. Why, certainly.

Mr. LOUD. Do you not know we only repeat the present law? The language is very specific that he can not be admitted unless he has a legitimate list of subscribers; and the Department refuse utterly to admit any paper to that privilege that circulates more than 50 per cent of sample copies.

Mr. BROWN. I do not know at this moment what the language of the present law is. I know what the practice has been, and I understand it is a practice that the gentleman is trying to reform.

Mr. LOUD. No paper was ever admitted under this privilege since the privilege was extended that did not have a list of subscribers.

Mr. BROWN. I will say to the gentleman from California, with all respect for his honesty, his age, his great ability, and his devotion to the public interests, that he has provided in this bill that the new newspaper must have a list of legitimate subscribers before it can be admitted to the second-class privilege.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. If the gentleman will permit me, this is the language of statute law, and under the practice of the Department he must have a subscription list.

Mr. BROWN. I know what the practice has been, because I have been part of the practice myself.

Mr. SPERRY. Then you have laid yourself liable to a penalty?

Mr. BROWN. I have not. I have started new newspapers, unfortunately for myself.

Mr. PAYNE. Would it have been more unfortunate for the people if you had not?

Mr. BROWN. Under provisions like this I could not well have made a beginning.

Mr. PAYNE. Oh, I think you could.

Mr. BROWN. No; I think not. I want to call the attention of the gentleman to this further: Here is a man who has already commenced work in the publication of a new newspaper. Now, he is to be told by this bill that he is not entitled to second-class privilege until he has a legitimate list of subscribers. When does a man subscribe for a newspaper? He does not do it unseen, as the boys trade jackknives. He subscribes after he sees the paper.

Mr. PAYNE. In my locality, when a man wants to start a newspaper, he first goes around and gets a list of subscribers.

Mr. BROWN. Oh, a man's personal friends will subscribe, but he can not go out among the public and get subscribers to a paper not yet issued.

Mr. PAYNE. Very often they can get subscriptions better before it is issued than they can afterwards. [Laughter.]

Mr. BROWN. That may be so of some of the newspapers in the gentleman's district, but it is not so in all districts. Now, I say, Mr. Speaker, whether this is old law or new law, it is wrong; it is unfair; and the tendency is to prevent the starting of new and legitimate newspapers.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LOUD. I will yield the gentleman five minutes more to answer this question.

Mr. BROWN. Very well.

Mr. LOUD. The gentleman is familiar with newspaper business, and I ask him if he ever got a paper admitted without subscribing to an affidavit or statement setting forth certain answers to questions asked by the Department?

Mr. BROWN. I never did.

Mr. LOUD. And you swore to it, did you not?

Mr. BROWN. I did swear to it, and I told the truth every time. [Laughter.]

Mr. LOUD. And you swore to this statement that every newspaper man has been compelled to fill out for a generation?

Mr. BROWN. What statement?

Mr. LOUD. Well, one is as to the list of subscribers.

Mr. BROWN. Well, suppose I answered "Ten."

Mr. LOUD. Then you would have ten subscribers, would you not?

Mr. BROWN. Yes; I would have ten; but who is to determine whether ten is a "legitimate list?" What do you say in this bill? You say that the publisher shall not be entitled to admission to second-class rates until he has a "legitimate list" of subscribers. What on earth is a "legitimate list" of subscribers? Is it ten, or fifty, or five hundred, or a thousand? While the gentlemen are establishing with much travail and labor an act that is to cover these defects and deficiencies, why leave a provision like that in the bill? A legitimate list! Will not the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY] tell me what a "legitimate list" is for a newspaper?

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. It is just what it has been for a generation—since the law has been in effect.

Mr. BROWN. Your bill does not reform the law much. I say it with great regard for the gentleman, but it seems to me an absurdity. I say this ought to be the rule in relation to the admission of newspapers to second-class privileges, that the Post-Office Department ought to be satisfied, and the publisher ought to be willing to satisfy the Post-Office Department, that he is going to publish a legitimate newspaper; but to say to him that he must have a legitimate list of subscribers to an unborn newspaper seems to me to be a very ridiculous thing.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. BROWN. Certainly.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Why is it any more difficult to prove a legitimate list of subscribers than it is to prove a legitimate newspaper?

Mr. BROWN. Well, we know what a legitimate newspaper is. It shows for itself. It is one that has news or literature in it. It has matter in it that constitutes it a legitimate newspaper. But here is a range between one and one million as to what shall constitute a legitimate list of subscribers.

Now, I want to say to the gentleman from Iowa here is another place in this bill where it is proposed to do an injury to the country publisher of a legitimate newspaper. Mr. Speaker, I did not intend to take part in this discussion at all, and I only speak now upon these two points; but I say to you that the country publisher is jealous of his rights, as he ought to be; he is jealous of the privileges he has enjoyed, as he ought to be, and he looks with some concern upon this proposition to curtail the number of sample copies he may issue, and upon this section which provides that if he wants to go out into a new field and start a newspaper he is to be held up and made to show, first, before he has demonstrated what he can do, before he has sent forth a single issue, that he has already a legitimate list of subscribers. I think this is unjust and absurd.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, I now yield to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HENRY C. SMITH] such time as he may need.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Mr. Speaker, the general principles of the Loud bill are right and should pass into law. There are some changes which I think should be made and which I shall urge. At the same time I want to speak for the general bill also.

We are advised that the post-office departments in other countries yield a surplus instead of shortage. The net profit of the department in the British Kingdom is about $18,000,000, while the deficit here is seldom less than $7,000,000. The reports of the Postmaster-General for the past several years, regardless of political affiliation, show that all the shortage originates in the carrying of second-class matter; that it costs the Government about 8 cents per pound to carry mail matter of the second class, and a charge of only 1 cent per pound is made; that it costs the Government somewhat over $20,000,000 a year to carry the second-class matter, which yields an income to the Government of only about $4,000,000, which would leave a shortage of, in the neighborhood of, $15,000,000 per year on the transportation of mail matter of the second class. The deficit is not this much from year to year, because this is made up from the profits on mail of the first, third, and fourth classes.

There has been a unanimous desire by the representatives of this Department to bring the Department to a paying business basis. The claim for many years was made that if the Post-Office Department were removed from the domain of politics and conducted like any ordinary business, that the result would be a surplus instead of a shortage.

In the course of time public sentiment brought about civil-service reform. For the past several years no complaint has been heard that the service was injured or harmed by reason of being controlled by politics. Indeed this Department has been even almost entirely removed from the domain of politics, until its servants hold their positions at pleasure. Yet the civil service, with all its efficiency and inefficiency, has failed to decrease the growing deficit.

Postmaster-Generals, in each report from 1887 down, have insisted and shown that the shortage occurs in the loss upon the carrying of second-class matter. Indeed, we do not find this statement anywhere denied. It seems to be conceded that here is the fault; the claim is made, and persistently has been made, that the trouble largely exists from an advantage received by certain classes under the existing law.

Postmaster-General Smith in his last report states as follows:

For this costly abuse, which drags on the Department and weighs down the service, trammels its power and mars effective advancement in every direction, involves a sheer wanton waste of $20,000,000, or upward a year. The postal deficit for the ensuing year is $6,610,770.

But for this wrongful application of the second-class rates, instead of a deficit there would be a clear surplus of many millions. The wrongs, which have proved so injurious, were never contemplated by Congress; they are wholly outside the intent of the law; they are directly in contravention of its spirit, and have become possible only through the evasion and distortion of its letter.

Careful inquiry has been made through experienced postmasters and by examination of the records of the Department, and it is believed that fully one-half of all the matter mailed as second class and paid for at the pound rate is not properly second class within the intent of the law and ought justly to be paid for at the third-class rate.

It is a gross and manifest wrong that a particular and limited group of private interests, using the mails solely for their own business ends and with no public object, direct or incidental, should thus succeed in eluding the plain purpose of the law and should thus carry on their mail transactions, not at their own expense, but at the expense of others. If there is to be a favored class, let it embrace all the people.

Postmaster-General Wilson and others have taken substantially the same position. The trouble seems to be that by degrees the officials of the Department have placed constructions upon the existing law and have sanctioned and overlooked evasions thereof so long and to such extent that the aim of those using the mail in the second class seems to be to evade rather than obey the law.

This has gone on to that extent that one publisher, in his arguments submitted against this bill, insists and states that the present law was enacted for the sole purpose and with the view single to the furthering and assisting of his business of publishing serial libraries. It seems to me that this is a bad example to place before the rising generation, the fact that certain publishers can evade the law and obtain a favorable construction thereof, thus robbing the multitude of $20,000,000 a year. And it is strange that petitions should be filed urging the continuation of such a law. There can be but one reason for this, and that a lack of understanding of the situation.

A law that can not be enforced, either because in advance of sentiment or because of its indefiniteness or uncertainty, should be wiped from the statute books. Good laws, fairly interpreted and vigorously enforced, are the safeguards of the nation.

I was led to investigate this bill, first, by having my attention called thereto by the honorable Third Assistant Postmaster-General, who comes from my State and who is my good neighbor, and, second, by a circular which I received, giving nine reasons why the bill should not pass. This came to me from a classmate, a man of high standing and ability, the editor and proprietor of a leading newspaper in my State, and a man high in the councils of his party. He remarked and commented upon such of the reasons as he thought valid. Since then all members have received many similar circulars, numerously signed.

The time and place of birth and the parentage of this protest are surrounded with as much mystery, if not gloom, as the authorship of the "Payne Puerto Rican bill." The man who signed the protest alone fathers it. There is nothing upon it to show from whence it came, where it was printed, or in whose interest. While there is a claim therein that this bill is harmful to labor, still this fatherless waif has not even the union label upon it, and is a "scab" sheet making appeal to honest toil.

For my own information, I submitted this circular to Mr. Madden and asked him what answer could be made thereto. His answer to the positions taken is so complete that I adopt the same as a part of my argument, as follows:

First. In citing objections to the passage of the bill the petition says:

"It excludes from the mails as second-class mail matter all 'books or reprints of books,' by which is meant all paper-covered books issued periodically, which have done so much to popularize cheap and good literature among the masses of the people, placing the choicest works of literature and science within the reach of the humblest schoolboy, and according to our people an intellectual privilege such as was never enjoyed by the citizens of any other country. The bill, if enacted, will crush out of existence this class of periodicals most completely and effectually."

Comment: This claim will not stand reason. The effect of the bill on books and reprints of books will be merely that of increasing the postage rate 7 cents per pound. Now, assuming that the alleged periodicals (books) average four copies to the pound, which is believed to be a fair estimate, the increased cost to the consumer on account of increased cost of transportation in the mails can not be more than 2 cents per copy. This increase of 2 cents in the cost of a book is scarcely likely, in this day of prosperity and plenty for the people of our country, to deprive the "humblest schoolboy," or for that matter any other person, from obtaining such literature if he wants it. No rational person can believe that an increase of 2 cents in the price of a book which can now be purchased at from 10 cents to 25 cents will "crush out of existence this class of periodicals," as claimed in the petition.

As a matter of fact, the passage of the bill is not at all likely to affect in the least the price of such books. The effect will be to reduce the profits of the publishers, but scarcely enough to cause them to raise the price to the people. On the other hand, the cost of transportation will be lifted from the Department and placed upon the publisher.

The magazines of the day, which are devoted to miscellaneous current topics, should not be confused with these book serials which are intended to be excluded from the second class of mail matter by the terms of the Loud bill. In the case of the first mentioned, the present law and the Loud bill both intend to foster them by continuance of the favored postage rate. The latter, by technical compliance with the requirements of the law, have crept in and taken advantage of a rate of postage intended for miscellaneous current literature.

Not one reader in a dozen knows that these books belong to a "library series" as distinguished from other books that do not purport to be issued as periodicals. They are story books, usually one story to each book. The name of the book, The Life of Jesse James, for instance, is how the public knows it; but in some out-of-the way corner is the name, "Union Library Series—Published monthly," under which title only it is known in the Post-Office Department records. Prominence is given the name of the book and not the series to which the publication belongs; and they have few or no subscribers such as exist in the case of magazines. They are sold like other books, over the newsdealer's counter.

In the case of a popular story 100,000 copies may not supply the demand for the issue, while 10 per cent of that number may supply the demand for the next issue which contains a less popular story. There is no steady circulation to regular subscribers, as in the case of magazines. If the publisher has misjudged the public appetite for his book, and supplied the news agents throughout the country with 10 for 1 that can be sold, the Government must, under the present law, transport them first to news agents and then back again to the place of publication, at a considerable loss upon every pound on every mailing. It is the fashion of those publishers to reason that the great public is benefited wonderfully by the cheap rate at which they are enabled to transport books throughout the country to news stands. If they do not sell them at one place, they can, without much cost, be shipped to another in search of a purchaser, and perhaps several are tried before they are returned "unsold" to the office of publication through the news agency.

It may not be inappropriate to say that it is by no means a limited judgment that the public morals would be promoted and the intellectual education of the masses advanced by the enactment of any law which will tend to limit or restrict the circulation of this alleged "good literature." Those who favor the maintenance of the pound rate of postage to cheapen and facilitate the circulation of "good literature" overlook the fact that the proportion of impure, harmful, and unwholesome matter comprised in this so-called "cheap and good literature" greatly exceeds the pure matter. Although there are a few "pure literature" library series, there are legions upon legions of the veriest trash; and if the passage of the Loud bill will place such beyond the reach of the "humblest schoolboy," the author of the bill must go down to history a public benefactor.

Second. The petition says:

"It excludes from the mails as second-class mail matter all 'sample copies' of newspapers and periodicals, thus depriving all publications of one of the most valuable means, not only of extending their circulation, but of securing new subscribers to take the place of those who die or drop out for various causes. It will, therefore, cause the general depletion of newspaper circulation by subscription."

Comment: If a poll could be taken, it is believed that a majority of the bona fide newspapers and magazines of the country would vote for the entire elimination of the sample-copy privilege. Standard publications seldom avail themselves of it. Investigation would disclose that those publishers who object to the bill because it proposes to deprive them of sending samples live and thrive upon heavy free circulation; and this free-matter privilege, and the abuse of it which is constantly perpetrated, injures the bona fide, standard, and established publications by diverting both subscriptions and advertising, especially the latter. There might be less reason for cutting off the sample copies if all publishers would deal honestly with the Department.

One of the abuses of the sample-copy privilege is that some publishers will give to advertising patrons and purchasers of their publications the pound rate of postage, which belongs to them only by virtue of their being publishers, by accepting lists of names from advertisers and purchasers and sending out alleged "samples" to the names so furnished at the pound rate. The purpose is to secure the circulation of an advertisement or a "write-up" of the purchaser or of his business and not to furnish to the addressee a bona fide sample copy of the publication, with a view to securing his subscription, as contemplated by law. The copies so sent out by the publisher are as much the property of the purchaser as though he took them away from the office of publication and offered them for mailing himself, when the rate of postage would be 1 cent for each 4 ounces, or 4 cents a pound—four times what the publisher pays the Department.

A false statement is stamped on the face of the paper in the words "sample copy;" but being offered for mailing by the publisher it must, under the practice, be accepted by the Department at the pound rate of postage. Thus the purchaser has conferred upon him by the publisher the pound rate, to which, under the law, he is not entitled. The publisher should feel in honor bound to protect the Department from the very abuse which he himself perpetrates. The sample copy abuse is vast, and the Department is, under the present law, powerless to check it. It should be said in this connection, however, that the Department is not averse to a limited number of sample copies of each issue under proper regulations. The bill now contains a provision for such, and the Department certainly favors the allowance of a sufficient number of sample copies to meet the needs of the country papers.

Third. The petition says:

"It increases the rate of postage upon 'returns' to news agents from 1 cent to 4 cents per pound, thus seriously crippling the circulation of that large class of periodicals that are sent out 'on sale.'"

Comment: It is well known that this return privilege, which, under the present law, is given to news agents but not to publishers, is as greatly abused by the news agents as the sample-copy privilege is by some publishers. The law provides that unsold copies of second-class publications may be returned to the news agency from which they were sent; but when such unsold copies are returned directly to publishers, they must be paid at the rate of 1 cent for each 4 ounces—4 cents a pound.

Why should the publisher be discriminated against in favor of the news agent? This favored return privilege for news agents enables them to command the patronage of publishers of that class of literature which it is the custom to place on the counters of news agents for sale. The privilege promotes monopoly by compelling publishers to deal through the news agents in order to get unsold copies returned at the pound rate.

The abuse of the privilege by news agents is in the practice of taking large quantities of periodicals (library series etc.) for distribution among the subagencies with the express provision that the copies which are unsold shall be returned to the publishers, in direct contravention of law. Thus they give to the publishers the benefit of the pound rate for the return of unsold matter, which the law denies, and so deprive the Department of its lawful revenue. The fiction of addressing the unsold "return" matter to the news agent and not to the publisher, although it is actually for him, is the practice by which they defeat the law.

Frequently, however, before unsold matter of this kind is returned to the central agency, it has been in the mails a number of times, from agency to agency, in a fruitless search for a purchaser; and on every mailing the Department paid the principal part of the freight, and this should satisfy the agents without the having of the return privilege.

When a news agent accepts a publication to be placed on sale with the proviso that the unsold copies shall be returned to the publisher, he should be deprived of all pound-rate privileges for that publication at least, for he is nothing more than a local agent. An instance of the wrong in this practice is that some publishers make use of the post-office pound-rate receipts, showing the weight of their issues, as evidence of large circulation when soliciting advertising patronage. The main part of any edition may be returned as unsold through the news agents, and thus the Post-Office Department is made a party to a fraud upon the advertiser, who accepted the post-office receipt as establishing the bona fide circulation which induced his patronage.

Fourth. The petition says:

"It permits the mailing of periodicals at the pound rate to subscribers only, and defines subscribers as those who 'voluntarily order and pay, or agree to pay for the same.' Under this definition a person whose subscription has lapsed and has not been renewed is not a subscriber, and copies of a periodical sent to other than advance-paying subscribers could be excluded. This is a direct blow at the local country newspaper."

Comment: The sending of a notification to the publisher, if the subscriber desires to have the paper continued, is such an easy matter that the enactment of the bill would not be liable to materially affect the list of bona fide subscribers. It would, however, be a protection to parties to whom papers are sent against their wishes, as well as shield them from the blackmailing processes of a threatened prosecution for failure to pay for publications not ordered. However, the merit of this bill would not be affected if the words "voluntarily order and pay, or agree to pay for the same," were stricken out, leaving the law in that respect as it now is.

Fifth. The petition says:

"It requires publishers who are permitted to mail matter of the second class to separate the same, before mailing, into United States mail sacks or bundles by States, cities, towns, and counties, as the Postmaster-General may direct, thus forcing every publisher to establish in his office a miniature post-office, and entailing great extra expense."

Comment: The separation of mail matter of the second class by publishers, as contemplated by the bill, is now practiced by many of the larger publishing houses, and would be a means of expediting the dispatch and distribution of the publications to their readers, a great advantage over present practices in many cases, but it is not at all vital to the reform sought that this feature be retained.

Sixth. The petition says:

"It will throw out of employment hundreds of thousands of working men and women engaged in the printing, paper-making, electrotyping, and allied trades, entailing distress and calamity the extent of which can hardly be estimated."

Comment: This claim is so senseless as to merit no notice. The passage of the bill will not reduce the number employed one jot.

Seventh. The petition says:

"The advocates of the bill maintain that its purpose is to reduce the deficiency in the postal revenues. They claim that there is a heavy loss to the Government in the carriage of second-class matter. This claim is untenable, because whatever loss there may be upon the carriage of second-class matter is fully offset by the gain upon the carriage of the two profitable classes, the first and fourth, which are a direct outgrowth of the mailing of second-class matter. Every publisher receives large numbers of letters, and mails large quantities of 'premiums' (fourth-class matter) to his subscribers and club raisers, and almost every advertisement is a bid for correspondence by mail and the consequent mailing of merchandise in filling orders. There are other causes than the carriage of second-class mail matter to account for the annual deficiency in the postal revenues which would still be operative should the bill become a law. How, then, could the enactment of this measure reduce the deficiency?"

Comment: The claim that the increase of revenue arising from the mailings of other classes of matter, which are the direct outgrowth of the mailing of second class matter, counterbalances the loss on the matter transmitted at the pound rate of postage rests upon no good foundation. It can readily be seen that a single copy of a paper frequently exceeds the weight of matter incidentally mailed—say, once a year, in connection with correspondence and premiums—while the paper, if a weekly, is sent fifty-two times, at a loss to the Department. There may be causes for the actual deficiency in the revenue other than the carriage of second-class matter; but it is a demonstrable fact that if such matter paid the cost of carriage, estimated to be 8 cents a pound, there would be no deficit; a big surplus would be the result, and penny postage, which would benefit all the people of the land, might be practicable.

Eighth. The petition says:

"The real beneficiaries of the measure are the express companies. By cutting off competition with the postal service they would be enabled to increase their rates, and thus reap a rich harvest."

Comment: If the reduction in quantity of printed matter should be as large as claimed, the surplus over that sent at the pound rate would hardly enrich the express companies, as assumed would be the result. Under existing conditions the express companies underbid the mails on short hauls, especially when large quantities are sent.

Ninth. The petition says:

"Lastly, it creates a virtual censorship of the press, by giving to post-office officials the absolute right to determine what newspapers and periodicals shall have the advantage of the rates of second-class mail matter. It confers on the post-office the power to determine what is and what is not a periodical; and since there is not a single newspaper or magazine published in the United States which in some issue is not amenable to this authoritative discrimination against advertising, supplements, premiums, extra editions, and extra free matter, and which, therefore, may be relegated to mail matter of the third class, it literally places them at the mercy of any postmaster's mandate."

Comment: The "virtual censorship of the press," which it is claimed this bill will create, is already exercised by the Department, and has been exercised for twenty years without complaint upon the part of those affected. No different condition in that regard will exist if the Loud bill becomes a law, for there would be no likelihood of a change of practice in that direction. In framing this and many other paragraphs of this petition, an attempt is made to work upon the credulity of those publishers who have not and who can not, from the very nature of things, make an intelligent investigation of the subject for themselves. It is believed that if the publishers of the bona fide publications of the country could be made to thoroughly understand the provisions of this bill and its effect, they would support it generally.

Claim is made that this bill is harmful to the country newspaper. This claim is without foundation when it is once known that under section 374 of the law the country paper shall go free through the mails to actual subscribers residing in the county where the same was printed, in whole or in part, and published. So it will be seen that the only manner in which the country paper is affected is through the sample copies, of which I shall have occasion to speak later on.

So far as I can learn, the only persons who seriously make opposition to this bill are the publishers of serial stories, circulating libraries, and news agents. I shall not take the position but what many of these publications are valuable, stimulate reading of a better class, and lead to much good. There are others, of the "Dick Deadeye" and "Jesse James" kind, histories of local heroes, admired principally in the territory of their nativity, which can not result in any general good. But it is the principle of assisting one class of business at the expense of another which I combat, and the creating and fostering of favored classes.

Under the construction of the present law, Dickens and Scott and even Shakespeare, not to mention Pilgrim's Progress, are published as newspapers and periodicals, and local postmasters, high officials, and even legal departments wink at the iniquity and permit the sinning; while stories two hundred years old are published with a mark upon the cover, giving a known place of publication and date, also serial number, and are then permitted to pass through the mails upon the payment of 1 cent a pound; yet under the classifications of the Post-Office Department I find that the following articles are third-class matter and must pay a postage of 1 cent for each 2 ounces or fractional part thereof, viz: Almanacs, assessment notices (wholly in print), calendars, and catalogues, copy books (used in schools, with printed lines and instructions for use), grain in its natural condition (samples of), books (printed), music books, price lists (wholly in print), printed maps on paper, printed valentines, seeds, and sheet music.

And I find the following articles classified as fourth class, required to pay postage of 1 cent an ounce or a fraction thereof: Cut flowers, dried fruit, envelopes (printed or unprinted), letter heads, maps (printed on cloth), pills, fancy soap, etc., napkins (paper or cloth), paper bags and wrapping paper (printed or unprinted), samples of cloth, samples of flour or other manufactured grain for food purposes, stationery, and wall paper.

It will be seen from the foregoing that a discrimination is made of from 7 to 15 cents per pound in favor of these circulating library books as against other books and even against the necessaries of life. It costs 16 cents a pound to send soap through the mail, but Jesse James can go for 1 cent, The Scarlet Letter for 1 cent, Sapho for 1 cent, and The Cricket on the Hearth at the same price. This is a good thing for the large publishing houses, but it does not tend to stimulate the soda-ash factories of my district.

Then, too, another thing which should not be overlooked is the vast advantage to the news dealers. Under the present law they have the advantage over the publisher. In other words, the American News Company, a great combination or trust, or whatever it is, fairly controlling the price and the market of these serial libraries, has a right which the publisher has not—to send by mail these publications to one city and all at the pound rate. If the taste is not found to be sufficiently cultivated or sufficiently highly seasoned there, then this company ships the volumes to still another city, and so they make the circuit of the Union, seeking readers and buyers, and finally, when none are found, they are returned in the United States mails to the news company at the pound rate. And so this present law is again evaded and loses its force and effect.

The bill itself does not make war against any newspaper or any other periodical or publication which is honest and put forth in good faith, but it is simply designed to meet and keep from the second-class rate publications which are, in the language of the bill, "purported" to be issued periodically and sent to subscribers, but which are merely books, or reprints of books, whether they be purported to be premiums, or supplements, or parts of regular newspapers, or periodicals. So the law only reaches those publications which are purported and pretending to be that which in reality they are not; publications which are a fraud and deception, sailing behind a mask and under false colors. No honest publication, capable of taking its place in competition with its fellows, need have any fear from the enacting of this law.

As I before said, there are things about this law which I think should be changed, and amendments which I propose. I think the sample copies alluded to should be 100 per cent of the bona fide subscription list. I also think that clause 4 should be amended by reenacting the present law, permitting, as the law now does, all publications of strictly professional, literary, historical, or scientific societies, including bulletins issued by State boards of health and the bulletins issued by the State dairy and food commissions, to be mailed at second-class rates. There is no reason why these should not be allowed at the pound rate. Their purpose is entirely to aid the public and bring valuable information to the people. However, they contain no advertising matter; there is no manner in which the privilege can be abused. The postage is paid by the State, and the State in turn collects it from the people, so it is equitable that these publications should bear this nominal rate.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from California desire to occupy the floor any further to-night?

Mr. LOUD. I have nothing further to-night.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the following resolution:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed 25,000 copies of so much of the report of the First Assistant Postmaster-General for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1899, as relates to the rural free-delivery service, of which 10,000 shall be for the use of the House of Representatives, 5,000 for the use of the Senate, and 10,000 for the use of the Post-Office Department.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolutions; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

Senate concurrent resolution 32:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 7,000 copies of the Annual Report of the Major-General Commanding the Army for 1899, with accompanying documents, of which 2,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 4,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 1,000 copies for the use of the War Department and Headquarters of the Army.

Senate concurrent resolution 20:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be directed to cause a survey to be made and an estimate submitted of the cost of constructing a ship canal to connect Puget Sound with Grays Harbor via the Chehalis River, in the State of Washington, in accordance with recommendations heretofore made and filed with the War Department, and to report whether or not, in his judgment, it is advisable to construct such canal.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the bill and amendments to the bill (H. R. 9080) appropriating, for the benefit and government of Puerto Rico, revenues collected on importations therefrom since its evacuation by Spain and revenues hereafter to be collected on such importations under existing law, and had appointed Mr. ALLISON, Mr. HALE, and Mr. COCKRELL as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 5139) for the relief of Joseph Bacigaluppi; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 8347) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901, and for other purposes; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives is requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill and joint resolution of the following titles:

H. R. 1040. An act to amend section 4445, of Title LII, of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to the licensing of officers of steam vessels; and

H. J. Res. 159. Joint resolution to amend joint resolution to furnish the daily CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to members of the press, etc., approved February 17, 1897.

The message also announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to joint resolution (S. R. 28) relating to the use of the rooms lately occupied by the Congressional Library in the Capitol, had asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. SPOONER, Mr. ELKINS, and Mr. COCKRELL as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. BAKER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 2956. An act to extend the time for the completion of the incline railway on West Mountain, Hot Springs Reservation.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BINGHAM. I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations to ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, and to ask that the House nonconcur in the amendments of the Senate, and ask for a conference committee.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM], by direction of the Committee on Appropriations, asks unanimous consent that the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill be taken from the Speaker's table, that the House nonconcur in the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8347) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The Chair announces as conferees on the part of the House the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM], the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HEMENWAY], and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LIVINGSTON].

USE OF OLD LIBRARY ROOMS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair also lays before the House Senate resolution 28, to which the House has offered certain amendments, in which the Senate has nonconcurred and asked for a conference.

Mr. DALZELL. I move to insist on the action of the House and agree to the conference asked for.

Mr. RICHARDSON. We should like to have the title of the resolution read; we do not know what it is.

The SPEAKER. The motion of the gentleman is that the House insist upon the House amendments and agree to the conference asked by the Senate. The Clerk will report the title of the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (S. R. 28) relating to the use of the rooms lately occupied by the Congressional Library in the Capitol.

The motion of Mr. DALZELL was agreed to.

Accordingly the House nonconcurred in the amendments of the Senate and agreed to the conference; and the Speaker announced as conferees on the part of the House Mr. DALZELL, Mr. GROSVENOR, and Mr. RICHARDSON.

Mr. BELL. Mr. Speaker, I noticed that the Speaker appointed the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LIVINGSTON] one of the conferees on the legislative bill. He is in Georgia and, as I understand, will be for some time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appointed, as is the custom, the conferees suggested by the gentleman in charge of the bill.

CUSTOM-HOUSE AT BALTIMORE.

By unanimous consent, the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds was discharged from the further consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 189) appropriating unexpended balance of appropriations for additional land for custom-house at Baltimore, Md., for immediate use; and the same was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

And then, on motion of Mr. LOUD (at 5 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, recommending an appropriation for range lights in St. Mary's River, Michigan, was taken from the Speaker's table, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Resolved, That the Postmaster-General be, and he hereby is, directed to return to the Senate certain schedules of salaries of postmasters in the States of Alabama, Arkansas, Kansas, and Kentucky computed under the act of March 3, 1883, which schedules were before the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads of the Senate, but which were temporarily recalled by the Postmaster-General on the 30th day of September, 1890.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be printed and lie over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be printed and lie over.

MINING RIGHTS NEAR CAPE NOME, ALASKA.

Mr. TURNER. I submit a resolution and ask for its immediate consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to inform the Senate whether any concessions or grants to excavate the gold-bearing bed of the sea at or in the vicinity of Cape Nome, in Alaska, or in other Alaskan waters have been made to any individual or individuals or to any corporation or association of individuals by the Secretary of War or by any other official of the War Department; and if so, to inform the Senate upon what theory of power or authority, if any, such concessions or grants were made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, I do not wish to be understood as objecting to the present consideration of this resolution. I should like to ask the Senator from Washington upon what theory the resolution is framed or upon what basis of fact or information. I understand the resolution to present an inquiry as to whether the Secretary of War has issued permits to any company or individual or individuals, giving the right, presumably, upon the theory of the resolution, the exclusive right, to mine under the waters of the sea near Cape Nome. That is my understanding of the resolution. I should like to know of the Senator upon what theory or for what reason such a resolution is here presented.

Mr. TURNER. Mr. President, I am reliably informed that the War Department has granted exclusive rights to mine the beds of the sea at and in the vicinity of Cape Nome, and I think it exceedingly important that the Senate shall be authoritatively informed whether that is true or not. One of my informants is the governor of Alaska, who is present in the city, and who informed me that such a concession has been made by the War Department.

The Secretary of War, of course, as is well known, has jurisdiction over the navigable waters of our harbors and our navigable rivers in order that navigation may not be obstructed; and pursuant to that authority he has been in the habit of giving private individuals the authority to excavate for certain purposes within such waters where it will not obstruct navigation. I wish to say that if this authority has been stretched to the extent of endeavoring to give concessions to individuals to mine the gold-bearing beds of the sea in Alaska, it is a shame, a reproach, and a scandal, especially in view of the fact that the Senate and House of Representatives are now engaged in the task of formulating legislation concerning the mining of the sands of the sea in that vicinity.

My resolution is offered with a view of producing an authoritative declaration from the War Department whether or not any such concessions have been granted.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President, in view of the extraordinary statement of the Senator from Washington, I have not a doubt that the Secretary of War will be just as anxious to answer the inquiry as the Senator from Washington is to make it.

Such a grant would be a clear violation of law, and it is so utterly impossible that the Secretary of War should have attempted it that I trust the resolution may be adopted without going over for a day.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, my inquiry was prompted by the same thought which actuated the Senator from Colorado, to prosecute the inquiry further. The sands under the sea and the waters of the sea, and likewise the space between low and high tide in the vicinity of Cape Nome, are said to be gold bearing. The space between low and high tide has been, in the parlance of the mining camp, the prospectors' grub-stake ground in that country. Persons have gone forth upon that ground, which was held in common by all the miners. It was held by the individual without dispute during the time he actually occupied it; and when the occupant elected to move on, under the common rule which prevailed among the miners, anyone else could proceed to mine over the same ground.

It certainly can not be in contemplation that the Secretary of War, in the exercise of any jurisdiction vested in him to control the waters for navigation purposes, including the bays and harbors and the water within the 3-mile limit, would proceed to the innovation of executing mining leases or mining privileges without any semblance of law, without any consultation with or authority from Congress. I think the resolution should pass, and I have no doubt the answer will show that the Secretary has not arrogated to himself that authority.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. STEWART. Let the resolution be read again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be again read.

The Secretary again read the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? The Chair hears none. Will the Senate agree to the same?

The resolution was agreed to.

ELECTION IN CUBA.

Mr. PETTIGREW submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, directed to inform the Senate of the qualifications required to entitle a person to vote at the coming election in the island of Cuba, the purpose for which said election is held, who has charge of the same, and who prescribed the qualifications of voters.

The message also announced that the President of the United States had on this day approved and signed the joint resolution (S. R. 91) authorizing the printing of extra copies of the publications of the Office of Naval Intelligence, Navy Department.

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. HALE. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9279) making appropriations to supply additional urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, and for prior years, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. HALE. I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that the bill be read, and that the committee amendments be disposed of as they are reached in the reading of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine asks unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that it be read for amendment, and that the committee amendments be first in order. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill. The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Treasury Department," on page 2, after line 5, to insert:

Office of Auditor for the War Department: For the purpose of restoring and repairing the worn-out and defaced rolls and vouchers in the Office of the Auditor for the War Department, the following additional force from March 15 to June 30, 1900, inclusive, 10 clerks, at the rate of $1,000 each per annum, $2,944.40.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, after line 5, to insert:

WAR DEPARTMENT.

MILITARY POSTS.

That the provisions of section 355, Revised Statutes, are waived so far as they prohibit the expenditure of public money for the purpose of erecting public buildings on a tract of land recently acquired as a site for necessary buildings at Fort Du Pont, Del., before the consent of the legislature of the State of Delaware to the purchase has been given, it being impracticable to apply to the State legislature for consent to its purchase until its next session in January, 1901, and the buildings being urgently required for the shelter of troops.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, after line 21, to insert:

Bureau of Equipment.

And under the head of "Naval Establishment," on page 4, after line 2, to strike out:

Bureau of Equipment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 8, to insert:

PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

For work at Capitol, and for general repairs thereof, including wages of mechanics and laborers, $7,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, after line 4, to insert:

GEOLOGICAL SURVEY.

For engraving and printing the geological maps of the United States, $2,500

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, after line 7, to insert:

For gauging the streams and determining the water supply of the United States, including the investigation of underground currents and artesian wells in arid and semiarid sections, and the preparation of reports upon the best methods of utilizing the water resources of said sections, $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, after line 13, to insert:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE.

For stationery, furniture, fixtures, and repairs, and for the purchase of passport paper, $500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, after line 16, to insert:

For contingent expenses, namely: For care and subsistence of horses, to be used only for official purposes, and repairs of wagons, carriage, and harness, rent of stable, telegraphic and electric apparatus and repairs to the same, and miscellaneous items not included in the foregoing, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Legislative," on page 8, after line 23, to insert:

SENATE.

For miscellaneous items, exclusive of labor, $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 9, under the subhead "Senate," to insert:

For purchase of furniture, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, after line 1, to insert:

For fuel, oil, and cotton waste, and advertising, for the heating apparatus, exclusive of labor, $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, after line 4, to insert:

For repairs of Maltby Building, $500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, after line 5, to insert:

For expenses of inquiries and investigations ordered by the Senate, including compensation to stenographers to committees, at such rate as may be fixed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, but not exceeding $1.25 per printed page, $7,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Public printing and binding," on page 10, after line 9, to insert:

For printing and binding for the War Department, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

ADDITIONAL SENATE MESSENGERS.

Mr. ALLISON. I should be glad to call up the conference report on House bill 9080.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report is not at the desk at present, the Chair informs the Senator.

Mr. CARTER. Without prejudice to the conference report, which will be found in a few minutes, I suppose, I call up for consideration the motion entered by me yesterday evening to reconsider the vote by which the resolution submitted by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. SULLIVAN] was passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Montana moves to reconsider the vote by which the resolution which will be stated was passed.

The SECRETARY. A resolution by Mr. SULLIVAN providing for the employment of additional messengers for the service of Senators.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion to reconsider.

Mr. SULLIVAN. I desire, before the motion is put, to ask a question of the Senator from Montana, and that is whether yesterday he voted in the affirmative on the adoption of the resolution?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There having been no yea-and-nay vote taken on the adoption of the resolution, the Chair recognizes the right of the Senator from Montana to move a reconsideration.

Mr. HOAR. Let the resolution be read before the vote is taken.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read in full. The resolution should have been referred under the law originally to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. SULLIVAN on the 16th instant, as follows:

Resolved, That each Senator other than the chairmen of the standing and select committees of the Senate, and having as such a messenger, be, and he is hereby, authorized to employ a messenger, to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate, at the rate of $1,440 per annum, until otherwise provided by law.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion to reconsider.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the law the resolution will be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

DIPLOMATIC CORRESPONDENCE WITH COLOMBIA, ETC.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate:

In response to the resolution of the Senate of January 23, 1900, requesting the President, "if in his opinion it is not incompatible with the public interest, to furnish the Senate with copies of the correspondence with the Republic of Colombia in relation to the Panama Canal and to the treaty between this Government and New Granada concluded December 12, 1846, not heretofore communicated," I transmit herewith a report from the Secretary of State, with accompanying papers.

WILLIAM McKINLEY.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, March 21, 1900.

PUERTO RICAN REVENUES.

Mr. ALLISON. I now call up the conference report on House bill 9080.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the conference report submitted yesterday by the Senator from Iowa, which will be read.

The Secretary read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9080) appropriating, for the benefit and government of Puerto Rico, revenues collected on importations therefrom since its evacuation by Spain and revenues hereafter collected on such importations under existing law, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1, 4, and 5.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3 and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 2: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2 and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the matter inserted by said amendment, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "now existing and which may hereafter be established in Puerto Rico, and for the aid and relief of the people thereof, and for public education, public works, and other governmental and public purposes therein until otherwise provided by law;" and the Senate agree to the same.

W. B. ALLISON,
EUGENE HALE,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

J. G. CANNON,
W. H. MOODY,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, I wish simply to state that as one of the conferees I could not——

Mr. BACON. As the Senator from Missouri is going to discuss the merits, if he will pardon me, I was going to suggest that this is a matter of such importance that we ought to have an opportunity to examine it with more care than it is possible to give to it simply from hearing it read at the desk. I would prefer that the matter should lie over and that the report may be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has been printed.

Mr. BACON. I did not know the fact.

Mr. ALLISON. I offered the report last evening and asked that it be printed. It will be found in the RECORD, on page 3084, and it is also printed as a document.

Mr. BACON. It is possibly my fault that I did not know the fact. I recollect that yesterday evening, while I was on the floor, the Senator asked permission to interrupt me that a conference report might be submitted, but I did not know it was this report, and I prefer that we should have an opportunity to examine it.

Mr. COCKRELL. I suggest to the Senator from Iowa to let the report go over.

Mr. ALLISON. Does the Senator prefer that it shall go over until a later hour to-day? I think there is a rather pressing necessity for the adoption of the report.

Mr. BACON. I did not hear the Senator?

Mr. ALLISON. There is a pressing necessity for the early consideration of the report, but of course if Senators desire further time to look into it, I shall be glad to give such time as may be necessary.

Mr. BACON. The Senator will remember that there is an order to go into executive session at 3 o'clock to-day, and I shall therefore ask that it lie over until to-morrow.

Mr. ALLISON. If it can be understood that this matter will be taken up to-morrow morning after the routine business I will allow it to go over.

Mr. COCKRELL. There will be no objection to that course.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to call up a bill for consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Calendar under Rule VIII is in order. The Senator from Massachusetts asks for the present consideration of a bill which he will indicate.

DISTRICT COURT STENOGRAPHERS.

Mr. HOAR. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 2352) to authorize the judges of the district courts of the United States to appoint stenographic reporters, fix the duties and compensation thereof, and for other purposes.

The Secretary read the bill, and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in the Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, page 1, after the word "courts," at the end of line 9, to insert "within the district of the judge making the appointment;" in line 12, after the word "take," to strike out "down;" and on page 2, line 2, after the word "directed," to strike out "by either party to a suit or;" so as to make the section read:

That every judge of the United States district court may, for the purpose of perpetuating the testimony and proceedings therein, appoint a competent stenographic reporter, who shall be known as the reporter of the United States courts, and who shall hold office during the pleasure of the judge appointing him, or of the successor of said judge. Such reporter shall attend all sessions of the district and circuit courts within the district of the judge making the appointment, and shall, upon the direction of the court, in any civil or criminal action, suit in equity, or other proceeding, take in shorthand the testimony and all proceedings had upon the trial or hearing; and shall, when directed by the court, transcribe the same within such time as the court may designate, and file the same with the clerk of the court.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 4, on page 2, line 14, before the word "dollars," to strike out "four hundred;" in line 16, before the word "cents," to strike out "twenty," and insert "ten;" in line 17, before the word "cents," to strike out "ten" and insert "five;" and after the word "charge," at the end of line 20, to strike out "but in case such transcript is ordered by the court in any civil case the same shall be paid for by such party or parties as the court may direct;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 4. That each reporter appointed as above provided shall receive for his services an annual salary of $2,000. In addition thereto the reporter shall be entitled to receive from any party desiring a transcript from his notes the sum of 10 cents per folio of 100 words, and for each carbon copy the sum of 5 cents per folio. But in criminal cases, and actions and suits in which the United States is a party, the reporter shall furnish such transcripts as the district attorney may require without charge.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to ask the Senator how many officials this bill will create; how many districts there are, and what will be the annual burden imposed upon the country?

Mr. HOAR. I have forgotten the number of districts in the United States now, but I should think about 90; that is, I think there is an average of about two district courts to a State. It is not within my memory at this moment. But the salaries of these officials, which were originally provided at $2,500 per year, are now made $2,000. On the other hand, it is an immense necessity, and practically this service now has to be obtained and paid for by the Government at a rate at which contracts are made for particular cases with stenographic experts. The Senator's experience is as good as mine in that particular, but I suppose there will not be any serious addition to the burden on the Treasury. At any rate, it is an enormous security for the parties in the administration of justice to have stenographic reports in all important causes, and the States very generally, though not universally, have made similar provisions, not only for their supreme courts, but for their courts of second rank. In my own State we have stenographic reporters not only in the supreme court, but in the superior court.

Mr. COCKRELL. We have the same in Missouri in the State circuit courts, as they are called. Will this bill dispense with any expenditures which are made now by the various courts for the employment of stenographers to take down everything, especially cases where they are paid at very heavy rates?

Mr. HOAR. Entirely. My belief is that it will save money to the Treasury.

Mr. SULLIVAN. I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts a question. I do not understand that this would at all relieve of any expense in that respect. I understand the purpose here now is simply to pay for a stenographer for each district judge in criminal matters, and that it does not apply to other causes, although the stenographer may have a salary by the year.

Mr. HOAR. In all matters, not merely criminal matters, the stenographer to the court is to take down, for his salary, everything the judge requires him to do, and everything the district attorney requires him to do in all cases where the United States is a party.

Mr. ALLISON. What is the salary?

Mr. HOAR. The salary is $2,000. Then the stenographer is to make his transcripts for private parties; and, as to those, the committee have cut down the proposed allowance by one-half.

Mr. SULLIVAN. The point I was trying to get at is this: At present there is no provision for a stenographer to take down testimony or anything of that sort in the district courts, and the private individuals who have litigation have to pay the expense themselves. What good reason is there why the stenographer should not take down the testimony in civil as well as in criminal cases? He is paid so much per annum.

Mr. HOAR. The bill provides that the stenographer shall—upon the direction of the court, in any civil or criminal action, suit in equity, or other proceeding, take in shorthand the testimony and all proceedings had upon the trial or hearing—

That is what he does for his salary—and shall, when directed by the court, transcribe the same within such time as the court may designate, and file the same with the clerk of the court.

Then—

In criminal cases, and actions and suits in which the United States is a party, the reporter shall furnish such transcripts as the district attorney may require without charge.

This is to be done for the salary of $2,000 a year; and it secures the taking down of testimony in all cases upon the direction of the court, and the transcribing of and filing the testimony with the clerk of the court. Then the stenographer furnishes such further transcripts as the district attorney may require without charge in all criminal cases and all cases where the United States is a party; and the private party gets the transcript by paying for it at the price fixed in the bill. Therefore, the reporter furnishes for the salary the proper stenographic service in all cases where the Government finds it necessary to now have a stenographic report.

One member of the committee mentioned a case within his experience where the fees of a stenographer had amounted, I think, to $30,000. I am not quite sure whether that was a Government or a private case; but take the great Brant case we had in Boston a few years ago, which was tried twice. I do not know what the Government paid for the stenographic service in that case; but I have no doubt, from my general knowledge of such cases, that it must have been for that single case fivefold the year's salary of the stenographer.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, as I understand the purpose of this bill, it is to furnish stenographers to the Federal judges the same as they are furnished to the nisi prius judges of the supreme courts. There is no method of preserving evidence of trials in the Federal courts at this time unless it be done by a stenographer employed by one or both of the parties in litigation. That amounts to a practical hardship in many instances, especially in the Northwest, where the litigants are poorer than they are in some other sections of the United States. I know of many cases where the stenographer's fees have amounted to a very considerable sum, and to a considerable portion of the amount in litigation. They are extortionate in many instances, sometimes being five or ten dollars a day for the mere taking of the stenographic notes, and then extra compensation for transcribing the notes for forming the bill of exceptions. So I think this bill is demanded by the situation.

While I am speaking of this matter, I wish to call the attention of the Senate and of the Judiciary Committee to another very gross abuse, in my judgment, in the practice before the Federal courts. The practice is constantly becoming looser than formerly. There was a time in the history of the administration of jurisprudence when no jury was permitted to separate after it had been sworn to try a cause in either a civil or a criminal case; but we are relaxing in the State courts, and, I regret to say, Mr. President, we have relaxed in the Federal courts to the extent of absolutely imperiling meritorious causes. For instance, litigants who have a cause to try before a jury in the Federal courts are required in many sections of the country to make a deposit with the marshal of a sum of money to pay for the lodgings and food of the jurors if they are kept together pending the determination of the case. That is wrong. It ought to be in the power of the Federal judge, and he ought to exercise the power, to require a jury to be kept together in an important criminal matter or in an important civil matter where outside influences may affect the litigation.

Mr. HALE. Does the Senator mean to say that he thinks that a jury ought to be kept together from the time the trial begins?

Mr. ALLEN. Not in all cases, but in some cases. There are a great many cases which excite great public interest, even civil cases which excite much outside comment, and where the influences surrounding the court, the influences of the community, are not the best for the production of a verdict that reflects the evidence in the case.

Mr. HALE. Does the Senator think it would be practical to keep a jury together, separated from all the rest of the world, day and night during the trial of a case which would, perhaps, take a week or ten days?

Mr. ALLEN. Oh, Mr. President, I have done that myself repeatedly; and there was hardly a term while I was on the bench that I did not do that.

Mr. SPOONER. In a civil case?

Mr. ALLEN. Yes, in a civil case where the excitement was intense and where the outside influences were dangerous. In our States west of the Mississippi River we have provision for paying the expenses of a jury when kept together by order of the court.

Mr. HALE. I know that is done in certain States; but in my own State we do not keep the jury together at all, even in criminal cases; and I do not know that there has ever been any scandal about it; but I ask the Senator from Nebraska, in holding court as a judge, where would he send a jury of twelve men so as to keep them together?

Mr. ALLEN. There is scarcely a place where a court is held that you can not find two or three or four rooms where a jury can be accommodated for sleeping purposes when they have to sleep. They are also taken together to their meals by one or more bailiffs. They are escorted from the court to and from their rooms, and of course are always under the charge of a bailiff when in their room deliberating upon their verdict.

Mr. HALE. And that is kept up and maintained during the trial?

Mr. ALLEN. Yes, sir; and that is not a hardship.

Mr. WOLCOTT. If the Senator from Maine will permit me, in Colorado that is done in the State courts, and in long and extensive mining suits of great importance the Federal judge is almost invariably in the habit of keeping the jury together, getting quarters for them at some hotel, and appointing bailiffs to take charge of them. They are often kept isolated and separate from the rest of the world for two or three weeks at a time.

Mr. ALLEN. Yes, and that ought to be done. For instance, when a jury at the adjournment of the court are permitted to dissolve and scatter over a town or city they necessarily come in contact with men who are talking about the case they are trying if it is of sufficient importance to provoke general comment. Men may be very honest in expressing their opinions, but they sometimes express their opinions to a juryman or in his presence and hearing, and it may imperceptibly influence him in determining or in shaping the verdict that is ultimately to be found. All these influences ought to be kept from juries. If a juryman is predisposed to listen when he goes outside the court he ought not to be on the jury; but unfortunately he is there as part of the jury before that fact is discovered.

Mr. SPOONER. I ask the Senator from Nebraska if that is not a matter entirely within the discretion of the judge?

Mr. ALLEN. I think that is true; but what I am complaining about is the practice of the Federal court in some localities where, without a single exception, the jury is permitted to separate in all cases, unless the parties interested in the litigation come forward and place enough money in the hands of the marshal to cover the expense of the jury while kept together. That ought not to be so. It ought to be within the discretion—and it is a discretion that ought to be exercised wisely—of the judge to determine when a jury shall be kept together; and a sufficient amount ought to be provided in the appropriation bill to pay these exceptional expenses.

Mr. SPOONER. In civil cases?

Mr. ALLEN. In any kind of a case where justice is liable to miscarry if there is a failure to keep the jury together.

Mr. SPOONER. Does the Senator mean that the Treasury of the United States ought to provide the funds to keep juries together in civil cases?

Mr. ALLEN. I do not see why it should not. The State bears those expenses. I do not know of a Western State—I know nothing about the Eastern States—but I do not know of a State west of the Mississippi River where that is not the rule and where the State or county does not pay the expenses of the jury.

Mr. HOAR. There is nothing about that in this bill.

Mr. ALLEN. I know there is nothing about that in this bill; but this is a matter I wanted to call to the attention of the Committee on the Judiciary.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CIVIL GOVERNMENT FOR ALASKA.

Mr. CARTER. I move that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 3419) making further provision for a civil government for Alaska, and for other purposes. The bill has been read.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

Mr. BATE. Does the Senator from Montana want to take up the bill regularly, or for the purpose of offering certain committee amendments?

Mr. CARTER. I have proposed to take up the bill regularly, and I ask that the formal amendments made by the committee may be considered as agreed to.

Mr. BATE. I understood from the Senator from Montana that he did not want to take up the bill for discussion now, but to get through with the amendments reported by the committee.

Mr. CARTER. Most assuredly the bill must be taken up for consideration. I should like to have an understanding that it shall be finally acted upon not later than Saturday.

Mr. BATE. There are a good many amendments to the bill. I wish to present some myself, and I am not prepared to do so now.

Mr. CARTER. We can proceed with the consideration of the bill, I assume. There are certain amendments which I desire to offer; the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BATE] has offered certain amendments, and the committee amendments are pending.

Mr. BATE. I am not prepared to vote on those now. I so stated to the Senator yesterday. I did not know the bill was to be called up for that purpose. I understood it was to be called up so that the formal amendments of the committee which were not objected to could be acted upon.

Mr. CARTER. There are certain amendments which a number of Senators desire to present, as well as amendments to be presented later on by the Senator from Tennessee. My motion was to proceed to the consideration of the bill and amendments.

Mr. BATE. It is not proposed to put the bill on its passage, I suppose.

Mr. CARTER. If the Senator is not prepared to offer his amendments or to debate them to-day, they can be presented and debated to-morrow or next day, I assume. We can not delay the consideration of the bill until every Senator is ready to present every conceivable amendment he may have, and to proceed with its discussion. The committee desire to make such progress to-day as they can.

Mr. BATE. I do not want to be in the way; but I suggest that the bill be taken up at some other time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CARTER. I ask unanimous consent that the committee amendments may be considered as agreed to without reading. Those amendments are merely formal and are scattered through the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Can the Senator point out where the amendments occur?

Mr. CARTER. They are merely the renumbering of sections and formal matters.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There are amendments on pages 444 and 445, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 444, line 1 of chapter 106, after the words "section 1069," it is proposed to strike out "a."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Montana asks unanimous consent that amendments as to the numbering of sections may be agreed to?

Mr. CARTER. Yes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and those amendments will be made by the Secretary.

Mr. BATE. As this bill has come up rather suddenly and there are Senators who want to offer amendments who are not present, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The absence of a quorum being suggested, the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Allen,	Foraker,	McComas,	Simon,
Bacon,	Foster,	McCumber,	Spooner,
Bard,	Frye,	McLaurin,	Sullivan,
Bate,	Gear,	McMillan,	Thurston,
Burrows,	Hanna,	Martin,	Tillman,
Carter,	Hawley,	Morgan,	Turley,
Clay,	Hoar,	Perkins,	Warren,
Cockrell,	Kean,	Pettus,	Wetmore,
Culberson,	Kenney,	Pritchard,	Wolcott.
Cullom,	Lindsay,	Ross,
Deboe,	Lodge,	Sewell,
Fairbanks,	McBride,	Shoup,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Forty-five Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present. The amendments as to renumbering the sections will be considered as agreed to.

Mr. CARTER. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is a committee amendment on page 445.

Mr. WARREN. I should like to ask the Senator from Montana if it is his intention to call the bill up for early consideration? I ask the question because I have some amendments to be printed, which I desire to present, and I do not wish to present them to-day unless it will be too late to do so to-morrow.

Mr. CARTER. It is desired, of course, to have the bill finally disposed of at the earliest practicable date. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BATE] has certain amendments which he desires to present, but which he is not prepared to present to-day; and I am now informed that the same is true with reference to the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]. I suggest at this point, in order to give all Senators who desire to present amendments ample opportunity to do so, that we arrange to finally dispose of the bill and amendments on Saturday next.

Mr. BATE. I do not know that the bill can be disposed of at that time, but it can be taken up for consideration then as the regular order. I do not know how long the discussion may take.

Mr. WARREN. I hope the bill may receive early consideration. I only want to have time enough to offer the amendments which I desire to submit.

Mr. CARTER. To-morrow will be time enough for the Senator's amendments. There are certain formal amendments which I wish to offer to-day for consideration, and if other Senators are not prepared to proceed, the bill can then go over until to-morrow.

I should like to have an arrangement for a vote on the bill and the amendments at an early date. The difficulty of perfecting a piece of legislation as extensive as this must be obvious to all Senators; and inasmuch as the bill is in as good condition at the present moment as the committee could place it, it is desirable that it should be passed by this body at as early an hour as possible. I have no disposition to press for a final vote to-day, but will let the matter go over, after such amendments as are ready for presentation shall have been disposed of.

Mr. BATE. The Senator from Montana said something about Saturday. That will be agreeable, I reckon.

Mr. CARTER. Then I ask unanimous consent that the bill and amendments shall be voted on at, say 5 o'clock p. m. on Saturday.

Mr. BATE. Excuse me. I did not understand that the bill was to be voted upon, but that it was to be taken up for consideration. We do not know how long it will take. There may be amendments offered which will require discussion for some length of time.

Mr. CARTER. It is well known, and the Senator from Tennessee realizes fully, that the business of the Senate within a week from now will become somewhat congested, and it will be difficult to secure consideration for this bill. It is ready for consideration now. The Senate is ready to consider it. All Senators are prepared except those who have certain amendments, already prepared, confessedly, that can be presented to-morrow, considered and disposed of. If their consideration leads to debate, well and good. We should occupy the attention of the Senate which is not otherwise occupied in the consideration of the bill and amendments that may be presented to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The condition of the bill before the Senate is this: It is up on motion, by order of the Senate, and by unanimous consent the committee amendments were first to be acted upon. That is all that the unanimous-consent agreement covered.

Mr. BATE. It went only to that extent.

Mr. SHOUP. After the present committee amendments have been acted upon there will be other committee amendments to be offered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair simply stated that the unanimous-consent agreement merely extended to the committee amendments.

Mr. BATE. As they are now presented.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first amendment is on page 445.

Mr. BATE. It extends only to the amendments from the committee which are now presented. The chairman of the committee has just announced to the Senate that there are other amendments which he wants to put in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes.

Mr. WARREN. Before leaving the floor, I wish to state that I am in hearty sympathy with the Senator in charge of the bill and in favor of its early consideration, and if it shall transpire that he gets along faster than he expects I shall be prepared to offer my amendments after the committee amendments are offered—even to-day.

Mr. CARTER. I should be glad to have the Senator present his amendments to-day if he can.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first amendment, reported by the Committee on Territories, is on page 445, section 1071, line 2. It will be reported.

The SECRETARY. On page 445, section 1071, line 2, after the word "of," it is proposed to insert "the transaction and of."

Mr. BATE. After which "of?" The word "of" appears twice in that line.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. By unanimous consent, all the mere formal section amendments were agreed to.

Mr. BATE. After which "of" is the amendment to be inserted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The words printed in italics are inserted after the word "of" where it occurs the second time.

The SECRETARY. If amended, the clause will read:

The following persons shall not be witnesses: 1. Those of unsound mind at the time of the transaction and of their production for examination.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Territories was, on page 447, section 1077, line 2, before the word "years," to strike out "ten" and insert "fifteen;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 1077. The uninterrupted adverse possession of real property for fifteen years or more shall be conclusively presumed to be held pursuant to a written conveyance.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on the same page, section 1078, line 3, after the word "continued," to strike out "charge" and insert "change;" so as to read:

SEC. 1078. Every sale or assignment of personal property, unless accompanied by the immediate delivery and the actual and continued change of possession of the thing sold or assigned, shall be conclusively presumed to be a fraud against the creditors of the vendor or assignor.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 448, section 1079, line 4, after the word "the," to strike out "parties" and insert "party;" so as to read:

In the following cases an agreement is void unless the same or some note or memorandum thereof expressing the consideration be in writing and subscribed by the party to be charged, or by his lawfully authorized agent.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 448, section 1079, line 16, before the word "pay," to strike out "for" and insert "or;" so as to read:

(5) An agreement for the sale of personal property at a price not less than $50, unless the buyer accept and receive some part of such personal property, or pay at the time some part of the purchase price.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 591, section 356, line 3, after the word "section," to strike out "four hundred and twenty-eight" and insert "three hundred and fifty-two;" so as to read:

In every action or suit for the recovery of the value of any live stock mentioned in section 352 so killed, or for damages for injury to the same, as hereinbefore provided, proof of such killing or injury shall of itself be deemed and held to be conclusive evidence of negligence upon the part of the person, persons, company, or corporation, or his or their lessees or agents, owning or operating such railroad.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. These are the only amendments reported by the committee when the bill was reported.

Mr. CARTER. I offer an amendment to be inserted on page 13.

The SECRETARY. On page 13 strike out all after line 30 down to and including line 42 and in lieu thereof insert:

Each clerk shall collect all money arising from the fees of his office or on any other account authorized by law to be paid to or collected by him, and shall report the same and the disposition thereof in detail, under oath, quarterly, or more frequently if required, to the court, the Attorney-General, and the Secretary of the Treasury, and all public money received by him and his deputies for fees or on any other account shall be paid out by the clerk on the order of the court, duly made and signed by the judge, and any balance remaining in his hands after all payments ordered by the court shall have been made shall be by him covered into the Treasury of the United States at such times and under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe. The clerk may employ necessary clerical help with the approval and at compensation to be fixed by the court to aid him in the expeditious discharge of the business of his office. Any person so employed shall be paid by the clerk on the order of the court, as other court expenses are paid.

Mr. CARTER. The purpose of this amendment is to change the mode of compensating the clerk from a mixture of salary and fees to the salary system pure and simple. It will be observed in the portion stricken out that the clerk is permitted to retain $400 per month of the fees and commissions by him collected, such amount to be retained in addition to his salary of $2,500, which is provided, it being contemplated that this sum of $400 retained from fees and commissions would pay for all the clerical assistance in his office. It is clear, I think, that it would be simpler, the accounts would be in better form and more readily examined and checked up, if he were paid a definite sum for his services and required to account to the Treasury and the court for all fees and commissions collected from any and every source. If so paid and no allowance made for fees or commissions to the clerk, it is necessary that the clerical assistance which may be required in his office shall be paid for, and consequently that provision is made in the latter part of the amendment. In all cases the amount to be paid out is to be fixed by and paid under the order of the court. I think the amendment is an improvement on the bill.

Mr. BATE. The amendment does not name the amount to be paid him or how the money is to be paid.

Mr. CARTER. The amount of the salary or compensation of the clerk will be disposed of by another amendment if this amendment is adopted.

Mr. BATE. It is not named in the amendment.

Mr. CARTER. No; the amount to be paid as compensation is not named. This amendment simply provides that the clerk of the court shall collect all moneys required or authorized by law to be paid to or collected by him; that he shall account for the same in detail under oath to the court, the Attorney-General, and the Secretary of the Treasury, and out of the money so collected he shall first pay such court disbursements as the court may order paid under the law, and that the remainder of such fees or commissions in his hands shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States at such times and under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe.

Mr. BATE. But this does not settle the amount he is to be paid.

Mr. CARTER. It does not settle the amount he is to be paid. The Senator will observe that that amount is fixed on page 12; and if this amendment is adopted, I shall draw the attention of the Senate to the propriety of another amendment, changing his salary to a larger sum, in order that he may get just compensation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CARTER. On page 12, line 26, I move to strike out the word "two" and insert in lieu thereof the word "four;" so that the amendment——

Mr. BATE. Read it and let us see how it will read after it is amended.

Mr. CARTER. So that the item will read, in connection with the text:

The clerks, each the sum of $4,500 per annum.

Mr. SPOONER. The clerks of the courts?

Mr. BATE. Yes. This section gives him $2,500, and I do not know why the increase should be made to $4,500, nearly double what the committee agreed upon.

Mr. CARTER. But in addition to the $2,500 under the bill as reported by the committee, the clerk is entitled to retain the sum of $400 per month out of the fees and commissions received in his office.

Mr. BATE. That is, to that extent.

Mr. CARTER. To that extent; and in lieu of the $2,500 salary and the $400 a month of fees and commissions to be retained we provide that the fees and commissions shall be covered into the Treasury and the salary of the clerk shall be $4,500 per annum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. SPOONER. I should like to inquire of the Senator what does the bill make the salary of the marshals?

Mr. CARTER. The salaries of the marshals the Senator will find on page 12. Probably I might as well answer all questions relating to salaries. The governor, $5,000; surveyor-general and ex-officio secretary of the district, as full compensation, $4,000; the judges, each the sum of $6,000; each marshal the sum of $5,000, and, as amended, the clerks each the sum of $4,500.

Mr. SPOONER. What does the district attorney get?

Mr. CARTER. District attorneys each the sum of $4,000. On page 12, in line 27, I move to strike out all after the word "dollars" down to and including the word "provided," in line 28, at the bottom of page 12.

The SECRETARY. On page 12, section 10, line 27, it is proposed to strike out the following:

And fees and commissions as hereinafter provided.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CARTER. I also offer an amendment relating to the same subject-matter.

The SECRETARY. On page 326, at the end of section 749, it is proposed to insert:

And for all money received by him if his official capacity each deputy clerk shall be entitled to such compensation as the court or the judge thereof may, subject to the approval of the Attorney-General, allow, the same to be paid by the clerk on order of the court as other court expenses are allowed and paid.

Mr. CARTER. This amendment is rendered necessary in order that some provision may be made in the bill for the payment of deputy clerks. The bill provides that deputy clerks may be appointed by the clerk at different places where general or special terms of the court are to be held. The convenience to the public of having a deputy is known to all lawyers, but it is extremely difficult for us to determine here just what would be fair and adequate compensation at different points in the district of Alaska for deputy clerks. So we leave the matter to the judge of the court.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CARTER. On page 131, line 22, section 266, I move, after the word "personal," to strike out the word "relatives" as it appears in the text and also the parentheses inclosing the word "representatives." The text should read:

The debtor's personal representatives.

Mr. BATE. What is proposed to be stricken out?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The word "representatives" stays in?

Mr. CARTER. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is simply to strike out the word "relatives" and the parentheses?

Mr. CARTER. Yes, sir.

Mr. BATE. The Senator said something about "representatives."

Mr. CARTER. The word "representatives" remains in the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It remains in the bill. Only the word "relatives" and the parentheses are stricken out. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SPOONER. I should like to ask the Senator what peculiar significance is attached to the language "or trustee as such?" Is that intended to mean the trustee of an express trust?

Mr. CARTER. The trustee in his official capacity, I should say.

Mr. SPOONER. Why should it be limited to that?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What is the next amendment?

Mr. CARTER. The next amendment is on page 152.

Mr. SPOONER. I should like to ask the Senator why it should be limited to trustees in an official capacity?

Mr. CARTER. This section relates to judgments. Upon reading the section the Senator will observe that it is provided—

If it be issued after the death of the judgment debtor, and be against real or personal property, it shall require the marshal to satisfy the judgment, with interest, out of any property belonging to the deceased debtor in the hands of the debtor's personal representatives, heirs, devisees, legatees, tenants of real property, or trustee as such.

Mr. SPOONER. We all know that those words are words of legal, technical signification, and of course the whole clause goes to the collection of the judgment out of property belonging to the deceased debtor.

Mr. CARTER. The deceased debtor.

Mr. SPOONER. There are trustees who might have in their possession property out of which the judgment should be satisfied, if possible, who are not official trustees. They may be holding under an implied trust.

Mr. CARTER. In that event I assume it would be necessary to go into a court of equity and have the trust character first established. This proceeding would only obtain where the character of the trustee was known, admitted, and unquestioned.

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly. But suppose here is a legatee, a tenant of real property. Of course we all understand what the operation of that section would be in such a case as that. Here is a trustee as such. Suppose a man had money in his hands belonging to the deceased debtor.

Mr. CARTER. I should say in that event he would have to account to the administrator for it. A money judgment would not be a judgment against real or personal property. This section relates only to proceedings in the nature of proceedings in rem, I should say, proceedings against the thing itself.

Mr. SPOONER. How about a garnishment? That is pretty nearly a proceeding in rem.

Mr. CARTER. I think a garnishment would abate in the event. It would have to proceed through and be allowed by a probate court.

Mr. SPOONER. A trustee is under the jurisdiction of a court of equity.

Mr. CARTER. Not necessarily; not unless he is a party to some pending action in the court. He is subject to the supervision of the court.

Mr. SPOONER. How is it proposed that the marshal under this section shall collect the judgment out of property in the hands of a trustee as such? Is it supposed he is to do it without suit?

Mr. CARTER. It might well happen in this state of affairs that a trustee had, prior to the death of the individual whose debt is about to be collected, been left as the holder of certain personal property which was to be subjected to execution or sale for the purpose of satisfying the debt. In the meantime the debtor dies. The contract will not be impaired by virtue of his death, but under this section process may issue and the property be sold if in the hands of a trustee as such. The difference in the cases contemplated by the Senator and the case I have cited would be where, for instance, a piece of property had been purchased by an individual for a person who at the time of the action or proceeding was deceased and the character of the trusteeship was denied by the purchaser of the property who held the legal title. It would be necessary in that case to go into a court of equity and first establish the trust.

Mr. SPOONER. Yes; but suppose a man had placed in trust, before the indebtedness was incurred, a sum of money for the support of his widow and children. There would be a trustee as such. The Senator would not consider this as applying to such a case as that?

Mr. CARTER. I should not, because the section reads very clearly on that subject, I think:

If it be issued after the death of the judgment debtor, and be against real or personal property.

It must be directed against specific property in some manner connected with the judgment, by contract or otherwise, prior to the death of the debtor. I think that section is all right, Mr. President. I will, therefore, call attention to page 152, line 26, where I move to strike out the word "sheriff" and insert in lieu thereof the word "marshal;" so as to read:

Fourth. If the redemptioner or purchaser have a lien prior to that of the lien creditor seeking to redeem, such redemptioner or purchaser shall submit to the marshal the like evidence thereof and of the amount due thereon, or the same may be disregarded.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CARTER. On page 315 I move to strike out all after the word "is," in line 1, section 719, at the top of the page, down to and including the letter "a," in line 4, and at the end of that section to insert the following:

And also shall have admiralty jurisdiction.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 315, section 719, line 1, after the word "is," it is proposed to strike out the following:

Established by the act of Congress entitled "An act providing a civil government for Alaska," approved May 17, 1884. It is.

And insert at the end of the section the following:

And also shall have admiralty jurisdiction.

Mr. CARTER. Let the section as proposed to be amended be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

The district court is a court of general jurisdiction, civil and criminal, at law and in equity, and also shall have admiralty jurisdiction.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CARTER. On page 330, section 758, I move to strike out the word "country," in line 2, and in line 3 I move to strike out the word "country" and insert in lieu thereof in each case the word "Territory."

The SECRETARY. On page 330, section 758, line 2, it is proposed to strike out the word "country" and insert "Territory," and in line 3 to strike out the word "country" and insert "Territory;" so as to read:

Whenever it appears that a person of any State or Territory is an attorney of the highest court of record in such State or Territory, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CARTER. On page 368, section 849, after the word "the" where it occurs the first time in line 18, I move to insert the words "commissioner having jurisdiction or to the."

The SECRETARY. On page 368, section 849, line 18, after the word "the," it is proposed to insert "commissioner having jurisdiction or to the;" so that it will read:

The claimant may present his claim to the commissioner having jurisdiction, or to the district court, or the judge thereof, for allowance.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CARTER. On page 381, section 884, line 4, I move to strike out the word "one" and insert "two;" so as to read:

In section 882.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CARTER. There is an amendment on page 436. I will pass it over for the moment because of the absence of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART], who thinks that chapter should be stricken out, and in that view I am inclined to concur. But I will pass it over for the time being.

Page 446 is the next amendment. In line 22, subdivision 4, section 1072, I move to strike out the word "without" and insert "against;" and in line 23 I move to strike out the word "consent" and insert "objection;" so that it will read:

A physician or surgeon shall not, against the objection of his patient, be examined in a civil action, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CARTER. That amendment is moved at the suggestion of the chairman of the Judiciary Committee. He felt that if the phraseology should be left as it appeared in the text a physician could not be made a witness to prove the incapacity of a person to make a will at a given time. I think the point was well taken.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KEAN in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CARTER. On page 479, section 108, in line 2, I move to insert, after the word "each" and before the word "precinct," the words "recording district or."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CARTER. These are for the time being all the amendments which I have to offer.

Mr. PERKINS. I desire to present the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, chapter 1, section 1, line 7, after the word "Juneau," add the following proviso:

Provided, That the seat of government shall remain at Sitka until suitable grounds and buildings thereon shall be obtained, by purchase or otherwise, at Juneau.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President, the object of this amendment is that the Government may first procure suitable sites in the town of Juneau for the location of the capitol and other buildings before the capital is removed. The population of Alaska is transitory. One day there is a town in southwest Alaska and a few weeks or a few months later a mining excitement has taken place and it is moved perhaps 100 miles farther north or northeast.

The present capital at Sitka has been there for one hundred years or more. The Government owns a large area of land and also many buildings in Sitka, and for the present at least it will be wise on the part of the framers of this bill not to make it mandatory to immediately remove the capital from Sitka to Juneau.

I have made a list of the property owned by the Government in Sitka, and I also have the general order which was issued by Secretary Noble, then Secretary of the Interior, on the 25th of June, 1890, giving also a list of the property owned by the Government in Sitka. I will ask permission to have the statement printed in the RECORD for future reference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California asks unanimous consent to have a statement printed in the RECORD.

Mr. BATE. Let it be read.

Mr. PERKINS. The Senator from Tennessee desires that it shall be read. Therefore I will ask to have it read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The matter sent to the desk by the Senator from California will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

PUBLIC BUILDINGS AT SITKA AND THEIR USES.

1. Large warehouse, used for storing merchandise from wharf for naval paymaster's stores, for storing coal for use of United States marshal, and for living quarters of United States customs officer.

2. New building on wharf for storing coal and supplies for the United States Revenue-Cutter Service.

3. Large three-story building, with guard room and jail in basement. Second story used for United States marshal's offices and living quarters, also kitchen for jail.

Third story for office of United States judge, court room, and living quarters for judge; also for United States district attorney's office and living quarters.

4. Large new building on Castle Hill for department of agriculture, United States Weather Bureau, etc.

5. Large two-story building for offices of collector of customs and special deputy and living quarters for these officials. Used also for offices of the clerk of the United States district court, to which is attached a new fireproof vault for the safe-keeping of his records.

6. A building used as a residence for the clerk of the court.

7. United States marine barracks for about 50 men, captain, and one lieutenant.

8. Building for governor's offices and quarters.

9. Large building used as sick bay and for naval stores.

10. Building for steam launches, near the parade ground.

11. Shell house on Japonsky Island, Sitka Harbor.

12. Powder house on Japonsky Island, Sitka Harbor.

13. Wharf (new one) on Japonsky Island.

14. Wharf at Sitka.

Mr. PERKINS. Also let the circular which was issued by Secretary Noble, under the head of "Sitka," be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, D. C., June 25, 1890.

SIR: You are hereby notified that on the 21st instant the President, by Executive order, declared certain reservations in the Territory of Alaska, as recommended by this Department in a letter dated the 19th instant.

Copies of said letter and Executive order are herewith transmitted, with directions that you notify the local officers of the district of Alaska, and that proper notation be made on the records as far as practicable.

Very respectfully,

JOHN W. NOBLE, Secretary.

The COMMISSIONER OF THE GENERAL LAND OFFICE.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, D. C., June 19, 1890.

The PRESIDENT.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith a communication from the governor of Alaska, dated April 2, 1890, inclosing the several reports of commissioners appointed by him to examine and report as to what lands in and about Sitka, Juneau, Douglas Island, and Fort Wrangel should be permanently reserved by the Government for its uses for public buildings, barracks, parade grounds, parks, wharves, coaling stations, etc., and recommending that the reservations therein reported upon be made. These reports were made in accordance with the suggestion from this Department that it be ascertained what tracts are needed by the Government, and for what purposes, and that the governor communicate his views to the head of the Department having control of the matters for which the proposed reservation is to be made, in view of the possibility that Congress may, at the present session, extend the public-land laws over Alaska.

I approve of the recommendations of the governor with three exceptions. He recommends that lots 1, 2, 3, 7, and 8 in block 7, Juneau, and all of block "C," in said town, be set aside for garrison purposes; but it is stated by the commissioners that these tracts were declared by the district court for the district of Alaska to have been reserved for garrison purposes by the Navy Department. If this be true, it will not be necessary to declare a further reservation of these tracts. But it appears that there are certain settlers on these tracts, and the commissioners recommend that they be paid for their improvements placed thereon in good faith. In this connection, I call attention to the "Act providing a civil government for Alaska" (25 Stats., 24), which provides, in section 8, that Indians or other persons in said Territory "shall not be disturbed in the possession of any lands actually in their use or occupation or now claimed by them, but the terms under which such persons may acquire title to such land is reserved for future legislation by Congress." This enactment would seem to debar the Executive from taking any action calculated to disturb any such settlers and, if the tracts had not been reserved for naval purposes, would furnish sufficient reason for disapproving this recommendation of the governor.

The governor recommends that lots 7 and 8, in block 9, as per plat of G. C. Hanus, Juneau, be reserved for court-house and jail purposes, and that a certain unnumbered block on the north side of Douglas City be reserved for like purposes. As it appears these tracts are in the possession of settlers, the recommendation is disapproved. He recommends that certain tracts in Sitka be reserved for a marine or military barracks, on condition that the United States shall erect certain buildings thereon. This reservation I suggest be made without condition. The reservation for a military cemetery, as recommended by the governor, seems to be "claimed" for the Presbyterian Board of Home Missions. The nature of the claim is not stated. However, as Congress has provided in said act of May 17, 1884, supra, that land in said Territory occupied as a missionary station shall be continued in such occupancy, to the extent of 160 acres for each such station, until further action by Congress, I am of opinion this reservation should be declared subject to the rights of said Board of Home Missions therein.

I therefore recommend that the following-described tracts of land be reserved from settlement and disposal and set apart for the purposes hereinafter mentioned.

JUNEAU AND DOUGLAS CITY.

In the town of Juneau, all that tract or block numbered 23, as per plat of said town made by G. C. Hanus, except lots 5 and 6, for public-school purposes; the island, called Juneau Island, situated in Gastineaux Channel, opposite the town of Douglas City, as a coaling station and Government wharf; the unnumbered block on the north side of the town of Douglas City, upon which is situated the public-school building, for public-school purposes.

FORT WRANGEL.

In the town of Fort Wrangle, a tract of land containing about 4 acres, upon which are the buildings now occupied by the civil government, and embraced in the following description: Beginning on the south side of Main street, at the northwest corner of the warehouse occupied by Sylvester & Reid; thence in a northwesterly direction by lands occupied by Rufus Sylvester, 210 feet to a post in picket fence; thence in a northeasterly direction along said picket fence, old stockade blockhouse and lands occupied by Rufus Sylvester, 214 feet to a post; thence in a northwesterly direction at a right angle with aforesaid line by lands of the United States, 240 feet to a post; thence in a southwesterly direction and parallel with the northwest wall of the old fort and 40 feet distant from said wall by lands of the United States, 550 feet to low tide-water mark; thence along low tide-water mark in a southeasterly direction by the sea, 450 feet, to the south side of Main street; thence along south side of Main street to place of beginning.

SITKA.

The following tracts in the town of Sitka, designated by numbers hereinafter referred to as they appear on the map of the settlement at New Archangel, Sitka, accompanying a letter from Gen. Lovell H. Rousseau, commissioner for the United States, and Alexis Pestchouroff, commissioner for Russia, published in House Executive Document No. 125, Fortieth Congress, second session, to wit:

The property designated as a "Wharf," together with the warehouse marked No. 1, situated on the approach to said wharf, for the legitimate uses and purposes of the public.

Also that tract of land described as follows: Commencing at a point 30 feet from the northwest corner of building designated on map and inventories as No. 6, thence along Lincoln street to low-water mark in the bay; thence following the shore line up low-water mark in a southeasterly direction to a point outside of a rocky point running into the bay; thence in a northeasterly direction to a point at right angles from the place of beginning; thence in a northwesterly direction to the place of beginning on Lincoln street, meaning to include with other land all of those lots designated on the map by numbers 2, 3, and 5, and part of lot number 4, for a custom-house, and other uses in the collection of customs.

Also the plot of ground marked No. 20 on the map, but more particularly described as follows: Commencing at the northern corner of that plat of ground, which we hereafter ask shall be reserved as a public common, and now known as the "parade ground," near the Presbyterian church, and running north 33° east 64.68 feet; thence west 35° north 59.73 feet; thence north 39° east 87.79 feet, to a road 26.40 feet wide, crossing this and continuing the line (north 39° east) 59.40 feet; thence east 39° south 104.28 feet; thence south 30° west 46.20 feet, to a road 26.40 feet wide; thence on south side of said road east 30° south 86.46 feet; thence south 29° west 111.54 feet; thence west 4° north 150.40 feet, to point of starting, for a marine or military barracks and garden.

Also all of that plot of ground bounded on the northwest side by Lincoln street from warehouse designated No. 1 on map and inventories and along Lincoln street and the shore line to the southern corner of the fence inclosing house designated No. 24 on the map and inventories; thence along the walk in a northwesterly direction fronting lot No. 20 and Government school No. 2, to the northwest corner of plat designated on map and inventories No. 18; thence in a southwesterly direction to water front, most of which is now known as the parade ground, for a public common.

Also that plot of ground designated on said map as No. 103, now occupied in part by Government school No. 1, and the plot of ground described as follows: Beginning at the southeast corner of lot designated on map and inventories as No. 18, in a northeast direction to the northwest corner of plot marked "I" on map and inventories; thence in a southeast direction to the southwest corner of said plot marked "I;" thence in a southwesterly direction to line of the land herein to be reserved as a public common for school purposes.

Also the blockhouse marked "C" on map and inventories for public services, including a space of ground 100 feet square surrounding the same.

Also the blockhouse marked "D" on said map and inventories, including a space of land described as follows: Beginning at a point on the northwest corner of the street running east and west from the house now occupied by the governor, and the road leading north from said street, to the Russian cemetery; thence north 50° west 660 feet, west 36° south 363 feet, south 50° east 660 feet, east 36° north 363 feet, for public buildings for the civil service.

Also, the land upon which were situated the buildings designated on the map as Nos. 116, 117, and 118, and more particularly described as follows, to wit: Commencing at a point 28 feet from the northwest corner of the main building, situated on American street, now occupied by Reuben Albertstone as a hotel, and running thence in a northerly direction 123 feet to the line of a street or road; thence along said street or road 224 feet in an easterly direction to certain fence posts; thence southeasterly 109 feet to the line of an old fence; thence in a westerly direction 197 feet, to the place of beginning, for a governor's house, or such other occupancy as may be deemed best by the General Government.

Also 10 acres of land, including that now designated on the plat of land as surveyed and claimed by Rev. Sheldon Jackson for the Presbyterian Board of Home Missions, as the same appears of record in the office of the recorder, ex officio, for this district and marked "military cemetery," and more particularly described as follows, to wit: Beginning at corner mark No. VIII on said plat, running northwesterly 660 feet, thence at right angles southwesterly 660 feet, thence southeasterly 660 feet, thence northeasterly 660 feet, containing 10 acres, more or less, for a military and naval cemetery, subject to any rights which said Board of Home Missions may have.

Also 250 feet of land on each side of the stream of water running into Jamestown Bay on the south side thereof on Baranoff Island, now used for watering purposes by the United States Navy and mercantile vessels, for a wharf and such other purposes as may be necessary for the uses of the United States Navy and mercantile marine; also all of that island situated directly opposite the town of Sitka, known as Japonsky Island, for naval and military purposes.

The tract of land bounded on the west by the line as established by the survey made for the Presbyterian Mission, and along the shore line of the bay at low tide to the mouth of Indian River, and across the mouth of said river and along its right bank for an average width of 500 feet, along said bank to the point known as Indian River Falls, and also on the left bank of said river from said falls an average width of 200 feet, from said falls to the eastern line or boundary as shown on the mission plat, for a public park.

Herewith I inclose a copy of the opinion of the Assistant Attorney-General for this Department touching the legal points involved, which meets with my approval.

Very respectfully, JOHN W. NOBLE, Secretary.

In accordance with the recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior, the above-described tracts of public land in the Territory of Alaska are hereby reserved for the uses and purposes indicated by the Secretary until otherwise directed by Congress.

BENJ. HARRISON.

Mr. CARTER. With the Senator's permission, I ask that the matter which I send to the desk be read, so as to secure a continuous statement in the RECORD of the official reports relative to the public buildings in Alaska.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

Mr. CARTER. Read the parts marked. It is from the governor's report for 1899.

The Secretary read as follows:

PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

The Department of Justice has in hand an appropriation for the erection of a court-house and jail at Juneau, and an examiner was sent out to make a report upon matters connected therewith. Perhaps ere this the necessary steps have been taken to begin the work. The people of Juneau have been anxious about this for some time, for since their court-house burned down they have been left to all sorts of makeshifts to provide suitable quarters in which to hold court. In regard to the public buildings at Sitka no more can be said than has been reported for the past two years. The buildings are old Russian structures made of great logs. The lower courses have decayed, and it is hardly possible to keep the buildings in shape. They have been repaired for years, and the use of any further sums for such purposes is really a waste. It is a wonder that the inmates of the jail keep their health, for they are simply hemmed in by decayed timbers. There should be built a proper penitentiary and suitable office buildings, and for this the sum of $110,000 is asked.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President, my only object in having this matter placed in the RECORD is for the information of Senators or others who may hereafter desire to know what property the Government now owns in the present capital of Sitka. The object of my amendment is not to delay or obstruct the removal of the capital from Sitka to Juneau when the Government, through its proper officers, has acquired a proper title to suitable land upon which to erect the buildings.

Now, I do not charge that the people of Juneau are different from those of any other town or city in the great West or in any of the States of the Union; but experience has shown me (and one is wise who learns from his own experience) that in a county where there has been a contest for the removal of a county seat the people promise very much before the question is determined as to what they will do in the county.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California will suspend for a moment. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which the Secretary will state.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 8245) temporarily to provide revenues for the relief of the island of Puerto Rico, and for other purposes.

Mr. FORAKER. There are some other amendments about which there will be no contest, I believe. I will ask the Senate to consider those at this time.

Mr. CARTER. Will the Senator from Ohio kindly have the unfinished business temporarily laid aside until the disposition of the pending amendment?

Mr. FORAKER. I was not aware that there was an amendment under consideration. If there is, I ask that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside until the matter now under consideration may be concluded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. HALE. Only, as I understand the Senator, until the pending amendment is disposed of.

Mr. FORAKER. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Until the pending amendment is disposed of. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. STEWART. Allow me to call attention for one moment to a proposed amendment. I wish to submit it for the consideration of the Senate, not to be acted upon now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California is entitled to the floor.

Mr. PERKINS. I will not attempt to elaborate upon the general proposition. It is well understood by all that it is wise policy and expedient on the part of the Government that we should wait until we have obtained a proper title to land upon which to erect these Government buildings. As I stated before, it is not intended to delay or impede the removal of the capital from Sitka to Juneau. That is left entirely to the discretion of the Attorney-General and the Secretary of the Interior. I do not apprehend, therefore, that there can be any objection whatever to the amendment which I have proposed. I trust the chairman of the committee will accept the amendment and that there will be no objection to it.

Mr. CARTER. Let the amendment be read again.

Mr. HALE. Yes; let it be read again.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be again read.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, chapter 1, section 1, line 7, after the word "Juneau," add the following proviso:

Provided, That the seat of government shall remain at Sitka until suitable grounds and buildings thereon shall be obtained, by purchase or otherwise, at Juneau.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from California.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CARTER. There are several——

Mr. STEWART. Will the Senator give way to me to make a suggestion, not to make a speech?

Mr. CARTER. There were several other small amendments that can be readily disposed of, if the Senator from Ohio will generously consent to allow the unfinished business to lie over.

Mr. STEWART. Before the pending bill goes over, I should like to make just a suggestion in regard to an amendment.

Mr. CARTER. I suggest to the Senator from Nevada that we might at this time, with the consent of the Senator from Ohio, dispose of the amendment he proposes to present.

Mr. FORAKER. I understand that the Senator from Montana has two or three other amendments which he thinks it will take but little time to dispose of, and I am willing that the unfinished business may temporarily go over until they are voted on.

Mr. BATE. It may take some time to consider them.

Mr. FORAKER. I yield with the understanding that there will be no protracted debate.

Mr. HALE. I hope the Senator will not allow the day to be taken up.

Mr. STEWART. I want to occupy but a moment.

Mr. FORAKER. I understand it will require probably but a very few minutes to dispose of the amendments the Senator from Montana wants to have considered. If there is anything presented to which there is any serious objection I will not yield for it.

Mr. STEWART. I desire to call attention to the provisions giving justices of the peace jurisdiction in mining questions. I shall move to strike out——

Mr. HALE. Where is that found?

Mr. STEWART. It commences on page 436. I shall move to strike out those entire provisions. I have had some experience in that matter. In California the first statutes conferred jurisdiction on justices of the peace in mining claims. Afterwards, in about two years, a case went to the Supreme Court, and the court held that that jurisdiction could not be given under the Constitution. During that period there was great disorder. Previous to that time, before California was a State, questions involving title to and possession of mining claims had been determined by arbitration. After California became a State, by the first statute jurisdiction was conferred on justices of the peace in mining cases. Previous to the passage of that statute miners themselves had a general understanding, which extended nearly all over the country, that they would arbitrate their titles. When there was a dispute one of the disputants would select one man, and the other another, and the two a third. These arbitrators had courts, which were conducted with great dignity, and decided with perfect order cases in which millions of dollars were involved.

Then, when the jurisdictions of the justices of the peace came in, the person who was elected or appointed justice of the peace was not strong enough to conduct the cases. He would not be a man of sufficient moral and intellectual strength even to keep order, and it became a question of physical and moral force. Cases were decided without regard to law or to right, when they had nothing but a justice of the peace between the contending parties. While they had arbitrators between them they had substantial justice, and also after the provision conferring jurisdiction was declared unconstitutional. It went before the higher courts, and then they got justice.

I wish to call attention to the fact that when there are great interests, amounting to probably millions, involved in a case before a justice of the peace, he has not the standing in community and the force to decide such cases. In such a contest up in Alaska the strongest party will win. Some other device must be had to try the possession of mining cases there.

Mr. SHOUP. Will the Senator from Nevada yield to me for a moment?

Mr. STEWART. Certainly.

Mr. SHOUP. The justice of the peace as provided in this bill is a United States commissioner, who can sit as an ordinary justice of the peace, such as they have in——

Mr. STEWART. He will be pretty ordinary if he has jurisdiction as a justice of the peace and has limited power. I do not propose to press the amendment now. I simply move to strike out the sections. I will let the amendment be pending for consideration. I will not occupy the time to-day, but I make the motion now and I shall call it to the attention of the Senate to be considered when the bill is again brought up.

Mr. BATE. Will the Senator give us the sections he proposes to strike out?

Mr. STEWART. It commences on page 436.

Mr. SHOUP. At section 1042.

Mr. CARTER. The Senator's motion is to strike out chapter 104.

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir; I move that amendment. It may be possible that something else can be devised which will be strong enough to stand between the contestants in mining controversies.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I ask for the consideration of an amendment. I will say in relation to it that it simply provides for the appointment of clerks of courts in the same manner as is provided in other Territories.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 2, section 6, page 7, after the word "remove," insert the words "clerks and."

Mr. HALE. So as to read?

The SECRETARY. So that it will read:

The respective judges of the court shall appoint, and at pleasure remove, clerks and commissioners in and for the district, etc.

And on page 11, line 2, of section 10, strike out the word "clerks;" so that it will read:

The governor, surveyor-general, and ex-officio secretary of the district, attorneys, judges, and the marshals provided for in this act shall be appointed by the President, etc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, this amendment should not prevail. The duties of the clerks of the United States courts and of the courts in the Territories appointed by the judges there are ministerial. They perform their duties under the direction of the court. In the district of Alaska conditions have compelled us to depart somewhat from the ordinary routine work of the clerk by placing additional and very serious duties upon his shoulders. There is a large area of country, and it has seemed to the committee desirable that the execution of the law should be provided for, but that a multiplication of officers ought, if possible, to be avoided.

Therefore, we have placed upon the clerk of the court not only the ordinary duties which attach to that office, but likewise the duty of collecting the licenses and of accounting to the Treasury of the United States for the license fees when collected. We make him ex officio recorder of deeds and instruments under certain conditions. He is the custodian of public funds. He is the paymaster who, under the order of the court, pays all the bills that are to be paid in Alaska except those paid through the marshal's office.

It is not unreasonable to expect, in view of past experience, that the clerk of each division of this court will collect for license fees during the year from $50,000 to $100,000. The license fees thus collected must be accounted for to the Treasury of the United States. He is the collector of internal revenue there to that extent. We provide, on page 14, section 12 of the bill, that—

The clerks of the court shall each, before entering upon the duties of his office, execute a bond, with sufficient sureties, to be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, or the court or a judge thereof, in the penalty of $20,000, for the faithful performance of his official duties, and file the same with the Attorney-General.

This officer, by virtue of the duty devolving upon him to collect licenses and to account for the license fees to the Secretary of the Treasury, is not, strictly speaking, a court officer. He becomes an ex-officio officer of the Treasury of the United States.

Again, very great power is placed in the hands of the judges in that remote district. The judges appoint the United States commissioners. These commissioners are ex-officio justices of the peace, and likewise ex-officio probate judges, and, in certain instances, recorders of deeds. Very large estates may be settled. These estates are likely to involve portable property—property readily disposed of. The district judges have general supervision over the commissioners in the settlement of estates. The district judges are directly accountable to the circuit court of appeals for the ninth circuit, and in that manner accountable to the circuit court of appeals and likewise to the Department of Justice. We have believed that their feeling of accountability would be sufficiently strong at all times to secure a faithful, honest, and efficient discharge of duty; but, notwithstanding these checks, we thought we would put in another check by making the cashier, the clerk, the collector of internal revenue, a Presidential appointee, and not a creature of the judge, as this proposed amendment would make that officer.

It is a fact, too well known to be debated or controverted for a moment, that the appointing power exercises a certain influence over the appointee. If, by any chance, we should unfortunately have an unworthy person appointed judge of one of those remote districts, and that judge in turn should have the appointment and thereby control over the clerk, we might be merged in great scandals that it would certainly be desirable to avoid, even in the dim and distant prospect. Actuated by such views of the case as these, we thought it better that the clerk should be commissioned by the same authority that commissioned the judge.

We provide, however, that the judge for cause may suspend the clerk and appoint some person to discharge the duties of his office during such suspension; but the judge is thereupon directed to immediately report the cause of suspension to the Attorney-General and await the order of the President. If the clerk has a contention with the judge which is meritorious, he may well encounter temporary suspension, knowing that the judge must justify his action before the Department of Justice. In this way we have a check upon the clerk, however. If he should prove unworthy in the performance of his duty, the court may immediately suspend him, bearing in mind always that this action of the court will be subject to inspection by the Attorney-General and the President.

The tendency of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wyoming would be to concentrate a still greater power in the hands of the court and lessen the accountability of that officer to the Government, and might open the way to certain abuses which it is earnestly desired should be avoided.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, the statement of the Senator from Montana would apply with equal justice to the clerks of every Territorial court within the jurisdiction of the United States. It occurred to me there would be no objection to this amendment, because of the fact that the provision in the bill is the first departure from the time-honored and proved system of judges of the various courts appointing their own clerks.

It seems to me that the President of the United States might as well be called upon to appoint a constable in Montana as to appoint a clerk of a court. It can not be assumed that the judges whom the President will select and this Senate confirm will be unworthy.

I see no occasion for making this extraordinary departure. There may be some reason for it, but I believe the amendment ought to prevail, because I believe every court ought to be surrounded by those who are in strict sympathy with the court; that in that way justice is more apt to be done. The clerk has to give bond. I believe the amendment is right, and I hope it will prevail.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. PERKINS. I desire to offer a proposed amendment; and I ask that it be printed in the RECORD, and go over until to-morrow, when the bill is again brought up for consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California offers a proposed amendment, which he asks may be printed in the RECORD and lie upon the table. That order will be made in the absence of objection.

The amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. PERKINS is to insert as new sections the following:

SEC. 460. That any person or persons, corporation, or company prosecuting or attempting to prosecute any of the following lines of business within the district of Alaska shall first apply for and obtain license so to do from a district court or a subdivision thereof in said district, and pay for said license for the respective lines of business and trade as follows, to wit:

SEC. 2. That section 463 of chapter 44, Title II, of the above-named act be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 463. That the licenses provided for in this act shall be issued by the clerk of the district court or any subdivision thereof in compliance with the order of the court or judge thereof duly made and entered; and the clerk of the court shall keep a full record of all applications for license and of all recommendations for and remonstrances against the granting of licenses and of the action of the court thereon: Provided, That the clerk of said court and each division thereof shall give bond or bonds in such amount as the Secretary of the Treasury may require and in such form as the Attorney-General may approve, and all moneys received for licenses by him or them under this act shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe."

SEC. 3. That section 468 of chapter 44, Title II, of the above-named act be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding at the end thereof the following, to wit: "And provided further, That all moneys collected as a license upon the liquor traffic as herein provided shall be set aside for and devoted to the maintenance of the public schools of the district of Alaska."

Mr. CARTER. Inasmuch as the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] does not desire to press his amendment to-day, I will state that we have reached a point where, if the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] desires to proceed with the bill which he has in charge, we will yield.

Mr. FORAKER. I ask that the unfinished business may be taken up.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8347) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901, and for other purposes; asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. BINGHAM, Mr. HEMENWAY, and Mr. LIVINGSTON managers at the conference on the part of the House.

STATUE OF OLIVER P. MORTON.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I desire to give notice that after the close of the routine morning business on Saturday next I shall ask the Senate to consider resolutions accepting a statue of Oliver P. Morton, of Indiana.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8347) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate accede to the request for a conference.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. CULLOM, Mr. SEWELL, and Mr. TELLER were appointed.

GOVERNMENT FOR PUERTO RICO.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8245) temporarily to provide revenues for the relief of the island of Puerto Rico, and for other purposes.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, when the Senate went into executive session yesterday we were considering a proposition to amend section 32 of the Senate substitute for House bill 8245 by striking out, on page 21, from lines 10, 11, and 12—relating to the district court, or Federal court, as it has been termed, which this bill proposes to create for Puerto Rico—the following language:

Which shall be attached to, and be a part of, the second judicial circuit of the United States.

I hope Senators who wanted time to look into the matter have had an opportunity to do so. If there is no objection made now, I will assume that that amendment is satisfactory. I need not add anything to what I said yesterday on that subject.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I understand from the liberal practice of the Senate that the amendments which are now being incorporated in the bill will themselves be open to amendment when we come to consider the bill as a whole if anyone should then desire to make a motion to that effect.

Mr. FORAKER. That is as I understand.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be agreed to, if there be no objection. The Chair hears none, and the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. FORAKER. I now propose to amend section 32 by inserting in line 16, on page 21, after the word "shall," the words "be called the district court of the United States for Puerto Rico, and shall;" so that the sentence will read:

The district court for said district shall be called the district court of the United States for Puerto Rico, and shall have power to appoint all necessary officials, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FORAKER. I propose to further amend section 32 by inserting on page 22, in line 4, before the word "courts," the word "district," and by changing the word "courts" to "court," from the plural to the singular.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FORAKER. I propose to further amend the same section by inserting in line 9, on page 22, after the words "held at," the words "Mayaguez, at;" so that it will provide that a district court may be held at Mayaguez as well as at San Juan and Ponce.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FORAKER. I also offer to amend by inserting in the same line, after the word "other," the word "stated."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FORAKER. I move to further amend in the same section, at the end of line 9, and at the beginning of line 10, by striking out the words "and places in the district."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FORAKER. I propose now to amend by inserting in section 33, page 22, line 21, after the words "Puerto Rico," the words "and the district court of the United States."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FORAKER. I now propose to further amend section 33 by inserting in line 7, on page 23, after the words "judges of," the words "the district and circuit courts of."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FORAKER. I propose to further amend by striking out from line 7, on page 23, the words "in the District of Columbia," and by inserting a period after the words "United States."

Mr. BACON. Before the Senator passes from that section, I desire to call his attention to a little difference of phraseology which may have been intentional and may have been simply an inadvertence from the clause just immediately under consideration, which reads:

And the supreme and district courts of Puerto Rico and the respective judges thereof may grant writs of habeas corpus in all cases in which the same are grantable by the judges of the United States courts in the District of Columbia.

It is not a matter of any consequence, Mr. President, except as to the correctness of the expression. I will ask the Senator whether there ought not to be the same phraseology in referring to the officers in Puerto Rico as there is in referring to the officers in the District of Columbia? In other words, these writs ought to be grantable by the judges of the courts. It is expressed in conjunction: "And the supreme and district courts of Puerto Rico and the respective judges thereof." Writs of habeas corpus are always granted by judges and not by courts in their complete organization. I merely call the attention of the Senator to that difference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will suggest to the Senator from Georgia to allow the amendment to be stated as it will read if amended as proposed by the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. BACON. Very well; I may be mistaken about it.

Mr. FORAKER. I can explain it to the Senator.

The SECRETARY. As proposed to be amended the clause would read:

And the supreme and district courts of Puerto Rico and the respective judges thereof may grant writs of habeas corpus in all cases in which the same are grantable by the judges of the district and circuit courts of the United States.

Mr. BACON. As read by the Secretary the clause contains the language to which I desired to direct the attention of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. FORAKER. I understand what it is of which the Senator from Georgia speaks. The answer to what he suggests is that this applies only to the Territorial courts in this connection. We provide there a supreme court, and we provide for five district courts; and this supreme court for the Territory has five judges, and these five district courts have each three judges. The idea was that the whole court might act when an application is made for a writ of habeas corpus. We thought that would be the better method, because the associate judges are not supposed to be quite so learned in the law as the chief justice.

Mr. BACON. There is no objection to it unless it be simply that of redundancy. There is no objection to the practical effect it may have.

Mr. FORAKER. In the opinion of the committee it is better in the form in which we have put it.

Mr. BACON. Very well.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PETTUS. Before this judicial matter is passed over, I desire to ask the Senator in charge of the bill whether or not the committee has considered that in section 32 we leave this district court of the United States, "in addition to the ordinary jurisdiction of district courts of the United States, jurisdiction of all cases cognizant in the circuit courts of the United States." You make a court with a tenure of the judges of four years, and you make the jurisdiction of the court exactly that of the district and circuit courts of the United States, whose judges have a tenure for life. I ask the Senator if that can be done, and I want to know if the committee has considered that question.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, in answer to the Senator from Alabama, I will say that the committee did consider that question. This provision as originally drawn undertook to provide for a constitutional court, and it said nothing about life tenure. We conferred upon the court all the jurisdiction that is conferred upon the circuit and district courts of the United States. Subsequently we changed it in the committee to a tenure of four years, which makes it clearly a Territorial or a legislative court.

Then the question arose as to the jurisdiction. The committee did not see that there was any objection to giving to such court all the jurisdiction that the district and circuit courts of the United States have. That, we understand, has been the practice with respect to the Territorial courts where they have been given both a Federal and a local jurisdiction. The Federal jurisdiction has been given in express language "all the jurisdiction of the circuit and district courts of the United States," the only difference between this legislative court and the legislative courts ordinarily provided for the Territories being that this is entirely separated from the Territorial courts and is given no local jurisdiction, but only a United States jurisdiction.

If the Senator will allow me, I can refer him, by taking a moment's time to look them up, to the various Territorial acts creating Territorial courts and investing them with that jurisdiction.

Mr. ALLEN. Will the Federal courts have any supervisory control or jurisdiction of the matters before the local courts?

Mr. FORAKER. None whatever; but the right to remove from the local courts into the United States court will be the same as it is in the States of the Union.

Mr. ALLEN. In that sense you provide a supervisory control?

Mr. FORAKER. It would not be a supervisory control as to the jurisdiction that is given to the local courts; but where there is a right, in the first instance, because of diverse citizenship, to go into the United States court, a party having a right of removal to the United States court, if the action were pending in a State, might exercise that same right under the provisions of this proposed act.

Mr. ALLEN. Why can not this jurisdiction be vested in one tribunal without creating this distinction between the Federal court proper and the local court?

Mr. FORAKER. It was thought the situation was so different from the situation we ordinarily find in the Territories as to make this very appropriate and even necessary.

Mr. ALLEN. In what respect?

Mr. FORAKER. I can refer the Senator in that connection to what General Davis said about it when he was a witness before our committee. Testifying on this point, he testified that he found it necessary to establish, by Order No. 88, what he calls a "United States provisional court." I have here in the report of the hearings of that committee, which has been printed as Senate Document No. 147, that order. This provision creates a court to be the successor of the United States provisional court, and General Davis's whole testimony as to the necessity for it can be summed up by referring to what he says in the first paragraph of General Order No. 88, creating this court. Allow me to read it in this connection as an answer to the Senator's inquiry:

General Orders, No. 88. HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF PUERTO RICO, San Juan, June 27, 1899.

I. In view of existing and steadily increasing legal business requiring judicial determination which does not fall within the jurisdiction of the local insular courts, such as smuggling goods in evasion of revenue laws, larceny of United States property, controversies between citizens of different States and of foreign states, violation of the United States postal laws, etc., and pursuant to authority from the President of the United States, conveyed by indorsement of April 14, 1899, from the Acting Secretary of War, and after full conference with the supreme court and members of the bar of the island, a United States provisional court is hereby established for the Department of Puerto Rico.

In his testimony before the committee in connection with the production of that order, General Davis says, at page 20 of this Senate Document No. 147, under this order allowing him to do so:

I proceeded to create a tribunal. I appointed a law judge and two associates, a clerk of the court, a prosecuting attorney, and a marshal, and set that court on its feet, with powers and authority very closely analogous to those which Federal courts have in the States and Territories, and it has been since discharging its duties and administering justice. And I feel sure that great benefit to Puerto Rico has been the result. Questions of jurisdiction have arisen, appeals or attempts to take appeals, to the Supreme Court of the United States have been made, but there has been nothing to impede its usefulness and nothing to convince me that it was unwise or inexpedient, and everything to show that it was beneficial and advantageous.

Then he testified further, elaborating that same idea; but the committee, after carefully looking into it, thought in Puerto Rico, by reason of its insular position and important admiralty jurisdiction which some court must have, that it would be wise to have a Federal court pure and simple, not only in order that cases such as he mentions might be taken cognizance and jurisdiction of and settled in that court on the accounts given by him, but generally.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I do not see why the whole jurisdiction may not be invested in an ordinary Territorial court.

Mr. FORAKER. It could be; but one trouble is that in the ordinary court the proceedings are yet conducted in the Spanish language.

Mr. ALLEN. Can not that be controlled by this bill?

Mr. FORAKER. Well, it could be; but we thought it better to have a court in which the English language alone is used, and this bill provides that all proceedings in this court shall be in the English language.

Mr. ALLEN. But why should they adopt the Spanish language in their procedure?

Mr. FORAKER. They already have that language, and for the time being it is not interfered with.

Mr. ALLEN. Is there no purpose of changing that?

Mr. FORAKER. Not immediately. It would be practically impossible to change it at once, according to our advices. The people are not familiar with any other than the Spanish language, and the best way, it was thought, was to let them continue with their present codes of procedure and methods of practice and the use of their own language, employing, of course, interpreters where the English language was necessary to be understood; and in the meanwhile creating this court to take jurisdiction of such cases as are mentioned by General Davis and such other cases as may suggest themselves to Senators, in which court there should be used the English language alone.

Mr. ALLEN. Would there not be the same objection in the procedure in this court of which the Senator speaks? That is, if there is difficulty in that island of proceeding in the English language in one court, would that not be the case as to all those tribunals?

Mr. FORAKER. Not so much so in this court. Foreigners and our own citizens and those who are more familiar with the English language would be the litigants according to the jurisdiction given to the court; while in the other courts, which would be purely local, the litigation would be almost necessarily conducted in every instance, if the convenience of suitors is to be regarded, in the Spanish language.

Mr. ALLEN. I think that is one of the things which the committee ought to take into consideration. So long as the proceedings are allowed to be conducted in a foreign language in that island we encourage that kind of practice, but there must come a time when we shall have to change it, and will it not be more difficult to make the change hereafter than to make it now?

Mr. FORAKER. If the Senator will allow me, I wish to say just one word. First, I will remind the Senator from Nebraska that this bill designs to establish what you might call a civil government temporarily—a temporary civil government—one of the provisions of this bill being that the President shall appoint a commission consisting of three men, one of whom shall be a Puerto Rican, to compile and revise and codify all the laws and codes of procedure in the island, and to report within twelve months from the passage of this act a more permanent frame of government. I have a number of letters which have been written me by lawyers and others who are familiar with the situation in Puerto Rico, strongly urging that they be given a Federal court for such reasons as I have given here.

Mr. ALLEN. If the Senator will permit me, I do not doubt that the inhabitants of that island would like to have a distinct Federal court; but that is not the question we ought to consider. We ought to determine whether the conditions which exist in the island of Puerto Rico require the establishment of a Federal court distinct from the ordinary local courts, which may be invested with Federal jurisdiction.

One remark was made by the Senator from Ohio a moment ago—I do not know that it is particularly germane to the subject—I want to enter my dissent from; and that is, that the chief justice is presumed to know more than the associate justices.

Mr. FORAKER. What I mean by that is that he knows more about the law.

Mr. ALLEN. No.

Mr. FORAKER. Associated with the chief justice of this district court at the present time are two associate justices, who are not selected because of their great learning in the law. I believe one of them is an Army officer. Of course when these courts are set in motion the endeavor will be to get judges all of whom are learned in the law.

Mr. ALLEN. I never heard it asserted before that a chief justice knew more of the law than his associate justices, and yet possibly that may be true. But I will have to take the matter under consideration some time before I believe it is true. Men do not attain knowledge by reason of being elected to some office. If that were true, a great many men would be elected to knowledge that they do not otherwise possess, and a great many men serving in the ranks of public life would be deprived of knowledge in consequence of the failure to be elected to some position.

There ought to be no tampering with this tribunal. There ought to be no namby-pamby work, no hotch-potch work. It is not a great question to solve the judicial situation of the island of Puerto Rico or any other country. They have an island there with practically 800,000 people, such as they are. They have admiralty jurisdiction or must exercise admiralty jurisdiction, and general, civil, and criminal jurisdiction. They must enforce their local laws as well as the Federal laws applicable to that island.

This bill, as I understand it, divides the island into five districts and five judges are appointed for local purposes, and one judge is to be appointed whose duty it will be to exercise Federal jurisdiction alone. Now, no man has given a reason, in my judgment, why the Federal judge, as he is called, should be given original and exclusive jurisdiction in the enforcement of Federal statutes and in the exercise of Federal jurisdiction, with revisory control of the judgments or proceedings of the other court. Men of eminent capacity can be found who can discharge all these duties, Federal and local, and there is no necessity whatever of increasing the pay roll of the Government of the United States by placing upon those people a judge whose duties can be performed by the local authorities.

Of course, this island ought to be attached to some judicial district, with the right of appeal and writ of error to an appellate court and from there to the Supreme Court of the United States in proper cases. One fault I find with this bill is that it seems to desire to create an army of useless officeholders, all of whom of course must be paid out of the taxes wrung from the people.

Mr. FORAKER. If the Senator will allow me, he is mistaken about that. They had eleven district courts in Puerto Rico and have had since time whereof the memory of man runneth not to the contrary; and in lieu of eleven we have provided five, the number provided by General Davis by military order, he testifying before us that he found that five district judges were enough to transact all the judicial business of the island of Puerto Rico belonging to the jurisdiction given to the district courts. We have not increased the number of judges in the supreme court. The only increase is in the provision for this Federal court, and, as General Davis testified, there seems to be a very pressing necessity for it, and we were satisfied by what he said in regard to it before the committee that it was our duty to continue it with a different jurisdiction from that which the provisional court has in some particulars.

Mr. ALLEN. I have not the slightest doubt that five good judges can do the business of that island better than their eleven predecessors.

Mr. FORAKER. I was simply speaking of the Senator's remark that the effort of this bill seemed to be to multiply the number of officials. We have reduced the number of officials about one-half.

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator does not come to the point.

Mr. FORAKER. What is the point? I will be glad to come to it.

Mr. ALLEN. The point is why these duties can be performed by a Federal judge but can not be performed by a local judge.

Mr. FORAKER. They could be; but the supreme court of that island has an abundance to do to attend to the local litigation that will come into it from the five district courts of the island, and it was thought by those who are more competent to judge than anybody here, perhaps, men who are very capable and who are on the ground and have had practical experience——

Mr. ALLEN. Who are they?

Mr. FORAKER. Such witnesses as General Davis and others.

Mr. ALLEN. I would not want to take a military man's opinion on the judiciary.

Mr. FORAKER. General Davis has been there as governor, charged with responsibility, and we take his opinion based on the experience which he gives us. And not only that, but, as I said to the Senator, we have a great many letters and petitions to us praying for the continuance of a United States court there, with jurisdiction of its own. It is a place where a great many foreigners come, as well as a great many citizens of the United States, all of whom are liable to have litigation, and it is a court in which all these controversies which may arise under the treaty, and there is promise of a good many, can be adjudicated.

Mr. ALLEN. If I were going to inquire into some military matters, I would go to a military man. If I wanted to inquire into some intricate subject of medicine, I would go to a doctor; or if as to surgery, to a surgeon; or if as to theology, to a theologian; but I never would go to a man for his opinion upon a subject with which he is not familiar and to which he has devoted no study. I have no doubt General Davis is all right in his position; he is a military man; but of what earthly value is his opinion of the necessities of the judicial situation in the island of Puerto Rico? It is absurd to call upon a military man to devise a judicial system to be adopted by Congress for that island. The Senator from Ohio is a distinguished statesman and lawyer of long years' practice at the bar in his State and elsewhere, and I would infinitely rather trust his judgment to devise a scheme for a judiciary in Puerto Rico than all the generals and colonels and majors and captains in the Regular Army. I think they know nothing about it.

But the Senator does not answer the vital question: Why, if it is within our power to confer upon the local courts jurisdiction of all Federal questions, with a right of appeal to the circuit court of appeals and from there to the Supreme Court of the United States, this extra judge is tacked on to the judiciary of Puerto Rico?

Mr. FORAKER. I do answer the question. The Senator will certainly do me the credit to admit that I have given an answer, whether it is satisfactory to him or not. My answer is that we were of opinion that the supreme court had enough business to do without having this jurisdiction, and that it was necessary to create an additional judge, and we based that opinion upon the experience of General Davis and many others. I do not ask the Senator to take alone the opinion of General Davis, although I am sure if he had met General Davis as we met him he would concede that he is not only a very able officer and a very able man generally, but a very able lawyer as well.

Mr. ALLEN. I do not doubt that he is a very able man.

Mr. FORAKER. Yes, certainly, a man who is very conservative in his statements and a man who based everything he said before the committee upon his practical experience there. But I have a letter sent to me by Mr. F. H. Dexter, who is an American lawyer located in San Juan. He is a very intelligent gentleman. He was here in the city to argue a case before the Supreme Court of the United States a week or two ago. He called to see our committee.

Mr. ALLEN. That simply proves that Mr. Dexter wants an extra judge.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. Dexter points out the reasons why nearly everybody wants a United States judge, but, of course, it is a question whether or not they assign good reasons.

Mr. ALLEN. I do not know but that if I were a resident of Puerto Rico I should want an extra judge. But that is not the question. The question is whether they need it.

Mr. FORAKER. The committee are of opinion they do need it.

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator has repeated two or three times that the committee were of the opinion they do need it, but the Senator, aside from saying that the local court would have all it could do or all that it was necessary for it to do, fails to answer why the distinction should be made between the local and the Federal judiciary of that island.

If the local judiciary, the five judges selected to administer the local affairs, would be overburdened by giving them Federal jurisdiction, why not increase their number and make the number six or seven, and confer upon the tribunal as constituted jurisdiction of all local causes and all causes arising under the Constitution and treaties and statutes of the United States, with, of course, appellate power?

Mr. FORAKER. That would not abridge the number of officials, which seems to be the chief objection of the Senator, and would not work so well, in the opinion of the committee, as it would to separate the courts and to separate the jurisdictions. Before we have to go into executive session at 3 o'clock, and it is only a minute of that time, I will ask the Senate to allow me to have this letter from Mr. Dexter, to which I have referred, printed in the RECORD. I will not stop to read it now. We can look it over in the morning.

The letter referred to is as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 8, 1900.

MY DEAR SIR: I beg to submit herewith some suggestions bearing upon the proposed legislation for Puerto Rico from the standpoint of an American lawyer and member of the bar of the provisional court of Puerto Rico and resident in the island for two years last past.

Not less important than the adoption of American laws for the island is the establishment of an American court to construe the same in accordance with American principles. Without reflecting upon the insular courts, I desire to impress upon those intrusted with the adoption of legislation for Puerto Rico the urgent and immediate necessity for the establishment of an American court in Puerto Rico of a permanent character, whose jurisdiction will be fixed and certain and will embrace litigation to which Americans and foreigners may be parties.

There is all the more necessity for determining this matter at this time, for the reason that the claim is made by some of the lawyers of Puerto Rico that, by the provisions of Article XI of the treaty of Paris, Spanish subjects in Puerto Rico are deprived of jurisdiction of American courts in Puerto Rico. The contention is speciously made that the term "courts of the country," employed in the said article with reference to Spanish subjects in Puerto Rico, has exclusive application to the insular courts of Puerto Rico.

This claim is not well founded, for the following reasons:

First. Because such a construction would prevent the prosecution of Spanish subjects in an American court for the violation of a Federal statute.

Second. Because the plain intention of the Spanish commissioners and the necessary construction of the language in Article XI was, and is, to give to Spanish subjects residing in Puerto Rico the privilege of invoking the same courts as the citizens of the United States.

I speak authoritatively and advisedly when I represent that the vast majority of the Spanish subjects now residing in Puerto Rico, agree with me in this construction, and demand, under said article of the treaty of Paris, the privilege of invoking such American courts of competent jurisdiction as may be established in Puerto Rico.

Not only the Spanish subjects in Puerto Rico, but the subjects of other nations and the citizens of the United States, desire the privilege of invoking the jurisdiction of the American court in the same manner that they might do in a Federal court in the United States.

The jurisdiction of the American court to be established in Puerto Rico should substantially embrace the cases provided in Article III, section 2, paragraph 1, of the Constitution, and perhaps a special grant of power may be necessary, so as to include, "All cases affecting ambassadors, other public ministers and consuls; to all cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction," etc.

Inasmuch as a large amount of the cases which will come before the American court in Puerto Rico will involve the construction of contracts created under the Spanish law, and a determination of the rights of the parties according to Spanish law, I would respectfully suggest the advisability of providing for the appointment of two Puerto Rican lawyers to act as associate judges to advise and consult with the American judge upon such cases, but without having the right of decision. Two such lawyers could be secured at a moderate salary.

I would respectfully suggest, also, that the prosecuting attorney, or district attorney, of the American and insular courts be prohibited from practicing in other cases before the court of which he is an officer.

The American and foreign residents in Puerto Rico strenuously insist upon the establishment of an American court as above outlined, because of the great delay and annoyance experienced by them in litigation in the insular courts, whose methods are exceedingly dilatory, expensive, and the occasion for numerous criticisms. It may be stated positively that without the establishment of such a court, neither American or foreign investors will have confidence in the administration of the laws in the island.

Referring to the provision of the Foraker bill with reference to the functions of the attorney-general of the island, it would seem that some provision should be made for his officiating in both the American and insular courts.

I would respectfully call attention to the provision with reference to the qualification of voters in elections to be held after the adoption of the civil-government bill. The Foraker bill provides that "at such elections all citizens of Puerto Rico shall be allowed to vote who possess the qualifications of voters under the laws and military orders in force on the 1st day of March, 1900." The qualifications provided in existing military orders, among other things, require a two-year residence in Puerto Rico next preceding the date of registration. As there is a substantial body of respectable American citizens who have gone to Puerto Rico within the past year with a bona fide intention of settling there, and have engaged in business there, it would seem only fair that having lost the right of suffrage in the United States, that they should enjoy it in the home of their adoption. Their influence in the elections would prove of advantage to the Puerto Ricans in assisting them to carry out the election laws in accordance with American spirit.

In conclusion, I desire to lay special stress upon the importance of leaving to the local authorities in Puerto Rico the granting of franchises of a local or municipal character. In many of the towns of the island local capital would engage in the construction of electric light, gas plants, and other purely local enterprises involving an expenditure of a small amount of money of from fifteen to twenty-five or thirty thousand dollars, if permitted to do so by the local authorities. To impose upon such enterprises the expense and delay of a reference to the President would defeat or delay for many years their establishment. If the executive council and legislative assembly can be trusted with vastly more important matters, they should certainly be given control of such local concerns.

With reference to railway and other public franchises of general interest throughout the island, it is only proper that they should be referred to some competent authority in Washington for final action.

A word as to the tariff. If a 15 per cent tariff must be levied upon products to and from Puerto Rico, for any reason, legal or politic, it does not seem fair or just that Puerto Rico should be deprived of the "free list" which it now enjoys with reference to necessaries of life and machinery imported into the island, especially in view of the fact that in the treaty recently negotiated with Great Britain relative to trade between the United States and Trinidad, this latter island will enjoy a "free list" twice as large as that now enjoyed by Puerto Rico.

Of equal importance with securing the beneficent results of the legislation substantially contained in the Foraker bill is the necessity of obtaining it soon.

The people of Puerto Rico confidently hope that this legislation, both as to the tariff and civil government, will be adopted before it is too late for them to enjoy its benefits.

Very respectfully, yours,

F. H. DEXTER.

Hon. JOSEPH B. FORAKER,
United States Senate.

Mr. ALLEN. Just one word before the hour of 3 o'clock arrives, in reply to the Senator from Ohio, especially to his last question. The Senator seems to think that my chief objection is to the number of judges. That is an objection. I think three or four men can do the work down there; but it is not the chief objection. The chief objection that I make to the appointment of a distinctly Federal judge is the evident ulterior purpose of absorbing all the jurisdiction of that island in the Federal court, and by that means practically depriving the inhabitants of that island of the benefit of their local court.

Mr. FORAKER. I do not see how there can be any force in that suggestion. You can not deprive them of the right of going into this jurisdiction by establishing this court any more than you would deprive them if you conferred the same jurisdiction on the local court. This court is open equally to all who have the right to invoke its judicial power.

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator announced just a moment ago that this Federal court was to have supervisory control over the local court.

Mr. FORAKER. Oh, no; the Senator misunderstood me.

Mr. ALLEN. It was to be changed from the local court to this court under the proposed statute.

Mr. FORAKER. The Senator from Nebraska is mistaken as to what I said. I said the right of removal from a local Territorial court of Puerto Rico into this United States court would be the same that it would be from a State court into the United States court in Nebraska or any other State.

Mr. ALLEN. Therefore the abuse of that power and the usurpation of that court would be as great as its abuse and usurpation in the United States proper.

Mr. FORAKER. That is to say, the Senator's position is that there are abuse and usurpation of power in the system now in vogue and in practice in the United States courts?

Mr. ALLEN. There is abuse.

Mr. FORAKER. Oh, well.

Mr. ALLEN. And usurpation.

Mr. FORAKER. Now I understand the Senator's objection. I did not understand it before.

Mr. ALLEN. There are abuse and usurpation in the practice of Federal courts in the United States to-day.

Mr. FORAKER. This is the first time I have ever heard it, except in the platform of the Populist party.

Mr. ALLEN. Well, Mr. President, the abuse and usurpation might exist and the Senator be ignorant of it.

Mr. FORAKER. Yes; that is possible.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President——

Mr. FORAKER. I was about to ask unanimous consent, although it is 3 o'clock, to consider just one other amendment. If there is objection or any debate, we will pass it.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I must leave it to the Senator's conscience; that is all. I make no objection.

Mr. FORAKER. If there is objection to its incorporation as an amendment, I will waive it. On page 19, line 23, after the word "also," where the bill provides for the granting of franchises subject to the approval of the governor and the President of the United States, I move to insert:

As to railroad, telegraph, and telephone franchises,

I did not observe, when I asked that this amendment be now considered, that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS] is not in his seat. It was he who made the objection to this. I will not ask for the consideration of the amendment in his absence. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After two hours and ten minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, March 22, 1900, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, March 21, 1900.

The House met at 12 o'clock m., and was called to order by the Speaker.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read, corrected, and approved.

ONE HUNDREDTH ANNIVERSARY OF LOUISIANA PURCHASE.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I submit the following report from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania submits a privileged report which will be read by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Speaker of the House of Representatives be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint a special committee to consist of nine members, to which committee shall be referred a bill this day introduced into the House of Representatives by Mr. JOY, a Representative from the State of Missouri, and entitled "A bill to provide for celebrating the one hundredth anniversary of the purchase of the Louisiana Territory by the United States by holding an international exhibition of arts, industries, manufactures, and the products of the soil, mine, forest, and sea, in the city of St. Louis, in the State of Missouri."

The Committee on Rules, to whom was referred resolution of the House No. 155, have considered the same, and respectfully report it with the recommendation that it be amended as follows:

Strike out all after the word "referred," in line 4, and insert the following: "all proposed legislation relating to the celebration, at St. Louis, Mo., of the one hundredth anniversary of the purchase of the Louisiana Territory by the United States."

And that as amended the resolution be agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to, and the Speaker announced as said committee Messrs TAWNEY, STEELE, SHERMAN, JOY, CORLISS, BURKE of South Dakota, WILLIAMS of Mississippi, BARTLETT, and OTEY.

SECOND-CLASS MAIL MATTER.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California calls up the special order, which is the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6071) to amend the postal laws relative to second-class matter.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, I yield one hour to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. GRIGGS].

Mr. GRIGGS. Mr. Speaker, it is impossible for me to accept the hour at this time. I had already agreed with the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROMWELL], on account of peculiar circumstances in this case, to let him precede me for thirty minutes. Therefore, I am obliged to decline the offer of time at this moment and permit the gentleman from Ohio to proceed, even if it be necessary for me to yield to him twenty minutes of my hour.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, of course the House must understand that when we make arrangements with gentlemen to proceed, and notify them, that I, as controlling the time on this side, can do nothing else but offer the time to the gentlemen. I will, however, if opportunity presents itself, yield to the gentleman later, and at his request I will yield twenty minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROMWELL].

Mr. GRIGGS. I do this, Mr. Speaker, with the understanding that the gentleman from California will yield to me immediately at the conclusion of the remarks of the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. LOUD. I will do that, Mr. Speaker, unless the other side shall claim the right to proceed, which I suppose they would have the right to do.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROMWELL] is recognized.

Mr. GRIGGS. Just a moment, Mr. Speaker. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] who is controlling the time on this side against the bill is present, and I ask him, is that agreement agreeable to the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. MOON. What agreement?

Mr. GRIGGS. That immediately after the conclusion of the remarks of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROMWELL] one hour be yielded to me by the chairman of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Mr. MOON. I have no objection to any arrangement which gentlemen on that side make as to when they shall take their time.

Mr. GRIGGS. Very well.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the two gentlemen on the respective sides who control the time, so that arrangements will have to be made with them.

Mr. LOUD. I will yield twenty minutes, Mr. Speaker, to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROMWELL].

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that when the gentleman from Ohio concludes the two sides will be even in respect to the matter of time.

Mr. BROMWELL. Mr. Speaker, in the twenty minutes that are assigned to me it can hardly be expected that I should enter into a very elaborate argument upon this bill. My record in the past upon this bill has been entirely consistent from the first introduction of the so-called Loud bill until the present time.

I have given the subject of this abuse of second-class mail privilege my very earnest attention, and have made a study of the subject, which has convinced me of the absolute correctness of the position which I took originally upon this bill, and I therefore to-day in the short time that is allotted to me merely follow up, as it were, and indorse what has been said heretofore upon this bill.

Mr. Speaker, the first thought that suggests itself to one who reads the manufactured protests which have been sent out broadcast all over the country, as the chairman of this committee has stated, at the instance of a very few publishers, is that the Loud bill absolutely cuts off all mail privileges from certain second-class publications. The impression that one would get from reading these circulars is that these classes of publications are by this bill to be placed upon the same footing as obscene and similar literature.

In other words, that they are to be excluded absolutely from the mails. That is not the case. The only change that is made by the Loud bill on the present law is that of requiring a certain class of publications to pay more than they are now paying; but they will be still admissible as mail matter, the same as any other publications, the same as they are to-day.

Now, why should this change be made? In the first place, from a business standpoint. This great Post-Office Department service of ours is a business service. It renders certain service to the people of this country which they are expected to pay for. On some classes of its work it charges far in excess of the actual cost; on other classes of the work that it performs it charges far less than the actual cost of the service.

This Loud bill, so called, is for the purpose of equalizing burdens by making certain classes of publications which are now being carried through the mails at an absolute loss to the Government to pay a fairer proportion of the cost of the service than they do now. It is not necessary for me to go into the details of this bill, or to call your attention to the actual cost of first, second, third, and fourth class matter, and what is produced in the way of revenue from each species of mail.

All of these facts are set forth in the report of the committee. They are set forth in the report of every Postmaster-General for the last ten years; and all of them, without exception, whether Republican or Democratic Postmasters-General, have called attention to this abuse, and have asked Congress to give them a remedy. Without citing at any great length, I shall call attention to just a paragraph of the report of the Postmaster-General for this year. Referring to this abuse of the second-class privilege, he says:

> For this costly abuse, which drags on the Department and weighs down the service, trammels its power and means of effective advancement in every direction. It involves a sheer wanton waste of $20,000,000 or upward a year. The postal deficit for the current year is $6,610,776. But for this wrongful application of the second-class rate, instead of a deficit there would be a clear surplus of many millions.
> With such an ample margin the possibilities of practical improvements are apparent. If this deadly burden upon the mails were removed, the Department could hopefully enter upon a systematic policy of enlarged and progressive service, with the assurance that sound business management and increasing facilities would bring commensurate returns which would not be swallowed up in the maw of private interests without any public advantage.

That is the same comment that has been made year after year by the various Postmasters-General. But, gentlemen say, why is not this matter entirely in the hands of the Postmaster-General, and can he not under existing law, by proper regulations, exclude a large portion of the matter that is being carried at second-class rates contrary to the spirit of the law?

But gentlemen know how difficult it is for an executive officer, in the face of recommendations which have been made to this body for the correction of abuses, to take upon himself that correction. We see in every bill in which there is a discretionary power vested in a Department a construction placed upon that discretionary power that so long as Congress vests the discretion it is expected that the Executive Department shall exercise the power.

We have an illustration of that on the subject of the fast-mail subsidy. Year after year it has been recommended that the special appropriation be discontinued, and year after year the Second Assistant Postmaster-General says it is for the impairment and not for the betterment of the service that this money is paid out, and yet year after year Congress makes the appropriation and the Postmaster-General feels constrained to spend the money.

We find the same thing is done where, under a construction of the law made by an Assistant Attorney-General for the Post-Office Department many years ago, a certain class of this literature has been allowed to enter the post-office at pound rates, and that state of affairs continues because of the refusal of Congress to pass a bill for the correction of this abuse. He implies—and I think possibly very justly implies—that because we refuse to correct these abuses we want them to continue.

Mr. Speaker, there have been sent out all over the country, and the members of this House have no doubt received, as I have, dozens or hundreds of so-called petitions against the enactment of the Loud bill. One of these in set form enumerates some nine reasons why this bill should not pass. I do not know that I shall have time in the short space of time allowed to me to discuss all of them, but I would like to run over as many as I can reach and answer them.

This petition professes to protest against this bill, first, because it excludes from the mails as second-class matter all books or reprints of books, and then goes into an argument, which we heard elaborated yesterday upon the floor of the House, that this meant to cut off all good literature from the youth of the country; that it meant to deprive them of an opportunity for an education; that it means that these books would absolutely stop circulating, or that the burdens that would be imposed on their circulation would be so great that the poor young men and young women of this country striving for an education could not obtain it.

How utterly ridiculous! The best books of this country, the books that go into our schools, the books that the boys and girls use in everyday life for a year and for two years, and which they transmit, after they finish them, to their younger brothers and sisters, so that one book may not only be the text-book for the oldest one but for the entire family as they secure an education—these books are books bound in either board or cloth, and these books sent through the mails have to pay the third-class rate.

They are not entitled to any privilege of a cent a pound. And yet this transient matter, paper bound, whether good or bad, just as much a book, differing nothing in weight, differing nothing in composition, differing nothing in paper and printing, or style, except in the binding—this transient matter that is for use to-day and torn up and destroyed and thrown away to-morrow is given the privilege of the rate of a cent a pound. Gentlemen are very solicitous about this good, cheap literature getting to our youth, and yet they say nothing of the vile trash that goes out by tons under this same privilege.

I was informed by the chairman of the Post-Office Committee that he had word from the mailing department of one of the greatest post-offices in the country only last week that two tons of the publication known as Sapho was offered for second-class mail privileges. This for the education of the young men and the young women of the country!

If a great publishing house wants to send out a Bible, or a Testament, or a hymn book, or any other good bound book for public worship for the elevation of the masses, they do not get that privilege at a cent a pound. These books all go through the mail at third-class rates. Why then distinguish? But they say here is a particular series, the Riverside series, which is exceptionally fine, and that ought to be discriminated in favor of.

Gentlemen, I have nothing to say against the publications of Houghton & Mifflin, the Riverside series. It is a most excellent class of literature. But the publications are small; they run about four to the pound, none exceeding 4 or 5 ounces, and the little additional postage that would be required on any one of these books going through the mail, that was put into the third class instead of the second, would be but a trifling sum, whether it is borne by the boy that gets the book or by the publisher that sends it out.

Outside of all this, Houghton & Mifflin, or any other great publishing concern, are not in the business merely for charitable purposes. They are not in the business merely for the purpose of elevating the youth of the country. They are in the business of publication to make dollars and cents, and if their business was not profitable they would go out of it very quickly.

Now, if they are in this business for dollars and cents, how do they differ from you or your constituents who are engaged in business and who want to send out circulars for advertising? They are not allowed a second-class privilege; they must pay third-class rates. The Government does not recognize the fact that a great merchant who wants to send out goods to your and my people is doing as good work as Houghton, Mifflin & Co., who are sending out books for educational purposes, and they make them pay for the circular matter they send out full third-class rates for postage.

In the next place, the circular says that it excludes the sample copies of newspapers, and then it goes on to say further that that means a great detriment to the country press. I say it is the greatest benefit to a country press that you can enact into law. It is owing to this privilege that they secure the advertisements based on their circulation from all parts of the United States.

As the chairman of the committee has said, if they send out a million and a half copies they can get $5,000 a page, and if they only send out half as many $4,000 a page; and they send out these sheets, which are nothing more than advertisements, to every county and to every town and crossroads in the United States.

What effect does that have on the country newspaper? The man that keeps the country store that has something to advertise, instead of giving it, as he should, to his home paper in the county in which he lives, advertises in this so-called newspaper issued from abroad, and those are circulated absolutely free in his county, and the country newspaper loses in that way all the circulation that he would get, and it loses the benefit of the advertising that it would get, by reason of these sample copies. The great magazines and periodicals have no use for sample copies.

The publisher of McClure's Magazine, one of the greatest of our monthly publications, was before the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and he showed us that he had no use for sample copies; that his magazine was established, and it advertised itself on its merits. The great daily papers have little or no use for sample copies. The only publications in the country that are to-day demanding the privilege of sending out an excessive number of sample copies are these advertising sheets to which I have referred.

The third objection is that it increases the rate of postage upon newspapers or periodicals returned to news agents. As the law now stands and as the law contemplated this provision being carried out, publications might be sent from publishers to news agents, from the first news agent to another, from him to still another, and so on, the publication passing along the line until it found the place where it had a marketable status.

And under the construction of the Department, in accordance with a ruling of the Attorney-General, this privilege has been broadened so that these publications may not only go out in a continuous line, but may absolutely be returned in a similar line. And every time one of these publications is put in the mails to be returned it entails upon the Government a loss of 6 to 8 cents for its carriage. And yet this journey from one news agent to another can be extended indefinitely.

You can start one of these publications at Boston, send it to New York, from there to Philadelphia, from Philadelphia to Baltimore, to Washington, to Cincinnati, to Cleveland, to Chicago—all over the country—and then start it back on its travels, the Government losing 6 to 8 cents every time it goes into the mails. Yet objection is made to this return privilege being cut off.

Objection is also made that this bill requires the separation of the mail. All the great daily newspapers to-day separate their mail before they take it to the train. Expedition of the mails, that their papers may get into the hands of their customers speedily, demands, as a business proposition, that they shall make this separation. They do not suffer therefor, nor does any other publication which has to be delivered immediately suffer by this provision for separation.

The magazines and other publications, the distribution of which does not require any special promptitude, may easily make this separation without any hardship. It makes no difference whether the publication goes out to-day or to-morrow; but there is saved to the Government a great burden in the handling of this matter.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CLARKE of New Hampshire). The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LOUD. I yield one hour to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. GRIGGS].

Mr. GRIGGS. Mr. Speaker, the affirmative discussion of a bill of the character of that now before the House is necessarily dry. There is no partisan politics in it by which the enthusiasm of one side may be aroused by an attack upon the other. There is no field for invective, for play on the emotions, or appeal to the imagination. It is necessarily a dry discussion of a dry business proposition.

Mr. Speaker, this bill is the most misunderstood and the worst maligned and to my mind the best measure that has been brought before Congress since I have had a seat here. I risk very little when I say that one-half of the gentlemen who propose to vote against it will do so because they do not care to take the time and trouble to investigate it thoroughly and to answer objections offered by constituents, many of whom themselves do not know what is in the bill; and I do not mean by this to reflect on anybody in this House or out of it.

Many gentlemen have said to me—and I refer to this side of the House particularly, because gentlemen on this side are more free to express themselves to me on questions of this character than are the gentlemen on the other side—they have said to me: "Perhaps you are right on this bill; perhaps the committee is right; but I do not care to have to go back to my constituency explaining my vote."

Now, this is the situation of a large number of gentlemen upon this and, I doubt not, on that side of the House. The situation is different with those of us on the committee. As members of that committee this bill was referred by you to us, and it became our duty to investigate it fully, to sit in judgment on it, and to report to you our conclusion on the facts as we understand them. We have been obliged to take a position. You are not necessarily compelled by your situation to take any position upon the question, and no position is a negative position, because it is always safer, as I have often heard, to vote "no."

Now, I am telling plain truths to my friends upon this side of the House. I am not here to advise gentlemen upon the other side of the House. If they would take my advice for thirty days, we would whip them, horse, foot, and dragoons, in November. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MILLER. That is why we do not take your advice.

Mr. GRIGGS. You would go out of business entirely and permanently on March 4, 1901. If gentlemen on this side of the House will listen, during the time which has been given me to discuss this bill, I believe I can convince you that it is your duty, as intelligent and honest Representatives of an intelligent constituency, to vote for the bill.

Mr. Speaker, in discussing remedial legislation it is proper to consider first the old law, the abuses, if any, of the old law, and after that the proposed remedy. If the old law is good, it is unnecessary to go any further, because it is our duty then to vote against the proposed new one. If the old law is bad, then it becomes our duty to consider the bill offering the remedy, and, if an improvement, to vote for it.

If the old law is good, but the abuses of it are such that it has been turned from its original purpose and made to serve a purpose entirely foreign to its origin and intention, and so has become too costly to the people of the United States for the good secured, then it becomes our duty in the correction of that abuse to consider whether or not the proposed new law will correct it, and if it will, then to vote for it. In short, if a good law has become diseased and a remedy not worse than the disease is offered, it is our duty to accept that remedy.

Now, that is the way this question presented itself to those of us who are members of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads. What is the old law with reference to second-class publications? Without going into unnecessary details, the privilege known as the second-class privilege was given originally as a bounty on the dissemination of knowledge. Newspapers were first given certain privileges not accorded to other mail matter in the way of cheapness of postage rates, in order to encourage the spread of information.

In short, it is a law to encourage and promote education among the people. Newspapers then, as now, were recognized as the great educational force of the world. Afterwards these privileges were extended so as to include other periodicals, such as the monthly magazines, quarterly reviews, and periodicals of that character. The rate was finally made 1 cent a pound to all publications of the second class everywhere, and free in the county of publication. This was a beneficent law. It has accomplished more for the diffusion of intelligence and for the promotion of the happiness and prosperity and greatness of the American people than any other agency, or, I might say, all other agencies combined. But it seems impossible, Mr. Speaker, to administer laws granting special privileges without abuse of the same. It is rather the abuse of the old law than the law itself which this bill proposes to correct. In other words, the committee proposes to give a legislative construction to the law at present on our statute books.

Without wearying the House by reading long extracts from the law, I may say that this bill will, if enacted into law, make only two changes of importance in the law as at present construed. The proposed changes will affect large, rich, and powerful interests in certain sections of the country, all with ramifications throughout the length and breadth of the land, and who, having grown rich and powerful under this abuse of special privileges, are naturally fighting to retain them. The interests of these publishers, as I see it, are not the interests of the people, to which conclusion I shall endeavor to lead gentlemen who are kind enough to listen to my argument.

The first substantial objection offered to this bill by anybody is to the proviso in the first section, which reads:

> That nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to admit to the second-class rate publications purporting to be issued periodically and to subscribers, but which are merely books, or reprints of books, whether they be issued complete or in parts, whether they be bound or unbound, whether they be sold by subscription or otherwise, or whether they purport to be premiums or supplements or parts of regular newspapers or periodicals.

The objection to this is that it will cut off from second-class rates—1 cent a pound—a large class of books which, because of their cheapness, appeal particularly to people who are unable to pay the prices for bound books. My friend from Arkansas [Mr. LITTLE] grew eloquent yesterday in his appeal against taking away this privilege from this class of literature. My friend expressed great regret that he lacked in early youth the opportunities of the youths of this generation secured through this privilege.

I am very fond of the gentleman from Arkansas. He is my colleague on the committee, and I have often had occasion to admire his zeal, his faithfulness, his conscientiousness and ability in the consideration of matters before our committee, but I am not prepared to contemplate the dizzy height to which my friend might have ascended if he had been given the opportunities of the youth of to-day, of which he spoke so eloquently on yesterday. [Laughter.] We are all of us inclined to believe that if we had had the opportunity of the other fellow we would have far surpassed him in achievements. But I do not hesitate to say that my friend from Arkansas is man enough as it is. If he feels his limitations it is because of his modesty, and not because of any real lack of accomplishments or opportunity.

My friend from Colorado [Mr. BELL] on yesterday also talked very pathetically against denying to the youth of the country the right to have these books sent to them through the mails at the pound rate. Oh, he was pathetic! There were tears in his voice! You would have thought that the Post-Office Committee was about to persuade this House to deny education to the boys and girls of America, that we were insisting on closing the schoolhouses all over the land, because we propose to shut out this class of literature from the mails at the 1 cent a pound rate. Let my friend possess his soul with serenity. We do not propose to close the schools or to curtail educational advantages. He pleads for the paper-back book, while he knows that books containing the same matter, if bound, are denied the use of the mails at this rate.

How many of these paper-back books that go through the mails as second-class matter are used in the schools of this country? I do not know about other sections, but I do know about the section from which I come. I do not believe that one school in fifty uses books of that class. I say that not one book in five thousand in use in the schools of Georgia is a book of the character referred to by my friend from Colorado [Mr. BELL], and which would be excluded from the mails under the Loud bill.

Now, if gentlemen are so much in earnest about this matter, if they believe that the school children of the United States should have the benefit of the pound rate, why not change the rate now in force against books? Why, gentlemen, it never was intended by the authors of this law, it never was intended in the beginning, or at any time since the beginning, to let books go through the mails at pound rates.

Mr. BELL. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. GRIGGS. Certainly, sir.

Mr. BELL. Were not those books generally going through the mails at pound rates, and was it not admitted on this floor in 1888, when we had the 2-cent rate and reduced it to 1 cent a pound, that that was the fact?

Mr. GRIGGS. I do not know what was admitted upon this floor in 1888.

Mr. BELL. Well, I read yesterday from the speech of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], delivered in February, 1888, when he stated that he had a number of those books, and that but for this cheap rate he would not have had the opportunity of using them. I read that to the House yesterday. Afterwards they reduced the rate to 1 cent a pound, after that practice had been thoroughly understood in this House and in the Department, and so stated.

Mr. GRIGGS. You had your say yesterday. My time is limited; make your question short, please.

Mr. BELL. That was stated as one of the reasons.

Mr. GRIGGS. I want to say in reply to the gentleman that the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] is no authority with me in anything political. He usually admits in such matters whatever is necessary to gain his case.

Mr. BELL. Well, you do not deny that what I state is true.

Mr. GRIGGS. Oh, I do not deny that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] admitted anything that the gentleman from Colorado charges him with admitting. It is strange to see the gentleman from Colorado quoting the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] approvingly as authority. I know he differs from him on every other political idea but this.

Mr. BELL. He disagrees with me now; he is with you.

Mr. GRIGGS. I did not know that.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I say it never was intended by the originators of this law that books should be included in it. I repeat the declaration, and it is clear, for had it been the intention of the legislators to permit books to go through the mails at pound rates the law would have said books and would not have confined second-class privileges to "newspapers and periodicals." Who questions that? Not even my friend from Colorado, in his zealous opposition to this bill, questions the statement that periodicals were not intended by the law to include books.

The only way that these reprints of books, these paper backs, have been enabled to get the use of the mails at 1 cent a pound has been by a miserable subterfuge of the publishers. To accomplish this they undertook to issue them at regular intervals, so often as four times a year, and from a known office of publication. In these respects they are like periodicals, but in no other. They are books nevertheless, Mr. Speaker. Gentlemen who are honest with themselves and who are candid with others must admit that Shakespeare in a paper back is not different from Shakespeare in boards and bound in cloth.

Gentlemen must admit that Milton bound in paper is the same as Milton bound in cloth. The gentlemen denounce what they are pleased to call denying to the people of the United States the opportunity of securing cheap literature. Yet they do not insist that books bound in cloth or leather for permanent use shall have the same privilege in the mails as these unbound books. But this bill does not deny anything to the children of the United States. Why, Mr. Speaker, the people will have the same advantages from cheap literature after the passage of this bill as they have now.

Mr. BELL. By paying an extra rate.
Mr. GRIGGS. Without paying extra.
Mr. BELL. Oh, no.
Mr. GRIGGS. Let me get through, and I think you will agree with me.
Mr. BELL. I do not think I will.
Mr. GRIGGS. When this hearing was had before the committee, in answer to a question from me—what has become of my friend from Colorado?
Mr. BELL. I am right here with you; I am not going to leave you. [Laughter.]
Mr. GRIGGS. To a question from me the answer was made by either a publisher or his agent that it would not increase the price of the books; that the bill would not drive them from the mails; that it would simply force publishers to manufacture the books cheaper, and that the people of the United States would have the same opportunities of getting cheap literature as they have to-day.
Mr. BELL. Now, may I suggest to the gentleman?
Mr. GRIGGS. Yes, sir.
Mr. BELL. Mr. Lupton states that he sends out a number of these books at 3 cents, including Dickens, Cowper, and many others, and says to raise from the second to the third class will increase the cost more than they now cost the reading public.
Mr. LATIMER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question right there?
Mr. GRIGGS. Just one moment. Let me get through with my friend from Colorado. If the gentleman is so anxious about this, why does he not insist that all the text-books used in all schools, whether bound with paper or with cloth, shall be permitted to use the mails at 1 cent a pound?
Mr. BELL. May I answer that?
Mr. GRIGGS. If you will not take over half an hour.
Mr. BELL. I will come within a half an hour.
Mr. GRIGGS. All right.
Mr. BELL. For the same reason as stated by the men in the formative period of this postal system—that men who are able to buy library books should pay 8 cents a pound, the cost of transportation. The poor people that use these so-called stitched or paper-back books were to have them under what was called the franking privilege; and Postmaster-General James in 1879 insisted that these cheap books were gotten up for that purpose and with this understanding. I thank the gentleman.
Mr. GRIGGS. You are very welcome. We have free schools in all the States of the Union.
Mr. BELL. And free text-books.
Mr. GRIGGS. In many States of the Union. We have many such in Georgia, and we use cloth or board bound books. A paper-back book would not last a school boy or girl three days.
Mr. BELL. They use them in the high school here.
Mr. GRIGGS. They would not last a Georgia boy three days, or a Colorado boy, either. [Laughter.] Now I will answer, if I can, the question of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LATIMER].
Mr. LATIMER. The gentleman has just stated to the House that in the testimony that was submitted before the committee it was stated that if the additional postal rate was added to the book going through the mail it would only cheapen the cost of production of the book. Now, I want to ask the gentleman if he can give to the House what would be the average weight, or the additional cost, in case there is no reduction in the production of the book, in case the bill becomes a law; what will be the additional cost to the purchaser of books by reason of the additional postage that will have to be paid?
Mr. GRIGGS. I believe the increased rate is 2 cents for every 4 ounces. The testimony before the committee was that these books would average about four to the pound. That is 2 cents a book. They go now under the pound rate. That is 1 cent for four books. Each book is increased in cost of transportation through the mails 1¼ cents. As I have said, to a question by me a representative of these publishing houses answered that it would neither increase the price to the public nor curtail the production of this class of books.
Mr. LATIMER. Your statement is that each book would cost about 1¼ cents additional, if it had to go at third-class rates, if this bill should pass?
Mr. GRIGGS. Yes; and the publishers state that they could reduce the cost of making the books that much and save that cost to the purchaser. Now, gentlemen, that answers that objection.
Mr. BELL. No; it does not.
Mr. GRIGGS. Well, I can not yield to my friend further.
Mr. BELL. Can I not correct you?
Mr. GRIGGS. You can correct me in the time of the gentlemen opposing the bill. I have yielded to you several times already.
Mr. BELL. I know the gentleman has been very liberal, but I was going to ask him whether or not David Copperfield, or some of those works, can be carried for 1¼ of a cent additional?
Mr. GRIGGS. I am not giving the rates for any particular book. I said that the average was four to the pound; not that every book published by these people would require four to make a pound; there are sometimes five, sometimes six, sometimes two, and sometimes three. Mr. Wheeler, of Houghton, Mifflin & Co., of Boston, stated that their books averaged five to the pound. So I have been perfectly fair with the gentleman.
I repeat, Mr. Speaker, that it will not only not curtail the production of these books, but it will simply reduce the cost of manufacture of them by the using of a cheaper quality of paper, and that the people of the country, if there is any advantage in receiving them at all, will by this bill be deprived of nothing. That is all I have to say on that line. The necessity of the enactment of this section seems to me perfectly clear.
Now I come to another point. Gentlemen here appear very solicitous on this floor occasionally about the country newspaper. The newspaper is dear to the hearts of all politicians. There is not a politician in the United States, from Cape Cod to the Golden Gate, who does not profess love for the country newspaper. We all love the country newspaper. It is dear to all when we talk about it on the floor of Congress. [Laughter.]
Mr. Speaker, so far as I am concerned, I never indulge in what appears to me to be fulsome adulation of anybody or anything, and I am not going to do it now with reference to the country press. It is sufficient for me to say that I am the personal friend of every editor in my district and that he is my personal friend. It is sufficient for me to say that I believe I have the confidence of every editor in that Congressional district and that every editor there has my confidenceand all I care to say about the editor of the country newspaper is what I would say about the country lawyer, the country doctor, the country preacher, the country schoolmaster, the country merchant and farmer——
A MEMBER. And the country Congressman.
Mr. GRIGGS. Yes, and the country Congressman; that is, when he does his duty as he understands it, he has done all that earth or heaven will require. He is no object of charity for politicians to weep over; he is not the willing subject of fulsome panegyrics from politicians who want his support. He does his duty as I do mine, as you do yours, and he is entitled to the same credit that you who do your duty here and elsewhere are entitled to; no more, and certainly no less. This is all he asks at the hands of anybody; and so far as I am concerned, I propose always to see that he gets this, if I can secure it for him.
Now, Mr. Speaker, gentlemen complain that this bill proposes to cut off the privileges of the country press.
My friend from South Carolina [Mr. STOKES] on yesterday based almost his entire speech against this bill on the fact that it cut off the privileges of the country newspaper. How? By cutting down the privilege of sending sample copies through the mail at pound rates. Cut it down? This bill proposes to give them greater privileges than they ever had with reference to sending sample copies through the mail. Let me say to you that when this bill came before the committee, and I violate no confidence when I say it, I objected to it because of its failure to provide for the sending of sample copies at the pound rate. The bill was referred to the chairman of the committee and myself to see if we could not agree on that point.
We finally agreed on the amendment allowing a number equal to 50 per cent of the subscription list, in no case to exceed 500 copies, to go through at the pound rate.
As my colleague and friend [Mr. HOWARD] demonstrated to the publishers of his district last summer, it would break every country newspaper in the United States to avail itself to the full extent of the privilege accorded under this bill as it stands now.
But my friend from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], who two years ago defeated this bill by his great speech against it, had a conference with the committee on yesterday. He had until then opposed the bill; but we came together and agreed upon this, that the Post-Office Committee should accept the amendment to be offered by him, which gives the right to newspapers and periodicals to send out a number equal to 100 per cent of their bona fide subscription lists as sample copies—the number in no event to exceed 2,000. Now name to me, gentlemen, the country newspaper in the United States that will want more than this. Tell me, if you can, the name of the legitimate country newspaper that will be hurt by this.
Mr. BOUTELL of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield for a question?
Mr. GRIGGS. Certainly.
Mr. BOUTELL of Illinois. I have no country newspapers in my district, but I have received some protests against this bill from a class of papers that has not yet been mentioned in this debate. There are published in my district daily and weekly newspapers in almost every known language, a large number of them being German and Scandinavian dailies and weeklies.
From the publishers of these papers I have received some inquiries about this bill and some protests against it. I have here a letter from the proprietor of one of the large Scandinavian papers, a man of high standing and recognized ability as a publisher and editor. In this letter he says:

While I would not attempt to influence your judgment, I must say that the aforesaid bill, if passed, would be a deathblow to the foreign press in the States.

Now, can the gentleman from Georgia explain what effect this bill would have upon that class of papers? The writer may be under some misapprehension; and if so, I would like to have it cleared up.

Mr. GRIGGS. He says "the foreign press." That is, I presume, papers published in foreign languages.

Mr. BOUTELL of Illinois. Yes, sir. The communication I have just read is from the publisher of a Scandinavian paper. There are also a great many German papers. These papers are taken not only by those who are native Germans or Scandinavians, but by others, people who wish to keep up with those languages as well as the English.

Mr. GRIGGS. This bill, if enacted, can not affect papers published in a foreign language differently from papers published in English. I can only make the statement. It is impossible to do more. It can only be demonstrated by going to the bill itself. If the gentleman is unwilling to accept my interpretation of the bill, he may appeal to the chairman of the committee, on his side of the House, who will give him the same answer. My friend is an able lawyer. I have heard of him as a distinguished Chicago lawyer before I came to Congress; and they say that Chicago lawyers are the best lawyers in the world. Of course I except the country lawyers of Georgia. [Laughter.] My friend will indorse all that, I know.

Now, my friend can see by reference to the bill that it can not possibly have any ill effect on Scandinavian or German papers or papers published in any language on earth different from its effect upon papers published in English.

Mr. DRIGGS. Does this bill make any difference with such magazines as Munsey and other 10-cent magazines?

Mr. GRIGGS. Absolutely none.

Mr. DRIGGS. I simply ask for information.

Mr. GRIGGS. I am very glad to be able to furnish information to my friend from New York. Now, may I hope for his support of the bill?

Mr. DRIGGS. I do not say that I will.

Mr. GRIGGS. Well, let him put all his objections to the bill in the form of questions and I believe I can answer every one as easily and as satisfactorily as I did that one.

Mr. DRIGGS. I have a high opinion of the intelligence of my friend from Georgia, but, nevertheless, I will not say that I would be convinced.

Mr. GRIGGS. I thank my friend very much, but I would really be glad to have him state his objections in the form of questions, and I will answer, I believe, every objection he may have to this bill. But, of course, if my friend is afraid I might change his mind, I will excuse him. [Laughter.]

Mr. BOUTELL of Illinois. I just wish to say in reply to the gentleman from Georgia that I can see no difference, of course, in this respect between a newspaper published in the English language and one published in any other language. The Germans of my district are among our most clear-headed and intelligent business and professional men.

Now I want to ask, Is it the intention of the committee to offer or to support an amendment which will allow the sending of a larger number of so-called sample copies than are now provided for in the bill?

Mr. GRIGGS. I have just stated that in a conference yesterday between the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] and myself we agreed on this proposition: That newspapers shall be permitted to send out sample copies not exceeding in number 100 per cent of the bona fide subscription list of the paper, and in no event to exceed 2,000.

That is the provision agreed upon between the gentleman from Missouri and myself; which was presented to the Post-Office Committee by myself yesterday morning, was accepted by the committee, and will be agreed to by the chairman on this floor whenever offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. BOUTELL of Illinois. Will the gentleman from Missouri support the bill?

Mr. GRIGGS. Certainly; he will, because that relieves the bill from its objectionable feature.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I can see no legitimate objections to this bill further on the part of the friends of the country newspaper. That relieves the bill from any objection there, so far as I can see. But some gentlemen object to what they call the censorship of the press by the Post-Office Department, and I have received several circulars and letters protesting against the bill on that ground.

Why, gentlemen, this bill makes no change whatever in the present law on this subject. I will ask the Clerk to read the regulations of the Post-Office Department as they are now as to second-class matter. These are the questions put to publishers under the law as it stands.

The Clerk read as follows:

When a new publication is offered for mailing, the postmaster will proceed as follows:

1. Require the publisher, or one of the publishers, to make and present to him, with two copies of the publication, sworn answers in writing to the following interrogatories:

1. Magazine or newspaper? 2. How often published? 3. Where is the paper printed? 4. Who are the proprietors of the paper or magazine? 5. Are they in any way interested, pecuniarily, in any business or trade represented by the publication, either in the reading matter or in the advertisements; if so, what is the interest? 6. Who are the editors of the publication, and how is their compensation determined? 7. Have the editors any pecuniary interest in any business or trade represented by the publication, either in the reading matter or in the advertisements; if so, what is the interest? 8. Is your publication regarded by the trade which it purports to represent as a general organ of the trade, or is it considered as representing the business interest of a special house in that trade, whose price-current or advertisements appear therein? 9. As a result of the publication of your paper or magazine, is the interest of any business house in the trade especially advanced, notwithstanding your design of making the publication a journal representing the trade? 10. Can any house in good standing advertise in your publication at the regular published rates? 11. Have any of the business houses which advertise in your publication any interest (either by past connection or special contract) therein respecting advertisements or subscriptions; and if so, what is that interest? 12. What is the greatest number of copies furnished to any person or firm who advertise in your publication? 13. On what terms are these papers furnished? 14. What number of papers do you print of each issue? 15. About what number of bona fide subscribers (that is, subscribers who pay their own money for the publication and receive it regularly) have you to the next issue of your paper? 16. What is the subscription price of your publication per annum? 17. How many pounds weight will cover the papers furnished to regular subscribers? 18. What average number of sample copies with each issue do you desire to send through the mail at the pound rate? 19. How are the names of the persons to whom you wish to send sample copies obtained by you?

2. If satisfied by the affidavit, the publication itself, and further proofs offered that the publication is admissible, he will issue a temporary permit, on a form to be furnished by the Department, admitting the publication at the second-class rates, pending the determination of the Department as to its admissibility.

3. If upon such evidence the admissibility appears to be doubtful, he shall require a deposit at the third-class rate and issue a permit admitting the publication conditionally, pending determination; the excess of the deposit over the second-class rates to be refunded if the Department shall decide that the publisher is entitled to the pound rate.

4. If satisfied of nonadmissibility, he will refuse to mail except as third-class matter; but, on request of the publisher, will forward the papers to the Department, stating objections.

Mr. GRIGGS. Now, this bill proposes no change to that. If some gentleman will suggest how this bill changes that law I will thank him. Those are now the regulations of the Post-Office Department with reference to the admission of publications to the second-class privilege—have been for many years—and we propose no change whatever. Then how does this bill establish a censorship of the press? I believe as firmly as any man here in the freedom of the press. I believe as strongly as any man on this floor or elsewhere in its great power for good, which has been demonstrated by the growth of liberty and right and justice and education through the agency of the press of the world during the past one hundred years. I would do nothing to hinder its advancement. On the contrary, I say "God speed you" to all legitimate newspaper enterprise.

Mr. BREAZEALE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GRIGGS. Certainly.

Mr. BREAZEALE. What effect would this bill have upon the business of the ordinary news dealer in the little towns and villages of the country?

Mr. GRIGGS. It would prevent him from returning unsold publications at pound rates, which would amount to the news dealers of the smaller towns and villages of the country to perhaps 20 cents a month to every news dealer. Of course I have no way of calculating this with any degree of exactness.

Mr. LATIMER. In the matter of extra postage?

Mr. GRIGGS. Yes.

Mr. BREAZEALE. In returning these unsold periodicals?

Mr. GRIGGS. Yes; it will amount to from 20 to 50 cents, or perhaps a dollar, a month to every newsdealer in the small towns and no more.

Mr. FLEMING. And they can send them back by freight as far as that is concerned?

Mr. GRIGGS. Yes; they can send them back by freight, and will not have to send them through the mails.

Mr. SIMS. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. GRIGGS. Yes.

Mr. SIMS. Some papers in some towns do not have over 500 subscribers, but occasionally they get out what they call a trade edition to advertise a town, and have pictures of the buildings, and so on, and issue five or ten thousand copies. Will this bill, if it is enacted into law, affect such issues as that?

Mr. GRIGGS. No.

Mr. SIMS. It will have no effect?

Mr. GRIGGS. No. Now I want to be fair——

Mr. SIMS. Not to circulate in the county, but generally in other counties and in other States?

Mr. GRIGGS. This bill will not affect that class of publications, because they are at present prohibited by law from using the pound rates.

Mr. SIMS. Can they not be sent out now?

Mr. GRIGGS. Well, they are sent out, but the sending of them is prohibited by law, and this bill makes no change in the law.

Mr. SIMS. Are they not sent out at the pound rate at present?

Mr. GRIGGS. Yes; but not by law, unless custom long continued has made it law.

Mr. SIMS. That is one of the abuses you refer to?

Mr. GRIGGS. This bill does not touch that matter in any respect whatever. It makes no reference to it, and I presume trade editions and special editions of all classes will continue to circulate as before.

Mr. DRIGGS. I should like to say to the gentleman from Georgia that I dislike exceedingly to break into his speech, but he and I have had trouble over our respective names before in these speeches.

Mr. GRIGGS. Go ahead; you do not trouble me.

Mr. DRIGGS. I hold in my hand a little pamphlet that was sent to most of us, I guess. I do not desire to mention the name of it, because it is an advertising pamphlet pure and simple; but in the first part of this, some fifty pages, is as complete a little history of the American Revolution as it has ever been my good fortune to find, and there are a number of very interesting illustrations. Now, this is an advertising pamphlet, sent here long before the discussion of this Loud bill came up, and I should like to ask if such a pamphlet as that would be excluded from the mails under the second-class rates.

Mr. GRIGGS. That is excluded now.

Mr. COWHERD. That did not come under the pound rate, but under a separate stamp.

Mr. GRIGGS. I recognize the publication which the gentleman has in his hand. "Georgian" is the name of it.

Mr. DRIGGS. That is right. I am asking for information, that is all.

Mr. GRIGGS. It came under a stamp.

Mr. DRIGGS. I understood you to say that such things as that would be excluded from the mails.

Mr. COWHERD. They are not excluded from the mails, but they are excluded from the pound rate.

Mr. GRIGGS. My friend from Missouri [Mr. COWHERD] does not mean to say that that pamphlet would be excluded from the mails, but he means that it would not be entitled to the privileges of the pound rate.

Mr. COWHERD. That is the idea.

Mr. GRIGGS. Now, Mr. Speaker, gentlemen say that there are other and greater abuses in the Post-Office Department, which ought to be corrected before we attack the wrongs against which this bill is directed. Gentlemen ask us vociferously, "Why do you not attack the railroads? Why do you not reduce railroad rates?" A railroad is usually a very popular thing to attack, either in Congress or on the hustings.

So far as I am concerned, I have no unnecessary attack to make on railroads or upon any other legitimate business in the United States. Neither have I any defense to offer for the railroads or any business, corporate or otherwise, in the United States which may be oppressing the people; but I simply want to reply to that method of attacking the bill by saying that the existence of two wrongs does not justify the continuance of both. The fact that there is more than one abuse in our postal system does not justify gentlemen in voting against the correction of one.

Now, you all, of course, have heard the old tale that Lincoln used to tell about the farmer and the skunks. A neighbor called one night, and being disturbed in the region of his olfactory nerves, asked what all that scent around the house meant. He replied, "There are skunks in the yard." "Why don't you kill them?" "Well, I'll tell you; there are seven of them. I went out just now to kill them all; I killed one, and it raised such a devil of a stink I have decided to let the other six alone."

Now, Mr. Speaker, when we present here a bill for the correction of one abuse, one privilege that has been seized upon by people for nothing except private benefit and private gain, such a row is raised about it that the committee is almost afraid to try any further. If you will excuse me for telling it, gentlemen who fight the bill in this way remind me of the old negro preacher down in Georgia who used to belong to the father of a friend of mine, and who lived with the son after the war. He was not a regular preacher. He was what they called a "kerzorter" among the negroes. He finally decided to become a regular preacher, and wanted to get into the Methodist ministry. He went for his examination two or three times, and finally one Saturday, as he came back from his meeting, his employer said: "Well, Uncle Bill, how did you come out to-day?" "Bad, mighty bad, Marse Hamp. I went down dar to meeting last month, and I wasn't up on 'cipline; I was jest up on Scripter, and dey jest 'zamined me on 'cipline. So I went down dar to-day ready on 'cipline, and yer think dey didn't have the whole 'zamination in Scripter. Dey turned me down, sah; and I said to 'em as I left, I did, 'You kin take de whole business and go to the debble so far as I is concerned. When I gits ready on Scripter, you 'zamine me on 'cipline; and when I gits ready on 'cipline, you 'zamine me on Scripter.'" [Laughter.]

That is the way many gentlemen who have discussed this bill heretofore in the House have done. Whenever this committee has presented a bill correcting one abuse, they have insisted that instead of that we ought to have corrected the other; and if we should come in here with a bill lowering the pay of railroads for the carriage of mail matter, there would be plenty of gentlemen, I doubt not, on both sides of the House, ready to insist that we ought to have made the correction of abuses proposed in the Loud bill first. So far as the railroads are concerned, I doubt not that we shall come to that soon.

Now, my friend from Arkansas [Mr. LITTLE] on yesterday devoted a good deal of time in trying to demonstrate that second-class matter breeds first-class matter, and therefore is a source of revenue to the Government.

He said that one of these advertising sheets goes now into a neighborhood, and the ladies look into the back part of it, and say, "Here is a pattern. I want it." And another one would say, "I want one;" and another, "I would like one;" and it would lead, probably, to three or four or a half dozen letters with first-class postage, upon which, as my friend from Colorado says, the Government makes 300 per cent; and therefore the letters excited by the advertising sheet would more than make up the loss incurred in carrying it at the pound rate.

Why, my friend counts very little upon the business sense of the American people when he says it is necessary for the Government to carry that sort of stuff through the mails to get anything advertised throughout the country. Why, when an American has a thing worth advertising he is certain to advertise it, and he will advertise it whether he has the second-class privilege or not. He would advertise in the local newspaper, and that would bring about these inquiries and bring to the mails these letters that pay first-class postage just the same, at the same time helping the local newspaper.

No; gentlemen tell us that we ought to correct one abuse when we offer a bill for the correction of another; and if we were to change the point of attack, gentlemen—not the same gentlemen, perhaps, but gentlemen on the floor of this House—would say we ought to have offered to correct some abuse other than the one attacked.

Now, Mr. Speaker, my friend from Arkansas took a good deal of time in explaining to the House his position, that the Post-Office Department ought not to be required to pay its own expenses, and he cited the War Department and the Navy Department as illustrations of Departments not paying their way. My friend from South Carolina [Mr. STOKES] indulged in the same, and my friend from Colorado [Mr. BELL] indulged in the same sort of argument. They said that the War Department is not required to pay its own expenses. How it could except by plunder I can not conceive. They say that the Navy Department is not compelled to pay its own expenses, and therefore the Post-Office Department should not be required to pay its way.

Why, Mr. Speaker, no gentleman here insists that it should necessarily do so. The people pay the freight, no matter whether they pay it through the stamp tax of the Post-Office Department or otherwise. What this committee insists upon, and which is a correct principle of government in the control of any department, is that there should not be such a discrimination in the use of that department as to require the people of the United States to pay a deficit occasioned by that discrimination in favor of a few individuals.

That is the whole matter. Every person who avails himself of the mails of the United States does it for either pleasure or profit. Every man who uses the mail, whether he be high or low, rich or poor, does it either for his own profit or for his own pleasure. Now, then, if this be true, who should pay the expense of the Department—the man who uses it most extensively or least? If it be true that the Post-Office Department was never intended to pay its way, then I ask you, Mr. Speaker, why it was ever contemplated that there should be a tax placed upon the people for the use of the Post-Office Department?

We are not taxed specifically for the use of the War Department, we are not taxed specifically for the use of the Navy Department, we are not taxed specifically for the benefit of the Interior or any other Department of the Government, but when you come to use the great Post-Office Department the law requires you to pay the tax as you use it, and whenever we stamp a letter we are paying our part of that tax. I insist, Mr. Speaker, that there should be some sort of proportion between the amount expended and the amount paid in, and anything else was never contemplated by the men who founded this Government.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GRIGGS. Very well. I will ask——

Mr. DRIGGS. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may be allowed to conclude his remarks.

Mr. LOUD. We can not do that. I will yield the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. GRIGGS. Nothing else was contemplated, Mr. Speaker, and it would be preposterous to think for a moment that it was ever contemplated by anybody who had a single idea in connection with government that the War Department should pay its expenses as it goes, that the Navy Department should pay its expenses as it goes.

That would, of course, be an absurdity, but it was intended by the founders of our postal system that the Post-Office Department should pay its way, and that is illustrated and proven by the fact that every man who uses the mails must pay his tax for the using by affixing stamps to matter mailed. It seems to me an incontrovertible proposition when you take the mails in the aggregate. It was never intended that every class of mail matter should be self-sustaining; but plain common sense, it seems to me, compels the conclusion that it is and ought to be the policy of the Post-Office Department to be self-sustaining as a whole.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it is not so much a question of the deficit. That is very small this year, but I insist, and to that fact I want to call the attention of gentlemen from the rural districts of this country, gentlemen who represent districts like my own on this floor, I insist that we want to establish free rural delivery throughout the country. How are you going to do it as long as you have a deficit of from $6,000,000 to $10,000,000 a year? Oh, you say, that will come on in time.

Mr. Speaker, it will require not less than ten to fifteen millions of dollars to establish a rural delivery that will be satisfactory over this country, and I want to tell you that this is the only country in the Universal Postal Union that does not at least once every day deliver mail in every portion of its dominion to the people to whom it is directed.

Of all the countries in that union, of all the so-called great nations of the earth, the United States is the only one that does not deliver its mail anywhere and everywhere throughout its domain at least once every day. Now, gentlemen, you all want to see that done in your districts. Gentlemen from the cities are not so much interested in that, but gentlemen from the rural districts are interested in it. You want to see that come.

Gentlemen, the members of this committee want to see it. We recognize the fact, however, that it is dangerous to attempt it so long as a deficit annually stares us in the face. The committee are willing that right should be done to everybody; we are unwilling that wrong should be done to anybody; but when, for private gain, men seize upon privileges which are accorded by the Government, not to individuals for gain, but for the purpose of disseminating useful knowledge throughout the United States, to all the people—when this abuse brings about annually a large deficit, it is time to limit the privilege.

It is time for this Government through its law-making power to reach out its strong hand and curtail these special privileges, which, intrenched behind years of abuse, now defy Congress and the people. If time permitted, Mr. Speaker, I would endeavor to show to this House the great discrepancy between the receipts for this alleged second-class matter, which is really third-class matter, and the cost of transporting the same. It is enough to say now that the Government gets for it, in round numbers, about $1,750,000 and pays out for handling it over $14,000,000.

If third-class rates were charged, as they ought to be, for all of this stuff outside of legitimate newspapers and periodicals, the Government would receive from it over $26,000,000 annually. The difference between $1,750,000, the amount received, and twenty-six millions represents the annual loss to the Government from the handling of this matter. That amount of money would deliver mail to every home in this Republic every day during the year. The channels for disseminating useful knowledge would be increased thereby a thousandfold, and with increased knowledge would come increased happiness and greater prosperity to all. [Applause.]

Mr. LOUD. I will ask the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] if he desires to proceed now?

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] desires that the circular be read to the House. I pass it to the Clerk for that purpose.

The Clerk read as follows:

Petition against the passage of the bill (H. R. 6071) relating to second-class mail matter.

Hon. W. C. ADAMSON,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I do most respectfully protest against the enactment of the above-entitled measure, for the following reasons, to wit:

1. It excludes from the mails as second-class mail matter all "books or reprints of books," by which is meant all paper-covered books issued periodically, which have done so much to popularize cheap and good literature among the masses of the people, placing the choicest works of literature and science within the reach of the humblest schoolboy, and according to our people an intellectual privilege such as was never enjoyed by the citizens of any other country. The bill, if enacted, will crush out of existence this class of periodicals most completely and effectually.

2. It excludes from the mails as second-class mail matter all "sample copies" of newspapers and periodicals, thus depriving all publications of one of the most valuable means not only of extending their circulations, but of securing new subscribers to take the places of those who die or drop out for various causes. It therefore will cause the general depletion of newspaper circulation by subscription.

3. It increases the rate of postage upon "returns" to news agents from 1 cent to 4 cents per pound, thus seriously crippling the circulation of that large class of periodicals that are sent out "on sale."

4. It permits the mailing of periodicals at the pound rate to subscribers only, and defines subscribers as those who "voluntarily order and pay or agree to pay for the same." Under this definition a person whose subscription has lapsed and has not been renewed is not a subscriber, and copies of a periodical sent to other than advance-paying subscribers could be excluded. This is a direct blow at the local country newspaper.

5. It requires publishers who are permitted to mail matter of the second class to separate the same, before mailing, into United States mail sacks or bundles by States, cities, towns, and counties, as the Postmaster-General may direct, thus forcing every publisher to establish in his office a miniature post-office and entailing great extra expense.

6. It will throw out of employment hundreds of thousands of working men and women engaged in the printing, paper-making, electrotyping, and allied trades, entailing distress and calamity the extent of which can hardly be estimated.

7. The advocates of the bill maintain that its purpose is to reduce the deficiency in the postal revenues. They claim that there is a heavy loss to the Government in the carriage of second-class matter. This claim is untenable, because whatever loss there may be upon the carriage of second-class matter is fully offset by the gain upon the carriage of the two profitable classes, the first and fourth, which are a direct outgrowth of the mailing of second-class matter. Every publisher receives large numbers of letters and mails large quantities of "premiums" (fourth-class matter) to his subscribers and club raisers, and almost every advertisement is a bid for correspondence by mail and the consequent mailing of merchandise in filling orders. There are other causes than the carriage of second-class mail matter to account for the annual deficiency in the postal revenues, which would still be operative should the bill become a law. How, then, could the enactment of this measure reduce the deficiency?

8. The real beneficiaries of the measure are the express companies. By cutting off competition with the postal service they would be enabled to increase their rates, and thus reap a rich harvest.

9. Lastly, it creates a virtual censorship of the press by giving to post-office officials the absolute right to determine what newspapers and periodicals shall have the advantage of the rates of second-class mail matter. It confers on the Post-Office the power to determine what is, and what is not, a periodical; and since there is not a single newspaper or magazine published in the United States which, in some issue, is not amenable to this authoritative discrimination against advertising, supplements, premiums, extra editions, and extra free matter, and which, therefore, may be relegated to mail matter of the third class, it literally places them at the mercy of any postmaster's mandate.

Hoping you will give the above objections to this bill the consideration to which you may deem them entitled, I am,

Very respectfully, yours,

S. H. CHRISTOPHER,
Publisher of Patriot, Buena Vista, Ga.

Mr. MOON. I yield now an hour to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LENTZ].

Mr. LENTZ. Mr. Speaker, if I understand the opposition to the postal laws and regulations as they now exist, and if I understand the purpose of the Loud bill now under discussion, it is to meet a deficit in the revenues of the Post-Office Department. In other words, the contention throughout the country, so far as I have been able to listen to it, is that there is a small difference between the revenues and the expenditures of the Post-Office Department. On the one hand it is contended that we must close up this gap; that we must make some kind of an experiment to do it, and do it now. Outside of the dollar-and-cent consideration there seems to remain nothing except the educational proposition.

Now, if we are to deal with this question first as a business proposition, the report from the Postmaster-General strikes me as an exceedingly peculiar one, coming to this House after the facts which have been adduced in the several discussions in the several Houses that have considered this question. The Postmaster-General says that in round figures this second-class matter, which he proposes shall be excluded, costs this Government twenty millions, or, using his own language as found on page 5 of his report, "It involves a sheer wanton waste of twenty millions or upward a year." Now, if that is true, then it might be a question for serious consideration. But, my friends, if $20,000,000 were the deficit in the Post-Office Department, it would not justify the exclusion of any matter that is now passing through the mails with which I am familiar.

Referring to another part of the Postmaster-General's report for the year last past, we find on page 911 a table of the business of the Post-Office Department from 1837 down to this hour. I find that since 1852 there has been only one year in which the figures do not show a deficit; and I find further that when the postal revenues were fifteen millions, sixteen millions, eighteen millions, nineteen millions, and twenty millions, the deficits were four millions, five millions, and six millions a year.

Now that the business has increased and the postal revenues are in the neighborhood of $100,000,000—five times as much—we are here to-day undertaking to make new rules and regulations with reference to second-class matter, with a deficit of only $6,000,000. Last year the deficit was nine millions, and the year before eleven millions.

Taking the Postmaster-General's figures as to the deficit, we have reduced the deficit about $2,000,000 a year with the postal system as now organized. Two years more and we would wipe out the deficit with the law standing as it is. Inasmuch as we have reduced the deficit from eleven millions to six millions in two years, may we not safely count on wiping out the deficit entirely in the next two years by leaving the law as it now stands rather than by any tampering with it or by any patching up of legislation that may be done here in the next fifteen hours?

A deficit of only six millions! If the gentlemen contending here against the present law in reference to second-class matter insist on their figures, then the Postmaster-General will confound them by the figures on page 640 of his report, which are as follows: In order to save time I shall read the figures in millions. In 1895 we had 265,000,000 pounds of second-class matter. In 1896, 296,000,000 pounds. In 1897, 310,000,000 pounds. It was in 1897 that we had a deficit of $11,000,000. Now, if the second-class matter is the cause and producer of the deficit, what should be the case in 1898 as compared with 1897?

In 1898 we passed through the United States Post-Office 336,000,000 pounds of second-class matter, and the deficit dropped more than $2,000,000 a year. Yet the volume of second-class matter increased 26,000,000 pounds.

In 1899 the second-class matter reached the enormous figure of 352,000,000 pounds and the deficit dropped down to $6,000,000. The more second-class matter you are passing through the mails, if you are going to reason on figures, the less of a deficit you have, and if you will increase the second-class matter a few million pounds more, you will make the revenues meet the expenditures; and if you will add a few million pounds more of second-class matter, you will have revenue enough to be just and fair to the railway clerks, the postal clerks, and letter carriers, and increase their pay in proportion to the service they render and the risks and hardships they assume and endure.

Mr. LATIMER. I want to ask the gentleman, if it will not interfere with his remarks——

Mr. LENTZ. I yield to the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. LATIMER. If the Postmaster-General does not account for that in this way, that during the month that they weighed the mails there was not so much mail matter going through the mails, and that since that time there has been an increase, or, in other words, that the average of mail matter passing through the mails has been greater than it was during the month when they weighed the mails.

Mr. LENTZ. I will admit that the Postmaster-General accounts for it in some way, but that is not the only way. For instance, the Postmaster-General says that this $20,000,000 of a deficit due to second-class matter alone is because we are not charging 8 cents or 16 cents a pound. Now, so far as the Postmaster-General is concerned and the weighing up of mail is concerned, he knows and you and I know that the mail is weighed up for four years at a time. He knows and you and I know that the railroads have their contracts for this mail, and a part of it is now weighed for four years, a part of it for three, a part of it for two, and a part of it for one, and the railroads are not complaining of the weight. They are not here protesting against the weight. If you take this mail out, you will go on paying the railroads on the basis as the mail is now weighed for that length of time.

No; the Postmaster-General's figures will not meet the case. The Postmaster-General and the gentlemen here who figure with him make a mistake in their use of figures.

I want to turn now to page 26 of the Report of the Postmaster-General and call your attention to a mathematical demonstration that he is mistaken in his figures. What are the principal items of expenditure in the Post-Office Department?

First, the transportation of the mails on the railroads, $31,000,000. Out of a total expenditure of $101,000,000, we pay $31,000,000, or one-third, to the railroads.

What is the second item of large expenditure? Compensation of postmasters, $18,000,000. Can you change that by this bill?

What is the next? Free-delivery service, $13,000,000. Will you change that by this bill?

Compensation of clerks in post-offices, $11,000,000. Will you change that by this bill?

Compensation of railway post-office clerks, $8,000,000. Will you change that by this bill?

Transportation of mails on star routes, $5,000,000. Will you change that by this bill?

Will you dismiss the horses and wagons, the ponies and buggies that are used for that service?

Railway post-office car service, $4,000,000. Will you change that by this bill?

Transportation of foreign mails, one and one-half million dollars. Will you change that by this bill?

Rent, light, and fuel for first, second, and third class offices, one and one-half million dollars. Will you change that by this bill?

Now, gentlemen, I have read every item of expenditure that involves a million or more of dollars.

The next is mail messenger service, $900,000. Will you change that by this bill?

The next is manufacture of stamped envelopes, $500,000. Will you change that by this bill?

The next is transportation of the mails by regulation screen or other wagon service, $726,000.

The next is transportation of the mails on steamboats, $424,000.

Special-delivery service, $415,000.

Mail depredations and post-office inspectors, $406,000.

Every item below those I have read is only two or three hundred thousand dollars, and many of them sink down to less than a hundred thousand dollars and there are but few of them at that; while all of the large items of this $101,000,000 of expenditure will go on, even if you pass this law, and you are not saving a dollar in any one of the items that I have named. Now, sir, if you are arguing for this bill on the ground that it will save money to the Department, you will have to point out some other place than in any of the items mentioned in the report of the Postmaster-General. Tell me where, if you please, you can save it?

Mr. COWHERD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LENTZ. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COWHERD. The gentleman says, if I understand him, that you will not save money because of the fact that there has been a weighing, and you will not change the weight for four years under the law. Is that the gentleman's argument?

Mr. LENTZ. I am not arguing that now. I have passed beyond that. I said that some of the mail is weighed for four years, some for three, and we will go on with our weighing each year, of course.

Mr. COWHERD. The question I want to ask the gentleman is, admitting the truth of the statement of the Postmaster-General, based upon the records of the Post-Office Department, that this bill will cut out of the mails as second-class matter 176,000,000 pounds now carried, if this bill had been passed last year just before this weighing, you would have changed it to the extent of $28,000,000?

Mr. LENTZ. Which do you favor—4 cents, 8 cents, or 16 cents for this class of matter?

Mr. COWHERD. I favor cutting out this second-class matter, not permitting the privilege as second-class matter to any mail except such as was intended under the law.

Mr. LENTZ. Then what rate must it pay? What rate will you put upon all of this that you cut out?

Mr. COWHERD. It will fall into the rate provided by law, and most of it will go as third-class matter.

Mr. LENTZ. That is 8 cents a pound.

Mr. COWHERD. Eight cents a pound.

Mr. LENTZ. That would be 7 cents additional.

Mr. COWHERD. On 175,000,000 pounds.

Mr. LENTZ. On 175,000,000 pounds, which is one-fourth of the mail. You do not change your compensation to postmasters, nor the light and heat of post-offices, nor the messenger service, nor the free-delivery service, nor the salaries of clerks. What you will change will be one-fourth of the $31,000,000 paid to railroads. That is the only place that you could save anything, if you absolutely eliminate it; but, on the other hand, if you do get your 7 cents in addition for that, according to the Postmaster-General's figures, it would be $12,000,000.

But would you get it? Would you get your 7 cents? Would you not cut the throats of many of the men who are now making a living sending this second-class matter through the mails? Would you not destroy many a little enterprise? Would you not cut off from the opportunity of building up a printing establishment every young man who wants to start to-morrow?

Mr. COWHERD. In answer to that, will the gentleman permit me?

Mr. LENTZ. I yield to the gentleman, although I can not yield very often.

Mr. COWHERD. Just this point. The gentleman says it would not save except that 7 cents. Has he taken the statement of the Postmaster-General that the average rate on third-class matter is 14¼ cents, for the reason that it does not go by the pound so much as second-class matter?

Mr. LENTZ. I take the figures of the Postmaster-General, but the figures that are more significant are his figures of $20,000,000. Now, if the naked figures of the Postmaster-General are to be taken, I concede that if you do that kind of figuring you can make big figures of an apparent deficit. But in spite of all the Postmaster-General says I do not agree with him on his figures, and, with the indulgence of the House, I propose to read a few figures which I prepared in connection with this bill when it was before this House at a previous session. It will not take long, and these are actual figures, and will show gentlemen here how this second-class matter brings first-class postage.

I have gathered together some actual figures from the experience of one of these journals that you call an advertising journal. I submit the figures of that journal for the months of October, November, and December, 1897. It paid in those three months for second-class postage $1,885. In answer to the matter which this journal sent out as second-class matter, and bearing the advertisements of many advertisers, there came to the office of the journal 162,000 replies, each bearing a 2-cent stamp, which in the aggregate carried to the United States Treasury $3,240.

In answer to these 162,000 letters there were sent from the magazine office 143,000 postal cards, paying to the Government $1,430; also 19,000 letters, each bearing a 2-cent stamp, and in the aggregate paying into the Treasury of the Government $380.

Among the 162,000 letters received there was an average of 110 each day carrying a registered stamp, or 880 registered letters in eighty days. Each of these paid an additional 8 cents to Uncle Sam, and the total receipts of Uncle Sam out of this registered mail were $704. These 162,000 letters which came into the magazine office required the sending out in premiums, in the shape of third and fourth class matter, material that paid Uncle Sam for postage $2,750. As a result of carrying that second-class matter for $1,885 in the first instance, $10,389 was paid into the Treasury in connection with the magazine office alone.

But this is not all. It is estimated that it costs an advertiser in this magazine 15 cents to get the public to write one letter inquiring about his goods or ordering the same. This same magazine received from its advertisers for these three months $15,300. The men who paid that $15,300 did not throw that money away; they paid that sum to get their names and their goods before the public. Now, taking the advertiser's estimate, that for each 15 cents expended in advertising he receives a letter from some one of the public, it follows that the $15,300 paid to this magazine for advertising during the same three months resulted in the public writing 102,000 letters to the advertisers making use of its columns, on each of which letters there must have been a 2-cent stamp.

Now, it is also estimated that the advertisers spend on the letters and circulars they send back to the public—some say 6 cents for every letter received and some say 5 cents; but we will take the least figure and say 5 cents. The men who answered the advertisements paid 2 cents and the advertisers 5 cents, which makes 7 cents for each letter received by them from the public. As a result of this correspondence between advertisers and the public, 7 cents for each 102,000 letters is turned into the Treasury of this Government, or an aggregate of $7,140, which, added to the $10,389 that was paid in connection with the magazine office, makes a grand total of $17,529; and if you allow but a small amount for postage stamps on the third and fourth class matter sent out by the advertisers the sum total will far exceed $18,000 as the result of carrying this second-class matter denominated "trash" for $1,885.

Many men in business transactions waste their time chasing the cent around the dollar, and yet never see the dollar. I do not want Uncle Sam to waste his time here chasing the cent around the dollar and never seeing the dollar in this transaction. How much did I say? More than $18,000 in round figures goes into the Government Treasury directly and indirectly on this one transaction, or $10 for $1 for permitting that kind of literature to go through its mails.

Mr. SNODGRASS. What is the gentleman reading from?

Mr. LENTZ. I was reading from figures I prepared in connection with this subject two years ago, and from the actual figures of a magazine printed at Chicago. It is taken from the figures given for that magazine for the months of October, November, and December in the year 1897; and in connection with that we find that such firms as Montgomery Ward & Co., or Sears, Roebuck & Co. paid into the National Treasury $297,000 of postage in one year on goods which they sent out from their great mercantile establishments, where you can buy anything from a needle to a thrashing machine.

Their business is all conducted by first, third, and fourth class postage, but it began through this second-class mail matter, and leads up to the first, third, and fourth class mail; and if this Congress should cut off this second-class mail, it would just be the same as if we should go down to the business houses on Pennsylvania avenue and take the signs off the fronts of their buildings and their names and advertisements out of the newspapers. It is a part of the great governmental system, giving an income of $65,000,000, which the Postmaster-General says comes as receipt for first-class postage, or, in other words, for the 2-cent stamps that are used by the people of this country $65,000,000 comes into the Treasury.

How do you get that? That $65,000,000 is not paid for by the fathers and brothers and mothers and sisters in writing back and forth to each other. That money comes largely from advertising; and I say to you the Postmaster-General's figures are wrong. He does not allow anything for what is done by this second-class matter. He does not account for it going out and bringing mail, 2-cent stamps, by the thousands and by the millions. He overlooks that proposition.

I see Lippincott lying here on one of the desks in front of me, or take the Review of Reviews, the Outlook, Harpers, Scribners, the Literary Digest, and other magazines, and I will venture the assertion that half of the members of this House when they open such a magazine turn to the advertisements and read them before they read the literary articles that are found between the covers.

Now, why do you, in reading the magazines, read the advertisements first? It is because the American public want to know what science, ingenuity, and invention are doing for our country; and when they find a good thing mentioned in these pages, they are writing to the manufacturer and saying, "I want more information than I can find in the Outlook, or the Literary Digest, in the New York Herald, the New York World, the New York Journal, the Washington Post, or the Star to-day on this subject." These inquiries produce first-class postage. This second-class matter is responsible, I think, for $35,000,000 of the first-class postage receipts.

Here are the Postmaster-General's figures. He says that this second-class matter brought in $3,527,000. My friends, according to the Postmaster-General's figures $3,500,000 was brought in in the first instance on the pound rate. I have demonstrated to you that by the actual doings and experience of one great magazine they get $10 into the Treasury of the United States for postage before a single transaction of the second-class mail matter is complete.

On the same basis, multiply the three and a half millions by ten and it gives you $35,000,000 to be credited to the work of the second-class mail. As a business proposition, gentlemen, cut off one-half of the second-class mail, and if it means anything, in round figures you will have cut off one-half of that postal revenue, which would be about seventeen and a half millions of dollars.

Further, the Postmaster-General has overlooked another thing in this preliminary pamphlet, in the first few introductory pages, and, of course, he could not put it all in there; but in the complete report, if you will turn to page 644 you will find that this objectionable second-class matter, this second-class matter that is put up by the carload, is really the least trouble to handle of any mail that goes over the country. Listen to his own statement:

> In regard to the "fully made-up sacks," the New York post-office shows the admirable increase of 2,834 sacks for June, 1899, over June, 1898. The following are good individual instances: One publication had 8,090 sacks, and only 113 mixed, or less than 2 per cent; one had 9,330 sacks, and only 230 mixed, or less than 3 per cent; one had 2,587 sacks, and only 103 mixed, or about 3 per cent; one had 350 sacks, and only 1 mixed.
> Chicago still keeps the lead among the largest cities in the matter of good work done by publishers, there being only 8 per cent of mixed (or unseparated) mail this year, as against 10.4 per cent of the same last year. In the case of one publication there were only 15 sacks of mixed, out of a total of 3,495 sacks; and in another instance only 47 sacks of mixed, out of a total of 8,588 sacks. In respect to this particular feature, however, Baltimore is pre-eminent among the largest post-offices, for its three largest publications having a total of 3,924 sacks, sent in no mixed at all.
> In Boston one publication sent in only 207 sacks of mixed out of a total of 5,105 sacks, or 4 per cent.
> Elgin, Ill., takes the highest rank in completeness, for one publication sent in 4,731 sacks, all "fully made up;" that is, so made up that it could go at once to the trains without any delay in the post-office of origin for distribution.
> In Utica, N. Y., one publication sent in 1,901 sacks, including only 10 mixed.
> In Toledo one publication sent in 1,759 sacks, including only 10 mixed.

Gentlemen, will you talk now about striking down the large publications that put the mail in their own sacks, that run a post-office, distributing every article that goes into the mail, those that go to one town in one sack and those that go to another town in another sack, leaving the post-office nothing to do but to carry it as freight? The manufacturers of literature, if you call them that, carry it to the train, carry on a post-office system of their own, distribute it without taking the time of the railway mail clerks or the clerks in the post-office whence they send it, and almost without taking the time of the clerks in the post-office whither they send it.

I remember that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM], who knows a good deal about post-offices, because he has held the position of chairman of the Post-Office Committee for a good many years, figured the cost of the publications put in the mail in sacks and delivered to the train prepared so that the clerks of the Government did not have to handle it, he figured that it only cost the Government 4 cents, notwithstanding the high rate of 8 cents a pound the Government was then paying to the railroads.

Let us be fair about this. Fair to whom? Fair to the 80,000,000 of American people, fair to their intelligence, fair to the principles of this postal law. Was it devised as a money-making institution?

Mr. LATIMER. Will the gentleman allow me an interruption right there?

Mr. LENTZ. Certainly.

Mr. LATIMER. The gentleman says that we ought to be fair to the American people in dealing with this question, and I agree with him. There are a lot of publications on the gentleman's desk that go through as second-class matter.

Mr. LENTZ. Yes.

Mr. LATIMER. Now, if they had leather backs or were bound in cloth, they would not be allowed as second-class mail matter.

Mr. LENTZ. They would not.

Mr. LATIMER. Then why discriminate against the American people as between a paper-covered book and a cloth-bound book?

Mr. LENTZ. I will tell you. Beside the Bonnie Briar Bush [holding the book up in his hand] can be bought in that form, and have it delivered to the most remote schoolhouse in South Carolina or Texas or California for 15 cents. The boys and girls who have heard of the Bonnie Briar Bush and want to read it ought to have it at the cheapest opportunity in the world. There are people who are willing to pay for handsomely bound books, and they can have their choice.

The Government has instituted this great university system, using this mail service, so that when a man wants to read the Merchant of Venice, if he will take it in paper, I think we ought almost to carry it to his door and beg him to read it, for God's sake, because every man who reads the Merchant of Venice is a better man morally as well as intellectually. [Applause.] When a boy out in Ohio wants Evangeline, he can get it now for 15 cents, brought to his very home. I could not have got it in my boyhood days for less than a dollar.

I say that the Government ought to do this and not talk about deficits. You and I ought to vote for it. Call this magnificent Library of Congress a deficit if you please! Every day it is a deficit to the man without a soul, except the mercenary soul; every hour it is a deficit to him; it is a continuing deficit to the sordid, with its six millions of cost at the outset for the building and hundreds of thousands of dollars of annual expenditures for books and employees. But, gentlemen, it is not a deficit except, possibly, to the man who can not read or write his own name. He is the only man who should call it a deficit, and I suspect even he will have common sense enough to appreciate the advantage of having educated men around him.

Mr. LATIMER. Now, let me——

Mr. LENTZ. I want to answer your question. The Deserted Village, by Goldsmith [holding it up]; is that causing a deficit? Why does any State in this nation spend thousands and millions of dollars furnishing free schools to every boy and girl in the land? It is not because it is creating a deficit, it is because it is building manhood and lifting up its girls to womanhood to make this the greatest Republic on earth. [Applause.] The Gettysburg speech of Abraham Lincoln, and Essays on Lincoln, by Lowell [holding them up]. These are not creating a deficit; it is producing a larger return to the American Republic than any other enterprise the Government is engaged in.

Mr. LATIMER. Let me ask the gentleman what would be the difference in cost in carrying these books at the third-class rates?

Mr. LENTZ. I do not want it to go through at third-class rates, with an additional cost of 7 cents to the boy struggling to raise his first 15 cents.

Mr. LATIMER. The gentleman is not stating it correctly. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. GRIGGS] said that it would take four or five of these books to weigh a pound, and it would only make an additional cost of three-quarters of a cent for each book.

Mr. LENTZ. The gentleman from South Carolina will pardon me, my time is running on. I have a number of things to say and can not yield.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Charles Dickens's works in 12 volumes can be had for 50 cents—about 4 cents a volume.

Mr. LENTZ. Yes; there are cheaper publications than those I have mentioned. Here is a Child's History of England, which the boys and girls anywhere in this land can have the privilege of reading, and have it brought to their homes for 25 cents. It is true the Government is carrying it at the rate of a cent a pound; but the boy or the girl in ordering it had to use a 2-cent stamp, and the transaction is completed for 4 cents; that is all it costs the Government, according to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM].

Let me name other works—Lorna Doone; Ivanhoe; the Poems of William Cullen Bryant; the Book of Golden Deeds, by Charlotte M. Yonge; Reveries of a Bachelor; The Vicar of Wakefield; The Last Days of Pompeii; the Great Debate of Webster and Hayne; Democracy and Other Papers, by James Russell Lowell; Conciliation with the Colonies, by Edmund Burke; Abraham Lincoln, by Carl Schurz; Rules of Conduct, by George Washington; Rip Van Winkle; George Washington: A Historical Biography. [Applause.] Sir, I would be ashamed to have any of the boys or girls of America know that I had registered a vote here against their receiving this literature at the rate of 1 cent a pound.

In 1845 this Government launched out on the policy of carrying county papers to the county boundaries free of charge. Why? To promote reading, to develop the brain and the heart. No such miserable, picayunish consideration as the question of a few millions of deficit entered into the mind of Congress at that time.

Let me tell you something about deficits. The War Department of this country will send in a bill of about $125,000,000; I will not call it a deficit. The Navy Department will send in a bill asking for about $65,000,000; I will not call it a deficit. The Agricultural Department will send in its bill for a large appropriation; I will not call it a deficit. The appropriation bill in due time will carry items for salaries of clerks and other officers of this Congress; I will not call it a deficit. But in fact, according to the theory of gentlemen who are supporting this bill, the Government is doing nothing but creating deficits.

The principal object of the postal system of the United States is educational; and I am not going to quibble about a deficit of five or six million dollars, as gentlemen call it. It is not a deficit. If the Government would pay for its franked matter the regular postage rate, there would not be any deficit.

Postmaster-General Wilson or Postmaster-General Bissell—I have forgotten which—made that statement in one of his reports, i. e., if the Government paid for the matter that goes through the mail under frank and then again would pay out of the Treasury to the men that sent that matter franked the amount of the postage, the two accounts would about equalize and there would be no deficit. In round numbers, the Government is now carrying on a postal system that is self-sustaining.

It has been hinted here that railway clerks and post-office clerks and letter carriers will require additional appropriations. I shall vote for them and say, "God speed those appropriations." These clerks and carriers are not creators of deficits. Call them rather by their proper names. They are a part of our educational system—a part of the greatest American university—our postal system. [Applause.]

I am not going to stand here with the bugaboo on the outside of the window about additional expense, payments for additional service, and better service. You can not make this postal system too good, you can not make it too cheap to the reading public, nor can you afford to be niggardly with the men who perform the service, risking their lives and health on trains and in all kinds of weather.

Now, gentlemen, a pamphlet like this [illustrating] can not, of course, under this proposed law go through the mails as second-class matter. I wish that this kind of material could be sent through the mails free of charge. It ought to go at pound rates. Let any gentleman look at it. There is not in my judgment any matter of this kind that is decent—and none goes through the mails now that is not pretty carefully looked after by the gentlemen in charge of that business—that ought not to go through at the pound rates.

Here is another work [holding it up], Snow Bound, Songs of Labor, and other poems by J. G. Whittier. Here is a poem that was written at a time when this Government had $11,000,000 deficit in its postal system, but nobody raised any cry to stop that deficit or argued that you should stop sending newspapers from the county seat to the county boundary free of postage. It was a time when the question of human liberty was at stake, and these works of Whittier were sent out as they ought to be sent out now throughout the land. Let me read you a few lines from one of these poems:

While there's a grief to seek redress,
Or balance to adjust,
Where weighs our living manhood less
Than Mammon's vilest dust,—
While there's a right to need my vote,
A wrong to sweep away,
Up! clouted knee and ragged coat!
A man's a man to-day!

I want the boys and girls of the United States to get this literature.

And, sir, if men are willing to buy paper at the price fixed by a trust, if they are willing to buy printers' ink at the price fixed by a trust, if they are willing to buy type at the price fixed by the type trust, if they are willing to prepare decent poems and happy stories and put them into the post-office, they must get their pay somehow, even if they donate their publications to the people of the country. How would they do it? In only one way. John Smith, who advertises his buggy or his automobile or his thrashing machine in that journal expects somebody to write him a letter.

That is the way they communicate, and it is in that way alone that these people can keep up this second-class matter. They can not buy the paper and ink and type, they can not hire the labor, they can not produce the publications unless men are using 2-cent postage stamps, writing to the men who put their names in the papers advertising the goods they manufacture, and it is in that very way, my friends, that we have produced the higher intelligence, that we have produced the higher class of skilled labor in this country, because we have got thousands of people who are reading papers and magazines now who would not read them at all under the old-fashioned system of paying four or five dollars a year for a magazine.

I want to say another thing, gentlemen. While you are passing this law you had better look over the Canadian line, and you will find that they can send out their second-class mail matter at half a cent a pound, and you will find that we have an arrangement with them by which we will accept their mail and carry it throughout our country.

In addition to that, you will find that a man can take a printing press and leave New York City, or Bangor, Me., or Augusta, or Boston, and go over to Montreal or Toronto and establish a publication office there, and under the laws and rules that now obtain between the two countries he can produce his paper at a cost of at least a cent a pound less than it costs him to produce it in this country, with a trust in control of the white paper; and a cent a pound means a good deal, because, taking the average newspapers that go through the mails of this country, it takes only eight of them to make a pound. It means something in the price of the publication, and they can mail it from Toronto. They can do their advertising from that point just as well as from Cincinnati or St. Louis.

Why should we now deprive the great American Republic of a postage rate at least as favorable as that of Canada? They, with their five or six million people, find it profitable to carry second-class matter at half a cent a pound. No, gentlemen; if you will investigate this question, I think you will agree with me, that if anything ought to be done as a good business proposition, it would be to reduce the rate from a cent to half a cent, rather than to multiply it by four.

But there is one feature about this bill of exceeding great injustice, and that is to charge the man who has no paper established a rate four times as high as you charge a man who has got a hundred thousand subscribers. On the theory that these men have been getting the benefit of the mails at less than it costs the Government, you have loaned the Treasury of the United States to the great journals and magazines to build themselves up with a hundred thousand or two hundred thousand or three hundred thousand or five hundred thousand subscribers.

Now consider the young man who can not get into the nail business, nor the sugar business, nor the glass business, nor the pottery business, nor any other business of the two hundred monopolized by the trusts; let him say, "I will try to run a little paper." What can he do? He has no subscription list. How will he start his paper? Do you want him to go around town or travel through the country after he has printed a copy of his paper and deliver it from house to house, and read it to the people? You know that is absurd. But if he sends it out through the mail, you would make him pay four times as much in his effort to get started in business as you make the man pay who has got a hundred thousand subscribers.

Why should not that effort of a young man be encouraged by giving him exactly the same postage rate that we gave the man who has built up an establishment worth a million dollars? Why not still further encourage the dissemination and distribution of literature?

Now, I have heard some urge that these books are mere reprints. Why, there are hundreds of thousands of boys and girls in the United States who, when they read Milton's Paradise Lost tomorrow, in this kind of cheap literature, will find it to be news to them. It will be the first time they ever heard of it.

There are millions of boys and girls in the United States who, when they pick up the Rules of Conduct of George Washington for the first time and read them will consider them as news.

News! Is it not more important for a boy of 14, 15, or 16, to have this little book come into his hands, than any magazine or any newspaper in the United States? You propose to shut out Evangeline. You propose to cut off Mr. Longfellow and let some short fellow in literary ability take his place. [Applause and laughter.]

Now, for the life of me I have never been able yet to find out why we are constantly taking three or four days in each session of Congress to discuss a bill to curtail the rights of second-class mail matter. I think it has been demonstrated by a dozen different men on the floor of this House each time this matter has been discussed, that the second-class mail is the producer, or, if you please, is the advance agent for the 2-cent stamp. It is the little thread that draws the string that draws the rope that draws the cable of the $85,000,000 of postal revenue. I beg of you do not cut down this system.

I do not stand alone in my judgment. Fortunately for this House and for the country, it occasionally happens that we have bills which are not partisan, bills upon which we can certainly agree on great fundamental principles. Here, for instance, is a gentleman who sends in his protest, Mr. Henry A. Reinhard, who is the manager and the president of the Westbote, the largest German paper published in Columbus, Ohio, a Democratic paper.

Almost at the same time with his letter came a letter from Hon. Leo Hirsch, proprietor of the Columbus Express, the most influential German Republican paper in central Ohio. Here, in addition to that, comes another letter from Carl G. Jahn, publisher of the Weekly Law Bulletin, the only weekly summary of the decisions of the courts of the State of Ohio below the supreme court.

In addition to that Dr. C. O. Probst, secretary of the Ohio medical board and in charge of the State board of health, sends in his protest against interfering with the Ohio Sanitary Bulletin. He is not alone, however, in that. Dr. J. U. Barnhill, publisher of the Columbus Medical Journal, is opposed to any change in the law. The editor and manager of the American Insurance Journal puts in his protest. The Columbus Secret Society Publishing Company, of Columbus, publishing journals for Masons, Knights of Pythias, Odd Fellows, and others, sends in their protest.

The Massey Business College and the Parsons Business College, of Columbus, Ohio, and the Commercial College, of Lancaster, three different business colleges, send in their protests. These men are not ignorant of the postal laws. They are the best informed men on the postal laws in the country. They publish your paper and my paper, they publish the paper of every school and every doctrine. They are all against tampering with the law.

Why not listen to the combined judgment of these men? I heard a gentleman say, "Well, were not some of these petitions printed or sent in on blanks?" I answer that in the Roberts case we had millions of petitions sent in on blanks. You scarcely ever get them in any other way.

Somebody is interested in shutting off this second-class matter. Who is it? I want to make this statement. I will not undertake to say who are interested in reducing the privileges of second-class matter, but, as you know, second-class matter has its limitations. You can not publish a daily paper in New York for the people of Chicago. The space limit of a thousand miles, with the telegraph competing between the two, prevents the average daily paper from going more than four or five hundred miles from home. It is the rare, stray exception when a daily paper runs out a thousand miles across the continent.

The time limit in the railway service reduces the daily papers of the country to certain great centers of population, and beyond that they can not hope nor expect to go. But in the 30, 40, 50, or 60 pages of their Sunday issues they are furnishing libraries, they are furnishing reproductions of encyclopedias. They are not producing original matter, they are not furnishing the people with news, but all of these great journals will go on with their Sunday issues and Sunday editions. You do not propose to reach the evil by this legislation. You are tampering and meddling with the law and you will make a botch of it.

I think I have never made a prophecy on the floor of this House, but I am perfectly willing to go upon record as saying that if you put a law on the books here that will reduce your second-class matter from 350,000,000 pounds to 150,000,000 pounds you will have a deficit of $20,000,000 the very first year that you reduce it, provided the railroads or somebody else does not make it up in some way. But unless you cut down the railroad transportation at the same time, you mark my words, you will have a deficit four times as large as you have now.

I want to read a letter from a banker in Chicago with reference to the engineer sent here from England to find why and how the United States could build a bridge more quickly than the English could for the English Government, and at less cost. That is one of the most significant, one of the most important, facts, and every citizen of the United States ought to know it:

CHICAGO, ILL., March 17, 1900.

Hon. JOHN J. LENTZ, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: With reference to the report of the engineer sent by English manufacturers to the United States to investigate how it was possible for bridge builders in this country to not only construct the Atbara River bridge quicker, but at a less price per ton, than the English bridge builders, I would state that I am in possession of a portion of that report, which I am sure is a great credit to our American labor; also the institutions which have produced this condition.

The engineer reported to those who sent him that the bridge had been built, not only in six weeks, the time specified, but also at a profit, and that it was possible and due to "the intelligence of the American laborer," who worked his head and hands together. In investigating the habits, customs, and homes of the American mechanic and laborer he found that in the homes of 210 men employed in this bridge work there were received during the week 337 different daily, weekly, and monthly publications, either free or subscribed for, while the same number of employees engaged at similar work in England took 32 publications.

Yours, truly,

H. A. HAUGAN,
President State Bank of Chicago.

He was told in person by the individual who was sent here to make this investigation that our men are reading 337 journals, weeklies and magazines, and their men, of the same number, were reading 32. Our men produced a bridge for England in Egpyt at less cost and in less time than those of England could, and the engineer's confidential report was that it was because of the intelligence of the American laborer. Keep up this educational system, gentlemen; go on with the high school and university in connection with your postal service.

Why, you have the Chautauqua Society, which has been a benefactor to hundreds and hundreds of thousands of men and women in this country. Mix this question in any way you please. Talk about this on the financial side, and it is bad policy to change the laws as they now stand. Talk about it on the educational side, and it is criminal to change the law and cut down the right of second-class mail of the post-office system of the United States. [Loud applause.]

You have put barriers enough in spite of yourselves in the way of people who are anxious to read by allowing the paper trust to have the benefit of the tariff on paper, and instead of reducing postal facilities you should be increasing the postal rights of the people. The postal privileges are about the only advantages that come to the masses from the National Government, and I want you to let the boys and girls have these books. Let them have these art works. I would like to see that magazine entitled "Masters in Art" go through the mails free. They are as handsome as any man wants. They are reproductions of the great art works of the world. You can get one of those for 15 cents.

Why would it not be a magnificent educational department to carry that into every home of the United States? Why not give the people of this country such literature as that and such art as that without taxing it out of the mails? Why put an additional price upon it? I am against it, and I believe every gentleman who will release himself from chasing a cent around the dollar and looking to the dollar of intelligence and the dollar of character, that go to make American life will vote against this bill.

Your arguments remind me of the old story of the man who had some rats in his barn, and in order to get rid of the rats he set the barn on fire. He succeeded in getting rid of the rats, but he got rid of the barn too. It is poor policy to undertake to reduce the educational department of this Government to a mere mercenary establishment in an effort to save $6,000,000 deficit which is not a deficit. Why not call the Government Printing Office a deficit? That would be just as reasonable. Every other Department has a deficit.

There is the Pension Department, with $145,000,000 that some would call a deficit. This is one of the best possible expenditures the people have made, and I shall not call the pension expenditure a deficit, but when it comes to a few dollars difference between the revenue and the expenditure in this one educational department of the postal system you come in and talk about a deficit. I want the system kept as it is. I want the privilege extended.

I want to encourage young men to start printing offices and start all kinds of publications and promulgate their theories and thoughts to the world. It will do more for this country than your military appropriations will do; it will do more for the country than the naval appropriations will do; it will do more for this country than the appropriations for seeds and documents or for horse books and cattle books. If one or the other is to be curtailed, if we are to save a little money here or there, save it in the War Department or anywhere else rather than take from the American people the privilege of reading what now go to their homes as second-class matter. [Loud applause.]

Mr. LOUD. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa thirty minutes.

Mr. McPHERSON. Mr. Speaker, as one of the committee that favorably reported this bill, it will be my purpose to now try and bring the House back to the consideration of the measure upon its merits. There will be no member of this House who investigates this bill, having the courage of his convictions, who will not give it an affirmative vote. This is strong language, but true. My regret is that this House is so slimly attended. I have been impressed, during the short time of my membership in this body, that one of the principal industries on both sides of this House is for members to spend their time upon the sofas in the committee rooms, in the cock lofts or cellar of this building and then come in when great measures are to be voted on, and with captious objections, thinking they are playing to the back seats and their constituencies at home, help defeat a measure of great merit.

I listened upon yesterday to a member of the committee, the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. LITTLE]; I listened to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. STOKES]; I listened to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN] yesterday, and now I have listened to a great deal of noise for the last fifty minutes from another gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LENTZ]. Those who oppose this bill remind me of the condition of mind that a candidate for a judgeship in my State once occupied.

A colleague of mine now occupying a seat on this floor was found to be earnestly supporting the candidate, and when interrogated as to why he was giving him such earnest and cordial support, the gentleman, who is now a member of this House, replied that he thought the man would be eminently fair when he became a judge, because he would have no preconceived notions of the law. [Laughter.]

These gentlemen have been eminently fair, and especially has the gentleman from the capital city district of Ohio, who has just taken his seat, because he has no preconceived notions of this bill. [Laughter.] Why all his turmoil and noise in opposition to this bill?

Now, I am going to spend my thirty minutes with reference to the bill, and see what it is, and see how flimsy the objections thereto may be. Everybody wants to wipe out this deficit. Nobody claims that it can be done, but by one or both of two ways. One is to cut down compensation to the railways, a matter that is now under investigation by the postal commission, as I understand it, and the other is to get rid of this great load that is dragging the Department to death under the privileges of second-class mail matter. We are, by this bill, seeking to cure one of these evils.

Mr. VANDIVER. Will the gentleman permit me?

Mr. McPHERSON. Yes.

Mr. VANDIVER. Which one of these methods would you adopt?

Mr. McPHERSON. Either or both if an evil, and not growl at everything that is offered. [Laughter.] I would go to the bottom of this thing, and eradicate the root of all these evils, instead of standing around whining and complaining at every legitimate effort that is made to correct these great abuses that now exist in the postal system of this country.

Now, what is this bill? A little bill of four and a half pages with reference to second-class mail matter. The first section provides, in substance, for a law precisely as it has been for years and is to be reenacted, excepting with reference to the reprinting of books, on which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LENTZ] has talked so loudly and to which I will come back after a little while. The second section is now existing law, excepting that it denies news agents the return privileges at the pound rate of 1 cent. The third section limits the issue of sample copies, a matter to which I will allude later. The fourth section provides for taking through the mails the magazines and literature of fraternal society organizations, and the fifth reenacts that these publications must be issued at least four times a year.

The sixth section provides that the proprietor publishing these papers, to have these privileges, must separate them before taking them to the post-office, and not, as represented by the gentleman who has just taken his seat [Mr. LENTZ], that the publishers become a part of the postal system and must take them to the railway train. To be plain about it, and yet brief, there is not a word of truth in the statement as set forth by way of objection to that section in this bill. The remaining section is a repealing clause, to which I need not make reference.

Now, that is the bill about which there is so much complaint. This is the bill about which we hear so much that the deficit must be wiped out by resorting to something else. When the roll comes to be called after the postal commission has made its report, some of the same gentlemen will be making complaint because this second-class matter is not wiped out.

My time is exceedingly limited. I can not discuss all these propositions that I have briefly outlined as covered by this bill. But one of the objections is made pretendedly on behalf of the country newspapers. I challenged the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. STOKES] yesterday afternoon, and I offered him thirty minutes of my time if he would explain wherein the country newspaper is damaged to the extent of five cents in twelve months.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN] took up the challenge, and said he would explain it. It has not been explained, and can not be. Gentlemen finally take refuge in the subterfuge that this bill hits those country newspapers in the provision with reference to sample copies. Sir, not one time in a thousand issues does any country newspaper ever issue an excess of 500 copies. If some gentleman wants a political speech printed by the thousands and tens of thousands, let him pay for it.

If some Chautauquan assembly or agricultural society or Barnum's show or something else wants a special edition, let them pay for it. It has been already agreed by the Post-Office Committee that the number of sample copies shall be raised by an amendment from 500 to 2,000, which will be offered by the gentleman from Missouri. The exchange list of these papers is left under this bill precisely as it has been for years and years of time. The free distribution through the mails in the county is left precisely as it has been for years and years of time.

Recurring to the question which I asked yesterday, I ask that some man who may follow me shall show wherein the country paper is to be harmed by this bill. Some of the publishers of such papers have sent in petitions asking for the defeat of the Loud bill; but no one of them who has seen the Loud bill has ever made complaint. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD] a few hours ago handed me a couple of letters which he had received, and I want to read them. The first is as follows:

OFFICE OF THE DAMARISCOTTA HERALD,
G. W. SINGER, PUBLISHER,
Damariscotta, Me., March 13, 1900.

DEAR SIR: A careful examination of the "Loud bill," so called, convinces me that its provisions would, if enforced, come near ruining me. As I am conducting a perfectly legitimate business, I protest against being ruined to gratify Loud's desire to give his name to a law.

I beg of you to use all means in your power to kill the Loud bill.

Very truly, yours,

G. W. SINGER.

Hon. C. E. LITTLEFIELD,
Washington, D. C.

The gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD] tells me that he sent this gentleman a copy of the bill and asked him to define specifically the objections he found to it. Thereupon comes back a letter from the same gentleman. It is dated at the same place, Damariscotta, March 19. The other time it was addressed to

"Honorable C. E. LITTLEFIELD." Now the address is changed to "Dear Mr. LITTLEFIELD." The letter reads as follows:

Thank you for your prompt reply and for copy of the Loud bill.
I see nothing objectionable in the bill as it now appears. Indeed, I can see where it may help the country publisher.
Very truly, yours, GEORGE W. SINGER.

Such is the experience of every member of the House who has received letters objecting to this bill—at least it is my experience. When a publisher protests against the Loud bill, furnish him a copy of the bill, and then he is for it. Why? Because there is no additional burden put upon them. On the other hand, there are a great many benefits given them.

These advertising mediums in the East flood the country and take away from the country paper that which legitimately belongs to it. Do you suppose that these advertisers, if we cut off their spurious papers, will not go to the country paper for their advertising? Why, sir, the $3 Douglas shoe will be advertised one way or another; the Fedora hat will be advertised one way or another; the Lydia Pinkham pink pills for pale men will be advertised some way or another; because barefooted men and baldheaded men and pale men are going to be looked after through some medium or other; and the advertising will go on somehow or other. If we cut off these fellows who issue those advertising sheets, they will go to the country newspapers, where such advertising belongs, and it will redound largely to the benefit of the country paper.

I am a friend of the country paper. If I have to take my choice between the country paper and the city daily, I stand every time for the country paper. It is the city daily that creates the clamor, but it is the country paper which creates a decent public opinion. Within less than two weeks I went to two gentlemen who have the privileges of the press gallery of this House, telegraphic correspondents of two of the great city dailies of this country.

It was shortly after the close of the great debate recently held in this House. I told them that I was a daily reader of the papers for which they corresponded and that I was not surprised to see that in the editorial columns the truth was never told with reference to the measure, but I said "I am amazed that your daily telegraphic correspondence does not occasionally state a truth." The answer was, "We are under instructions; and if we violate our instructions, our dispatches are edited after they are received at the home office of the great city dailies."

It was the country paper that stood by all our great men and all the great measures that have ever passed through this House. In 1858 and 1860 it was the great city dailies that demanded the nomination of somebody else other than Abraham Lincoln. It was the country papers that stood by him when he made the great fight of this century for the principle that Congress could legislate over its Territories as it pleased, governed and controlled by the conscience of this great nation. It was the country papers that stood by Abraham Lincoln when he defied Chief Justice Taney, the author of the Dred Scott decision, when Mr. Lincoln suspended the writ of habeas corpus.

The country paper has been an educator greater than many of the books that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LENTZ] has been recently holding aloft in his hand. I remember that thirty-five years ago one-half of the people of this country denounced Abraham Lincoln as a buffoon, as a blackguard, as a teller of vulgar stories. Later, when he undertook to suspend the writ of habeas corpus, they denounced him as a tyrant But the people, through these agencies, have been educated until to-day the same men who then denounced him are all united in their loud praises of the name of Abraham Lincoln in all of his teachings, save and excepting the one to which I have made reference; and in less than five years from to-day they, too, will be filing affidavits that they themselves for a lifetime have been supporters of that great principle.

I am in favor of the educational influences of the country paper, and the Loud bill does not harm them. It benefits them.

The country paper may, and often is for a time, deceived by the great daily papers of the large cities, as they, on the Puerto Rican matter, have been deceived. The country papers are slow to act, but when they do act the country papers are, more than any other agency, the school and church alone excepted, that which forms a public opinion by which the country stands.

But my friend from Ohio [Mr. LENTZ] says that these news agents are being harmed. What is there in all that? The great daily papers and magazines go out to the news agents at a cent a pound. They ask for the return privilege at a cent a pound, and why? Not because the papers are of use after they are returned. It is because the great publishers suspect that the news agents in a distant town are dishonest or may become dishonest, and they want a check upon those news agents.

The news agent orders a hundred copies of a certain paper and sells but 75. He reports that he has 25 left on hand. The publisher doubts him, believes he is dishonest, and you gentlemen who oppose this bill ask this great Government of ours to transport those papers back at a cent a pound in order to furnish proof that the news agent is not dishonest with the publisher. That is all there is in it, and it is all that can be said about it. The American News Company to-day is one of the principal lobbyists against this bill. From that organization, more than any other concern, objections find lodgment against this just measure.

Another gentleman says we ought to have the bulletins of the State boards of health go through the mails at the pound rate. It is a small matter, and personally I care nothing about it. It is a thing that can be segregated and covered by an amendment if one should be desired. But I suggest that while you are doing that in order to help out the States, why not give the franking privilege to every county and State officer, so that this Government can show its generosity to all of these States?

Now, a great deal is said about these colleges and these books, and I can only speak briefly about them. Take Yale and Harvard and Princeton and Ann Arbor and the other great colleges of this country; they do not seek to put these matters through the mail at second-class rates, because it involves perjury and the perpetration of crime under existing laws to do it. It is the unsophisticated and the deceived, who imagine that they ought to have this right, who are here complaining.

We are not striking down a single privilege which these colleges legally possess to-day. Yet they have been prevailed upon by these lobby influences to flood the membership of this House with all kinds of petitions and memorials. If they are publications having subscribers and published at least quarterly they go through the mails now at second-class rates, and in the county of publication they go free of charge. If out of the county they go at the pound rate, and sample copies at the same rate. There is no merit in the contention of any gentleman who imagines that he is reflecting the sentiment of a college of his district to make opposition to this bill.

Now, just a few words with reference to the publications of Houghton, Mifflin & Co. The books of that concern were thrown around our committee room by a most excellent gentleman, Mr. Wheeler, not for any impure purpose, but for the purpose of convincing us of the merits of those publications, as though we needed to be convinced. What is the truth about it, as contradistinguished from the statements made by the gentleman from the capital city district of Ohio [Mr. LENTZ]?

To-day in all of his heartburnings and tears and pathos for the boy whom he wishes to have read these little classics, if you order one of them, what does it cost to go through the mail? If they are ordered in large quantity by a news dealer or a local bookstore this bill will change the rate to 8 cents a pound, a difference of seven-eighths of 1 cent per book. Do you suppose Houghton, Mifflin & Co. are going to stop this publication because of a difference of seven-eighths of a cent per book?

If a single book is ordered, it goes through the mails at this time under existing law at the same rate as provided for under the pending bill. The truth is that these little paper-back books cost about 3 cents each and are sold at 15 cents. But the real reason for their publication is as an advertisement for the great and most reputable house of Houghton, Mifflin & Co. Not that it purports to be an advertisement, but it is done to keep the name of the house before the public.

There is nothing in it, excepting these arguments that we all delight to hear about doing these things that help the boys and the girls of the country. I wish to heaven that some of the books left in our committee room could be circulated everywhere. One mentioned by the gentleman from Ohio a while ago, the great debate of Daniel Webster upon the Constitution, is a book that I wish was not only in the hands of every boy in this country, but in the hands of every Democratic Congressman and of six Republican members of this House. [Applause and laughter.]

Along with that I will agree that they may import into Iowa its twin or companion book, the great argument of John C. Calhoun, upon the same great question. Seven-eighths of a cent per book, when sent at wholesale, is the difference between the Loud bill and the present law, and there is no difference in the world between the existing law and the Loud bill if a single copy of the book is sent. Yet we hear all this noise and all this fuss about the iniquities of the Loud bill as striking down from the boys and girls of this country the reading matter to which they are entitled.

I can not spend much more time upon this; but the gentleman who just preceded me says that he is glad there is no partisanship in this bill. Strictly construed, the gentleman is right; but construed in another way, he is mistaken if he thinks there is no politics in this bill. There are not six members upon this floor but who have said and have written letters stating that they are going to help reclassify the railway mail clerks; that they are going to give relief to the post-office clerks; that they are going to give relief to the letter carriers, and, above all things, to the substitute letter carriers.

But, gentlemen, if this deficit is not stopped by the passage of this or some similar measure, then the contention is going to be made by these same gentlemen that they can not keep their promises because the deficit is already too large, and we can not strain the credit of the Government further. They may think there is no politics in this. These boys who are organized, and they have your promises now in their hip pockets, will take the scalps of some of you gentlemen who think there is no politics in this, if the expenditures of the Post-Office Department are not reduced so that these great reliefs can be given.

Mr. HILL. Can you not save enough on this bill to give rural free delivery all over the United States?

Mr. McPHERSON. I was just going to add that. I am talking now to gentlemen who live in the cities, but you go to the country where they want rural free delivery, and more can be saved by the passage of this bill than it will cost to take the letters up to the front doorstep of every farmer in the United States who lives east of the Rocky Mountains, and on the coast west of the same range. You say there is no politics in this bill, that economy in Government expenditures, cutting off these extravagances so that the needful things can be done, may not be politics, in the estimation of some of you gentlemen in the month of March, but you will sing a different tune in the month of November.

The boys insist upon this, but they are fair and they are honorable. They do not want these things until the Government is able to carry them out. If we get rid of an expense of six, twelve, or twenty million of dollars, as the Postmaster-General seems to think we can, then these reliefs and these benefits can be accorded. I earnestly and sincerely hope for the passage of this bill, with the amendment that is to be offered, as I understand it, by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK]. [Applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. LOUD. I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURKE].

Mr. BURKE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, since I have been a member of this House I have never heard as much discussion over a measure which deserved as little as the measure now before this House. Why, sir, to hear some of the gentlemen who have indulged in this discussion to-day, one would imagine that the issue of life and death to this Republic hung upon the decision of this House upon the question now before us.

Mr. Speaker, I have cast many votes in this House since I became a member. I want to say to the House, and especially to my Democratic colleagues here, that after a thorough investigation of this matter, as far as I have been able to investigate it, I shall never cast a vote with more pleasure and with more absolute belief that I cast the right vote than when I shall cast my vote for this measure to-morrow. [Applause.]

What is this case? Mr. Speaker, it is a tempest in a teapot that has been raised by the opposition here. What is it? I take it, sir, ordinarily when a measure is presented to the House, coming from a committee supported, as this measure is, with practical unanimity by that committee, while it is not conclusive to the membership of the House, it should be, and is, strongly persuasive. This measure comes here with the approval of fourteen members of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, as against the opposition of three members of that committee.

I say that if not conclusive, it should be strongly persuasive to the minds of gentlemen who have not given this subject complete investigation by reason of the fact that they were not members of this committee. But the gentleman from Ohio who just took his seat indulged in prophecy. He posed before this House as a new prophet, not as one of the olden time—because, sir, I might say that it would be well for him next year, if this bill passes, that he does not occupy the position of the prophets of the olden times.

We are told that those prophets, false prophets, were sometimes stoned to death; and if the prophecy of the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LENTZ] should be measured by the standard of this bill passing, and there is not a deficit, as the gentleman suggested that there would be, of $20,000,000, it might subject him to the same treatment that has been accorded to prophets of old. He might be stoned to death, Mr. Speaker; but he would be heard even while they were stoning him. [Laughter.]

But what is the proposition, Mr. Speaker? I take it that when a measure is brought before this House, it is the duty of the membership to investigate that measure, if they have the time to do it, and they should not content themselves with the idea that they will vote against any measure simply for the purpose of casting a negative vote because such a vote is easily defended hereafter. That does not comport with the standard erected or that should be erected for the membership of this House.

Come up and investigate a question, if you have time to do it, and cast your vote independent of that public clamor which is totally ignorant of the facts as they exist. While gentlemen have said that they have received numerous petitions sent by their constituents asking them to vote against this measure, Mr. Speaker, I have received but two letters from newspaper publishers within my district—and there are possibly 100 publishers of newspapers in that district—and both of these letters, sir, were the stereotyped ones that every member of this House has received; similar to that one which the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee had read at the Clerk's desk as a reply by the gentleman from Georgia to his colleague on this side.

With reference, now, to charges of the opposition. The first that has been made by gentlemen is against the return of sample copies. I do not know, sir, that I can add anything to what has been so well said by the gentleman from Iowa upon that question. What is that proposition, gentlemen? Why should publishers of magazines and other periodicals have the privilege of sending their publications to Texas, for instance, and be carried by the Government at 1 cent a pound, and then, in order to satisfy themselves of the honesty of their agent in Texas, the Government must carry those publications back to the office of publication at the same rate?

Why, it is a monstrous proposition that you should take these various publications and transport them 1,500 or 2,000 miles at a loss to the Government, and then, in order to satisfy the minds of the publishers that their agents in Texas are honest, that the Government should go to the expense of carrying those periodicals that have been unsold back to the office of publication. I want to say this, Mr. Speaker: I received letters from two of these news agents in my own city protesting against this bill on that identical feature.

I wrote to these men and told them that I thought, with their experience in that business in that city, that they could approximate the number of those various publications that they could sell there, and there was no necessity for any larger amount or any greater amount or number being sent from the house of publication than they thought they could reasonably sell upon the market, and that if there should be, surely no publisher ought to object to paying one-fourth or one-fifth of 1 cent a pound for the privilege of returning these unsold publications to the office of such publication.

Mr. Speaker, with reference to the clause of this bill affecting the country publications, the country press, I have seen letters received by other gentlemen on the floor of this House from the country press of their districts in which it was stated that this bill was framed against the interests of the country press and in favor of the interests of the metropolitan press. Why, the proposition identically different from that was urged by the gentlemen before the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

It there sought, or became necessary for them in their arguments before the committee to suggest that this was a discrimination in favor of the country press and against the metropolitan press, whereas now they have flooded the country with circulars that it is against the country press and in favor of the metropolitan press. It is now you see it and now you do not. In other words, they are like the dog referred to by my distinguished friend from Virginia the other day. [Laughter.]

So far, Mr. Speaker, as the country press is concerned, already an amendment has been agreed to which will be accepted by the chairman of the committee to-morrow when the gentleman from Missouri shall offer it, an amendment increasing the sample copies from 50 to 100 per cent and raising the limit from 500 to 2,000 copies to be sent out. I want the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LENTZ], and I want the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON], my colleague on this committee—I want them to tell me and tell this House wherein that will militate against the country press of the United States. I would willingly yield to-day my time to my colleague on that committee [Mr. MOON] if he will rise in his place now and explain to this House how it is, under this amendment, that the provisions of this bill bear unjustly on the country press of the United States.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. GRIGGS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, I now yield ten minutes to my colleague, Mr. SNODGRASS.

Mr. SNODGRASS. Mr. Speaker, I do not know that I shall occupy all the time that my colleague has yielded to me in this matter, but I rise to say that I shall be sorry if the present bill can not be put in such shape as that it will command my support, I do not claim to be especially wise on this subject, Mr. Speaker, nor to have all the information respecting it that is possessed by the committee bringing in this bill, who no doubt have given it their patient consideration, but there are certain features in this bill which I believe ought to be enacted into law and certain other provisions which I think should be stricken out.

I say, Mr. Speaker, it is to be regretted that the good is so mixed up with the bad if we shall not be able to discriminate between the two and accomplish some reform in second-rate postage and yet at the same time preserve all the benefits that the gentlemen on this side of the House contend that we have under existing law.

Mr. Speaker, there is condensed in a short statement in the report of the Postmaster-General of the principal reasons for urging the passage of this bill, and I shall read from it briefly:

During the year past my attention has been drawn more than ever to the abuses of the law governing the mailing of newspapers and periodicals at the cent-a-pound rate of postage. They grow out of a practice so long standing that it has crystallized into law, allowing to paper-covered books, which are simply numbered and dated and designated as periodicals, though in reality not so, the privileges of genuine periodicals, and out of the bestowal by statute of the right to mail sample copies.

The proprietor of a well-known establishment, in order to secure the lowest rate of postage for his advertising literature, applies to the publisher of a "series" of books enjoying the newspaper rate of postage to have a price catalogue admitted to a place in the "series." The catalogue appears as "Number ——," a date of issue is put on, together with a bogus subscription price, and the book is actually mailed at the pound rate. The interests of legitimate periodicals demand the discontinuance of this abuse. * * *

Now, I say it will be unfortunate if we can not agree upon some line of discrimination between such periodicals that are primarily designed as advertising mediums and such periodicals or publications as are designed for the dissemination of good literature in the country and carry as incident thereto certain advertising features. Section 1 is directed against these serial periodicals denominated circulating libraries. I may say, Mr. Speaker, that I can not hope to add anything to what has already been said, and so well said, by the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LENTZ] in advocacy of continuing the present low rate of postage to this class of publications.

But it is not necessary that we should exclude them. My judgment is that we should exclude publications of a purely advertising nature, and to that end I have drawn an amendment which I think will admit these books and exclude others which are now injuring the service and against which our hostility should only be directed.

Mr. Speaker, I have drawn three amendments to the bill fundamental in their nature, and four others which are designed to perfect those mentioned, and I think I can best occupy the limited time I have at my disposal by having them read from the desk, in order that they may go into the RECORD and be examined and analyzed by all those gentlemen who are interested either for or against the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out all of section 1 after the word "two," in line 7, and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"Exclude from the second-class rate publications of a serial nature purporting to be issued periodically and to subscribers and which are not primarily designed as an advertising medium."

Amend by inserting, after the word "seventy-nine" and before the word, "when," in line 5, page 2, the following:

"And except as provided in section 1 of this act."

Amend by striking out all of section 3 after the word "rate," in line 1, page 3.

Amend by inserting, after the word "societies" and before the word "trade," on page 3, section 4, line 14, the words "colleges, institutions of learning," and at the close of said section the following:

"But no publication designed chiefly as an advertising agency shall be admitted to the second-class rate."

Amend by inserting, after the word "first" and before the word "it," on page 3, section 5, line 22, the following:

"Except as provided in sections 1 and 2 of this act."

Amend by striking out the whole of the third specification of section 5 page 4, beginning with line 3.

Mr. SNODGRASS. Now, Mr. Speaker, it will be observed that section 1 of the proposed act is designed to exclude from the mails such publications as have been exhibited here by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LENTZ]. Those are publications of a cheap nature, although the quality of the reading matter of which they are composed is excellent.

My first amendment is to change this section so as to admit them, and at the same time so guards their integrity as to absolutely prohibit any change of their character into merely advertising mediums, and the second, fifth, sixth, and seventh amendments simply perfect it—the first.

Persons of means, who are able to pay liberally for their books, will usually buy those which are handsomely bound. The only class of individuals who desire books or publications of this cheaper character are the poor people, to whom a low price is a matter of great importance. If we have a low rate of postage, such books can be sold for prices ranging from 5 to 15 cents, though they contain the same matter perhaps as the bound books, which would cost from $1.50 to $2.50 a volume.

To very many people of this land the question of 5, 10, or 15 cents is often one of material consideration, and by the saving of 5 or 10 cents they may possess themselves of two or three of these books, whereas otherwise they could not expect to buy even one. These facts furnish a strong reason for continuing this low rate of postage, in order that this class of people may be accommodated.

I think, Mr. Speaker, a question of principle is involved here, and may well be applied. I believe we ought not to sacrifice the public revenues to exploit the private business of any individual; but, sir, we are justified in any sacrifice of the public revenues that will promote the dissemination of good literature in this country, the building up of correct sentiment, and the nurture of educational interests throughout the whole land.

The provision which empowers the postal authorities to exercise their judgment and discretion in excluding from the mails such publications as are designed primarily to be advertising mediums will cut off such publications as were exhibited by the gentleman from California, the distinguished chairman of the committee, during his speech in the opening of this debate. At the same time it will preserve intact to the poor people, the common people of this land, the low rate of postage under which the character of literature which has been exhibited before us this evening circulates freely.

My third amendment strikes out the hostile provision of the bill which is leveled at the country press.

Mr. Speaker, there is no business, profession, or enterprise more deserving of our protection and encouragement than the country press, or which labors under more discouraging conditions, or which contributes more to the public weal in the dissemination of information absolutely essential in a Government like ours, based upon popular suffrage. It is the last hope in the battle for public good against private interest. Rarely, indeed, is there found a country paper that can command more than $1 per year as the price of its weekly visitation, and very many of them circulate for even less money.

The paper trust has so raised the price of material that many of them are now facing the probability of being forced out of business, and when that is accomplished as many guardians and friends will be lost to the public. Their subscription list commonly ranges from 500 to 1,000, possibly to 1,500. They sometimes resort to special editions and the sending out of sample copies as a means of increasing their circulation and subscription.

Occasionally, or at rare intervals when something of special importance is transpiring, their columns are demanded in the propagation of sentiment or information of wider interest than the limits of their local circulation, when the opportunity is thus offered them to accomplish the double purpose of advertising their paper and at the same time adding to their not dangerously plethoric exchequer a little more money than the regular income.

I can not bring myself to consent to any curtailment of this privilege. The bill proposes to limit such sample copies or excess of circulation to 50 per cent of their regular subscriptions, or in no case to exceed 500 copies. There is no sufficient reason advanced for it, and it will work a serious inconvenience and hardship upon the country publisher.

No sufficient excuse is given for discriminating against the publications of colleges or other institutions of learning, and the fourth amendment offered by myself is designed to add these important institutions to those provided for in the fourth section of the bill, while at the same time it guards against such publications as chiefly advertise them. If the bill is thus stripped of its objectionable features, I shall vote for it; otherwise I shall have to vote against it.

If this bill is thus amended, among the reforms it will accomplish will be to debar from the second-class rate millions of pounds of publications which are chiefly advertising mediums, and enact a proper and equitable principle of discrimination which it is said was lost in an erroneous construction of the present law. No doubt the error was superinduced to foster the dissemination of cheap, yet excellent, literature. If it has been costly, it has at least shown that such literature is in great demand by its large use of the mails, which should be a matter of congratulation to us all.

Let us not retard the good work by blockading it. Rather let us lop off its abuses while we put the good part of it beyond the reach of an adverse discrimination in the future. I know it is said that trashy literature may be circulated. Possibly it may, but I think we can rely upon the better sentiment of the people, which will and does hunger after good books that broaden our vision and quicken our aspirations and ennoble our sentiments.

Mr. MOON. I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. VANDIVER].

THE LOUD BILL A TAX ON INTELLIGENCE.

Mr. VANDIVER. Mr. Speaker, I would be glad if some gentleman on the committee or off of it would inform the House, if he can, just what is the meaning of this bill. I have given it some attention; I have tried to analyze its provisions; but I frankly confess that the more I hear it discussed and the more I study it the more I am in doubt about what it means. And my perplexity is increased when I find that the members of the committee who reported the bill to the House do not agree in their view of what it means.

It reminds me of a circumstance that is said to have taken place away down in Kentucky about the beginning of the civil war. An old Methodist bishop was called on, while presiding over his conference, to decide a question which was agitating the church as well as the country at that time. Taking it under advisement, he retired to his room and wrote his decision with some care and deliberation. Then submitting it for examination to a friend, a prominent attorney, he received from his counselor this reply: "Bishop, I don't quite understand what you mean by this decision; I seem at a loss to understand what conclusion you have arrived at." "All right," said the good bishop; "then I am perfectly satisfied, my friend, and feel sure now that the opinion will have accomplished its desired end."

I think the same condition of mind must prevail with the author of this bill. He knows that it will accomplish the purpose intended; but just what provision will tend to the desired result I do not think he could himself explain.

Mr. Speaker, it requires no lengthy dissertation nor elaborate argument to settle the question involved in this bill. It proposes a backward step. During all the history of the postal service, both in our own country and in England, the gradual tendency has been to increase the facilities for communication between people. The more rapidly and cheaply the ideas of one man may be communicated to another the greater will be the spread of intelligence. And upon this principle our postal department has been operated for years past, and therefore cheap postage for good literature has been considered one of the most efficient means for the education of the masses.

Up to 1876 the standard works of history, poetry, and fiction were practically out of the reach of the poor boy or girl in the country school; but, availing themselves of the cheap rates of postage, the book publishers about that time conceived the idea of increasing their profits by diminishing their per cent and sending the best books of the world in cheap form to thousands of readers instead of dozens, and the rapid increase of such publications as the Seaside Library, the Franklin Square Library, and the John B. Alden series became the marvel of the country.

Before this movement was started the cheapest copy of Dickens, Bulwer, or Thackeray cost a dollar a volume, but recently a cheap paper-bound edition of Dickens has been issued and sold to the public at 48 cents for the whole twelve volumes, delivered to any post-office in the United States or Canada; while the works of Scott, Thackeray, and George Eliot have been delivered at 3 cents apiece, and whole sets of Macaulay's great work, the History of England, at less than 20 cents a volume.

By admitting these publications to the mails as second-class matter the very best literature of the world has been brought within reach of the poorest youth whose thirst for knowledge is a stimulus to energy and ambition. It would be an interesting and valuable contribution to the statistics of literature if we could learn how many hundreds of thousands of young men and young women throughout the country have had their ideas elevated and their conceptions enlarged by this rapid multiplication of the works of the world's great literary masters. It is safe to say that not only thousands, but millions of these cheap publications of the best thought of the world have been scattered broadcast throughout the country, and their benefit is not to be measured by the deficit in the postal revenues.

But two years ago the gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD], chairman of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, made a strenuous effort in this House to exclude these publications from the pound rate of postage. By the earnest efforts of the friends of cheap postage the bill was then defeated. I remember with what telling effect my colleague from Missouri, CHAMP CLARK, leveled his shafts of wit and humor against the proposition of the gentleman from California, and how that eulogy of the country editor, whose business was to be crippled, went the rounds of the country press from Maine to California. I remember, too, that in one of his letters to the American Press Association he did me the honor to quote a paragraph of my remarks in opposition to the bill.

Now we have the same proposition before us again. True it is somewhat modified, a little bit softened down in one or two particulars, but the essence of it is the same, and I am unalterably opposed to it; and I hope we shall have the assistance of my colleague from Missouri and every other friend who opposed it before in opposing it now.

My second reason for opposing it is that it does not accomplish the object for which it is proposed. We are told that it is to shut out trashy literature and objectionable and questionable, if not immoral, publications. Even if it did so, it is bad policy to shut off what is good in order to abolish what is evil. Why not draw the distinction? Why not so frame it as to abolish the evil without crippling the good?

But further than this, the language of the bill will not abolish the evil, though it will succeed in excluding the better class of literature, because it is clear in its language in prohibiting "books and reprints of books," whereas the worst forms of literature, such as detective stories and Indian stories, coming in periodical print, being neither "books" nor "reprints of books," would still go through the mails at the pound rate. So that I must say to the gentleman from California that he is much more skillful in attacking cheap postage for good literature than in his warfare upon the trashy and objectionable kinds of print.

In the third place, this bill is a direct strike at the news agents, by refusing them the privilege of returning unsold copies of regular publications at the pound rate of postage and increasing the rate from 1 cent to 4 cents per pound. This small privilege of the news dealer in the small country town is his only safety; and if you deny him that privilege, you either force him to raise the price of newspapers and periodicals of every kind in order to cover this loss, or else drive him out of this kind of business.

Fourthly, I am opposed to the measure because it puts a heavy burden upon the editor of the country newspaper who wishes to increase his circulation by sending out large numbers of sample copies. In fact, this is the only way a new paper, just starting, can secure a bona fide subscription list. There is no citizen in a small community who does so much for the community without compensation as the country editor. He is the pack horse of the whole neighborhood and is expected to be a walking encyclopedia for all inquirers. I am in favor of giving him every privilege that is possible under the law and throwing as few difficulties in his way as possible.

This bill would not only increase his expenses, but would also add to his difficulties and inconveniences by imposing an additional string of Government red tape to his business of mailing papers from his office, because in the last provision of the bill you require him to separate his mail matter into United States mail sacks by States, cities, towns, and counties before depositing it in the post-office. In other words, you propose to require him, at his own expense, to run a distributing office as a preliminary branch of the post-office business of the country.

In short, sir, this bill seems to me to be a strike at the country editor and the book publisher, a tax on intelligence, and a step backward toward the days of limited education and high-priced books. It fosters the blood-and-thunder stories which inflame the minds and allure the hearts of the youth of the land, while the noblest productions of the human intellect are to be barred out from many a schoolroom and the door of access to the finest literature of the world is to be closed in the face of the aspiring youth who has not the money to pay a dollar a volume for it.

The vile trash of the penny-a-liner, who paints the allurements of vice or the seductive adventures of burglary and assassination in lurid colors for the imagination of embryo desperadoes, may continue to poison the minds of our youth and fill our jails with criminals, educated in this school of vice, scattered broadcast over the land, because, forsooth, it is classed as original or periodical literature. But the best oration of Cicero, the most inspiring poetry of Milton or Byron, the most learned treatise of Hume or Macaulay, the most brilliant imagery of Burke or Webster, and the most profound philosophy of Aristotle or Jefferson is all to be relegated to the realm of forgotten lore, unless paid for at high prices, because it falls under the ban of being a "reprint."

Now, Mr. Speaker, why are these persistent efforts made to cut off the privileges of newspapers and book publishers? We are told that it is to save expenses; that it is to make the Post-Office Department self-sustaining, to avoid a deficit of $4,000,000 in the Treasury. Let me suggest a different line of retrenchment. If a Republican House is really in earnest about retrenchment, let them begin in earnest instead of taxing the publisher and the reader to make up this deficit in the postal revenues. Why not begin where the real wrong is? Everybody knows that the Government is paying the railroads an enormous price for carrying the mails. Here is where the retrenchment should begin.

I repeat here statements that were made on this floor when this bill was under consideration two years ago. It was conceded by every man who spoke on the subject, by the chairman of the committee himself, that the rates which had been fixed years ago were entirely too high.

We have been paying about $30,000,000 per year to the railroads for carrying the mails and then giving them an extra subsidy of $3,500,000 per year for the use of postal cars that cost less than $3,000,000 to build.

In some instances cars that cost less than $6,000 are paid for by the Government at more than $7,000 per year.

Is it any wonder we have a deficit in the Post-Office Department?

Again, Mr. Speaker, if retrenchment is necessary, I suggest that the Administration might cut off some of the President's superfluous commissions. No other President in the history of this country has ever run the commission business on such an extensive scale as the present occupant of the White House. It seems that every disputed question offers an opportunity for the appointment of a new commission with high salaries to settle it, instead of having it settled by the representatives of the people in Congress assembled. Here is an opportunity of retrenchment which I commend to the leaders of the House, and which, I am sure, the people of the country would approve. Glance at the list of a few of these commissions, as recently published by the New York World:

M'KINLEY COMMISSIONERS COME HIGH—$3,000,000.

[Special to the World.]

WASHINGTON, March 17.

It has cost the nation more than $3,000,000 for President McKinley's special commissions, envoys, investigators, experts, secret emissaries, and other strange and fearsome things since he came into office; and the end is not yet.

Some of them were necessary and all have proved a most satisfactory method of paying off political debts. Nearly all of them have given excuse for fine junkets for something like a hundred favorites, and the perquisites have made salaries very comfortable.

The Monetary Commission came first, which gave Senator WOLCOTT and his colleagues a pleasant European tour at a cost of $75,000, showing that they must have enjoyed themselves.

Most people have forgotten about William J. Calhoun, of Illinois, who was appointed a special commissioner to Cuba during the last days of the Weyler regime, and who succeeded in spending $10,000, if he accomplished nothing else.

The Queen's Jubilee Commission cost $60,000, because General Miles and the others felt that a rich nation should spend money royally while attending a royal function.

Moses P. Handy's eloquence as special commissioner to the Paris Exposition cost $20,000.

As special adviser in treaties John A. Kasson has secured $30,000 from the Treasury, and he is still in office and able to draw money.

The first Philippine commission cost the Government $200,000. Congress had no voice in the appointment of the three men who spent this large sum of money. Just try and think of what they accomplished. They brought back a map and some reports, of course.

Then came Charles A. Hamlin, who wanted to go to Japan; so he was sent to find out all about the sealing controversy, and he spent $15,000.

"Calico Charley" Foster, of Ohio, did better. He took the Russian end of the sealing business and held on until he had drawn $30,000 from the Treasury and was made a member of another commission with a salary of $10,000 a year.

The Peace Commission that negotiated the Spanish treaty cost $200,000, although only two members drew salaries as commissioners.

It cost a little matter of $150,000 to coat Secretary Alger with whitewash.

The Cuban and Puerto Rican evacuation commission cost $50,000.

Comparatively cheap was the cost of the commission that represented the United States in the Peace Congress at the Hague, for the bills amount to only $35,000.

The Samoan commission cost $50,000.

Less expensive was the Hawaiian commission to report on a code of laws for the islands; still it cost $30,000;

Up to date the joint high commission to make a treaty with Canada has cost $200,000, and it is still drawing money, with the end not in sight.

The most expensive commission thus far is that appointed to investigate the Nicaragua Canal. It has spent $250,000 and discovered that while the canal can be built for $118,000,000, it should not be built just yet.

There is an insular commission, appointed at the request of Senator ALLISON, of Iowa, Senator MARK HANNA, and Senator MCMILLAN, that may have done something besides spending $50,000.

Robert P. Porter received $10,000 for going to Cuba as a tariff commissioner.

Now the President has placed Judge William H. Taft, of Cincinnati, at the head of a second Philippine commission that is likely to cost another $200,000.

And now, again, Mr. Speaker, as to the matter of Government expense. Can it be that the burden of imperialism is resting so heavily upon us that we must tax the intelligence of the people to support it? Foreign wars have always been burdensome and expensive, but if we can not carry on our postal business and our internal improvements I think you will find it difficult to convince the American people that these enterprises should be abandoned in order to keep up the expense of a foreign war that is waged against the liberty of a weak and suffering people, and to gratify the ambition of a President who aspires to be an emperor. You have refused to pass a "rivers and harbors bill" for important public improvements, and now propose to make the reading public pay the deficit in the Post-Office Department.

In view of these things, it seems to me that your plea for the education of the masses rises no higher than your plea for fair elections. It is a hypocritical pretense, and your profession of superiority in education and intelligence goes along with your pretense of purity and honesty of Republican election laws.

This brings me, Mr. Speaker, to which I wish to mention briefly in conclusion. In the interest of fair elections and for the protection of the American workingman's right to cast his vote as he pleases and according to his own judgment, I have introduced the following bill, which I here insert for the information of members of the House:

A bill to protect the right of suffrage and prohibit corporations from contributing to campaign funds.

Be it enacted, etc., That it shall be unlawful for any officer, agent, manager, superintendent, or other representative of any corporation, company, or trust incorporated under the laws of the United States or of any State or Territory in the United States, either directly or indirectly, through his own act or the act of any other person, to contribute any portion of the money or funds of said corporation, company, or trust to the campaign fund of any political party, or for the purpose of aiding in the election or the defeat of any candidate for President or Vice-President of the United States, or any candidate for Congress or the United States Senate; and any person violating the provisions of this act shall be fined not less than $1,000 nor more than $5,000, or be imprisoned not less than one month nor more than one year, or be punished by both such fine and imprisonment.

SEC. 2. That it shall be unlawful for any officer, agent, manager, superintendent, or other representative of any corporation, company, or trust, as aforesaid, by words, written, printed, or spoken, by circulars, posters, letters, or in any other way to influence or control the vote or votes of any employee or employees of such corporation, company, or trust, or to intimate, directly or indirectly, to such employee or employees what may be the wish or desire of himself or those composing such corporation, company, or trust as to how such employee or employees should vote in the election of President, Vice-President, or member of either branch of Congress as aforesaid; and every person violating the provisions of this section shall be punished as provided in the previous section.

SEC. 3. That every person who prevents, hinders, controls, or intimidates another from exercising or in exercising the right of suffrage by means of bribery or by threats of depriving such person of employment or occupation, or of ejecting such person from a rented house, lands, or other property, or by threats of refusing to renew leases or contracts for labor, or by threats of violence to himself or family, shall be punished as provided in section 1 of this act; and for the purposes of this act "bribery" shall be interpreted to mean the offer of any form of reward in money, goods, or position of emolument, and the word "threats" shall be interpreted to mean any method of communicating the idea of deprivation or of harm to person, property, or position.

Mr. Speaker, this bill is based upon the simple principle that a corporation organized to do a certain kind of business has no legal right to go into other kinds of business. Especially has it no right to engage in politics. The corporation has no natural rights, but only exists as a creature of law; has none of the obligations of citizenship; none of the responsibilities of the citizen, and should have none of the political privileges of the citizen. These propositions are undisputed either in law or in morals. Then why not enact them into law?

The silly critic who imagines that this would introduce Federal control of elections is invited to read the bill itself. It carefully avoids any such result. It introduces no new machinery into the elective system. But it would prevent great corporations from introducing their machinery for the control of elections. It is simply an honest effort to remedy an evil which honest men in all parties have recognized as a great and growing menace to our whole elective system. That it would sometimes be difficult of enforcement because easily evaded may be frankly admitted.

But if this objection should always prevail, there would be no laws enacted. The enforcement of any law must depend upon the assumption that a court of competent jurisdiction, by proper testimony, can determine whether the law has been violated or not; and, as in all other cases, if the evidence is not sufficient and doubt exists, the accused must be given the benefit of the doubt.

But pass the law, and you will have taken the longest step ever yet taken in this country toward securing fair elections by protecting the employees of great corporations from the dictation and intimidation of political and industrial bosses.

Mr. LOUD. Now, Mr. Speaker, I am willing that the gentleman from Tennessee should proceed with the debate.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] for ten minutes.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I assume that this proposal to enact a law in vital respects changing the existing postal regulations proceeds upon the theory that at this time some grave abuses exist, and that it is necessary to amend the law in order to prevent those abuses.

That a very large amount of illicit matter now passes through the mails in this country every day is incontrovertible; but this is not wholly attributable to defects in the statute. The present postal law has been in many respects, for fifteen years within my personal knowledge, a dead letter upon the statute book.

It is said sample copies of newspapers comprise a large part of the second-class matter now passing through the mails. I believe the gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD], who has thoroughly investigated the subject, will agree with me that by the enforcement of the statute now in force this phase of the subject could be adequately dealt with. But, in my opinion, it cuts a small figure. Publications without bona fide subscription lists are mailing thousands and millions of so-called "sample copies" every day in the year, and it is these bogus publications, and not legitimate newspapers, that have abused the privileges conferred upon publishers by the postal laws.

The law provides that newspapers, periodicals, etc., having a paid circulation shall be admitted as second-class matter. In the great city of Chicago, represented in part by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BOUTELL], who seems to have attentively followed this discussion, has in it a score of publications that go into the mails by hundreds and thousands every day that are as beneficial to the farmers, merchants, and the traders of this country as any publication could possibly be, and yet under the proposed bill they would be, and probably under the existing law they might be, excluded from the mails. I refer to the commercial publications which print only market reports. They have no subscription lists, and yet they are mailed every day by millions. The commission merchants who buy and sell live stock, grain, and produce subscribe for thousands of these papers, and the publisher mails them to their customers.

Mr. COWHERD. Will the gentleman allow me an interruption?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Certainly.

Mr. COWHERD. I want to suggest to the gentleman that I submitted this very bill to one of the greatest publishers in the West, publishing that kind of a paper exactly, and he said it did not change the law as it existed to-day, and he knew the enactment of this law would remedy a great abuse, and he was in favor of it.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. If your friend said that, he needs the attention of a guardian immediately. [Laughter.]

Mr. Speaker, there is not a member of this House who has not received every day of this session matter carried to him as second-class contrary to law. I recall the fact that when the tariff was the prime issue in politics a New York syndicate sent broadcast political campaign literature in the form of magazines and papers that never had a paid subscriber.

It was sent all over the country by the sackful and was received and carried through the mails as second-class matter. The Goldbugs of the country have for three years depended upon a similar publication that is now being circulated, contrary to law, as second-class matter. You gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber doubtless receive the Sound Money regularly. It has come to you regularly for years through the post-office. Did a single one of you subscribe for it? I have received it regularly, and certainly never subscribed for it.

Mr. Speaker, until an attempt is made to enforce the existing postal laws, and we thus find out how much of the matter now illegally carried as second class can be thus excluded, it seems to me unnecessary to tinker with the postal laws; and when the time comes to change them I think they ought to be more liberal instead of more restrictive. These grain and live stock exchange papers about which I have spoken are most valuable publications to the farmers of the country.

Every day, from cities like Chicago, St. Louis, St. Joseph, Kansas City, and Omaha, when the markets close, they are mailed by thousands. They give the prices of wheat, cattle, hogs, and every commodity in which farmers deal. The next morning the farmer receives through the mail, from the commission merchant to whom he usually consigns his produce and live stock, information as to prices in all the markets of the world. These publications should be admitted as second-class matter, as matter of right, and not by at least doubtful interpretation of the statute.

I desire to refer briefly to another class of publications which are sent in large numbers to persons who are not subscribers. When a great invention is made, such as an attachment to a steam engine or other machinery, it is necessary and desirable to familiarize the country with the fact. Frequently this is done by advertising the new invention in certain great scientific publications. The inventor goes to the Scientific American or The Age of Steel, or some such paper, and there appears an elaborate description, with cuts and illustrations.

Copies of the paper are mailed to thousands of persons known to be interested. Is this not an advantage to the people? Can we better serve the public interests than by facilitating every legitimate publication of facts useful to the country and calculated to inform the people upon subjects intimately connected with their everyday business affairs?

What weight are we to attribute to the claim that this bill will be beneficial in that it will exclude from the mail vicious literature? The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LENTZ] has just exhibited to this House some publications which find their way to the same class of subscribers as newspapers and magazines do. Are such publications as the gentleman has exhibited injurious? This measure would exclude them, as well as matter vicious in its character.

What does the bill exclude? It excludes reprints of books. The cheap, trashy, sensational, detective stories, about which so much has been said, are not reprints. They are issued as original publications. The reprints that go through the mails are the very cream of the world's literature—books which heretofore have been too high-priced to be accessible to the poor or even to many who are in good circumstances. These reprints have, in recent years, placed in the homes of poor men more good books than could be found in all the private libraries in the world in the year 1800.

Every good book added to the family library is as a ray of sunshine. I rejoice in the marvelous work of the modern printing press and in the cheap means of transmitting its precious products to the homes of the people. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LOUD. There is about half an hour left before the time of adjournment. In consequence of the time taken up on the question of privilege, I shall not be able to accommodate as fully as I desired several gentlemen to whom I agreed to yield. I will ask the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. HEATWOLE], the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM], and the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LATIMER] whether they can get along with five minutes each?

Mr. BINGHAM. I can.

Mr. LOUD. I have only fifteen minutes under my control. The best I can do is to divide that time between these three gentlemen. In the first place, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. HEATWOLE].

Mr. HEATWOLE. Mr. Speaker, the bill under discussion, so far as it affects the country publishers, has been misrepresented. Members of the House tell me they have been almost daily in receipt of circulars and petitions urging them to oppose it, giving as one reason that its passage will seriously affect the business of country publishers.

I have carefully examined the provisions of the bill and am fully convinced that, on the contrary, it will be of benefit to them. I myself am a printer and a country publisher, and have for over twenty years owned and conducted a country weekly; therefore I speak from the standpoint of one who is personally interested in the business and would not advocate the passage of a measure which I believed harmful to the country newspaper.

There is much more to be feared from the flooding of the country with sample copies of cheap advertising sheets. The principal expense in the issuing of a newspaper is the gathering of the material for copy, the setting of the type, the making up of the forms, and making ready for press. After this expense has been incurred, the cost of the production of a newspaper is reduced to the cost of presswork, ink, paper, and mailing. The country publisher sets his type in the old-fashioned way, by hand. He has no typesetting machine to do rapid typesetting and thereby lessen expense. The country printer who has a newspaper with a circulation of 1,000 copies is at more expense in producing the thousand copies than is the manager of the cheap city weekly newspaper in producing a first thousand copies of a like-sized paper. The cheap city weekly, which is often the waste pipe of a daily paper, for the matter can be lifted bodily from the forms of the daily edition and put into the forms of the weekly edition, does much to disarrange and injure the business of the country publisher. The manager of the cheap weekly can print thousands of copies of his paper at the bare cost of presswork, ink, paper, and mailing, and reap a handsome profit from the advertisements.

So far as sample copies are concerned, it is only in rare instances that a country publisher will send out more than 500 copies of any one issue. What builds up a country newspaper builds up the community in which it is published. There is no greater or more effective agency for the development of a community than a live, enterprising local newspaper.

I represent a constituency of over 200,000 people, and in my representative capacity endeavor to reflect their views in my vote on this floor; and I believe that a majority of the people of my district are in favor of this bill with the amendments which I have been assured will be made. A large majority of the country publishers in my district favor its passage, and no district has a more enterprising and intelligent class of editors and publishers than that which I have the honor to represent on this floor. They are alive to the best interests of the people of the country as well as their respective communities, and are thoroughly informed on the issues of the day.

A few weeks ago in order to ascertain their views I sent a copy of the bill and report to each newspaper in my district and asked for any suggestions that the publisher might have to make, and I desire to read a few extracts from letters received; and it is proper to say in this connection that very few replies have been received in opposition to the bill:

H. A. Zettel, publisher of the Shakopee (Minn.) Tribune, says:

I think the bill is all right; I know of no suggestions I might offer that would improve the law toward the weeklies.

H. B. Wakefield, publisher of the Hutchinson (Minn.) Times, writes:

I have read the Loud bill hastily and have glanced over some of the stuff sent out by the book publishers. It seems to me that the latter is not true, and that the Loud bill is a good one. I hope it does not shut off exchange copies. I do not see that it does, but that is what is claimed. I am of the opinion that the bill should be passed.

William O'Brien, publisher of the Eden Valley (Minn.) Journal, says:

I believe the bill a benefit to the country publisher; I see no objectional feature, and it possesses good qualities that I can commend.

John F. Wrabek, publisher of the New Prague (Minn.) Times, says:

I have read the Loud bill and find nothing that would interfere with the country publisher as far as I can understand it. The bill is a good one in my estimation.

Irving Todd, sr., one of the veteran publishers of Minnesota, and publisher of the Hastings daily and weekly Gazette, sends the following:

I have carefully read the Loud bill and am inclined to the opinion that its passage would be beneficial to the country press. As a rule very few sample copies are sent out by us, and if the city weeklies desire to flood our field they should pay for the privilege. Section 5 might possibly be made a little stronger to shut out completely the price currents, mail-order organs, and similar publications issued in car lots to graveyard lists. Section 6 might give us considerable trouble if the Postmaster-General should see fit to strictly enforce it. After all, the act is only intended as a basis for the Department to frame its regulations upon, and it seems worthy of a practical trial.

Hon. A. W. McKinstry, one of the oldest publishers in Minnesota and publisher of the Faribault Republican, has the following:

I do not think there should be any objection coming from the country publishers against it. It cuts down the sending of sample copies to 500, and this is a surfeit for any country publisher. Of course, the shoe pinches the city publishers, who are accustomed to help out the circulation liar by printing copies far beyond their genuine list and sending them out to agents with the privilege of returning unsold copies; all of which loads down the mails.

The country publishers derive no benefit from this and ought not to be saddled with any part of the opprobrium it causes. The provision of the Loud bill increasing the rate of 'returns' to news agents from 1 cent to 4 cents is a just one, and I hold up both hands for it. Neither should books or reprints of books be sent at reduced rates of postage accorded to newspapers. I believe that unless the overburdening of the mails with second-class matter is corrected, there will be a movement that will raise the rates generally upon that class of matter, which would certainly work to the injury of the country publisher. I am in favor of the bill according to my present understanding of its provisions.

A. L. Shaver, publisher of the Carver County Journal, at Carver, Minn., writes:

I believe that the passage of the bill would be a God-send to the country publisher. It would destroy that competition of city weeklies that has proved so disatrous to the country publisher. I trust you will do all in your power to see the bill passed.

R. W. Irish, publisher of the Pine Island, Minn., Record, says:

After reading the bill carefully I see nothing therein that, in my judgment, would materially injure the country publisher. I recognize that the abuse of the second-class privilege ought to be stopped, and I think the Loud bill, if enacted into law, will be a long stride toward that end.

F. E. Du Toit, publisher of the Chaska (Minn.) Weekly Valley Herald, says:

Have been unable to fully digest the bill; however, I think section 3 to be in the interest of the country publisher. But we country printers feel perfectly safe in leaving the whole matter in your hands, knowing that you will protect us to the full extent of your ability.

H. R. Diessner, of Waconia, Minn., who has had interests in country publications, says:

I heartily approve of House bill 6071, and would favor its passage.

S. H. Farrington, publisher of the Waterville (Minn.) Advance, says:

Do not see wherein the proposed measure can possibly injure the legitimate publisher, and believe it would be a good thing to put some restriction on the cheap publications that are sent out purely for advertising purposes, at 25 cents per year, and with no desire or purpose to collect even that. Their lists are not made up of actual subscribers, but plainly show the names are taken from poll lists, etc.

W. H. Wilcox, manager of the Elysian (Minn.) Enterprise, says:

In my opinion the Loud bill should be enacted into law.

T. H. Prowse, editor of the Chaska (Minn.) Review, says:

After carefully perusing the bill, I come to the conclusion that it contains nothing, as far as I am able to detect, antagonistic or detrimental to the country press, and do not see why it should not be adopted in its entirety. Anent sample copies, my views coincide with yours, and think, like yourself, it would be a benefit to the country publisher.

Capt. E. F. Barrett, editor of the Lesueur (Minn.) Sentinel, at the bottom of one of the ready-made petitions sent out against the passage of the Loud bill, has the following to say:

I most decidedly refuse to indorse the above. I have carefully read the Loud bill and believe it the best measure for the Department, the publisher, and the country that could be devised. I do not believe that the 'sample-copy' clause will be any hardship. Invariably it is 'love's labor lost' for me to send out sample copies. I believe that legitimate newspapers or periodicals alone, to legitimate subscribers, should have the benefit of pound rates.

Express companies should carry the great bulk of the matter now carried by the mails as second-class matter, and I believe that every legitimate publication described by the bill would be benefited if the trash carried now were to be excluded. I believe that advertising fakirs would be in a measure frozen out and advertisers induced to patronize legitimate publications. However, to your own judgment as a publisher and legislator I am satisfied to leave your decision as to your vote and influence.

J. W. Craven, publisher of the Norwood (Minn.) Times, in speaking about enlarged legislation in the direction of newspapers, says:

I agree with you on this bill as a whole and think it all right.

John S. Hamaker, publisher of the Dakota County Tribune, published at Farmington, Minn., writes:

I would say that I believe the measure a good one. I delayed writing you in reference to the matter owing to an uncertainty as to whether it interfered with the free distribution of county papers in county where published, which I understand it does not.

M. M. Shields, publisher of the Pilot, at Faribault, Minn., says:

I will say that in the main I consider it a fair measure, worthy of support. However, I do not like the reading of subdivision fourth of section 5, as it may interfere with country journals who occasionally get out anniversary, special, or 'boom' editions. I think the bill, if it becomes a law, will do much to stop the deluge of trash which cheap periodicals send through the mails under the present law.

C. P. Carpenter, of the Northfield (Minn.) Independent, says:

It seems to me that the amendments offered by the committee have removed the objectionable features of the bill and that as it stands there is no good objection to it. The second-class postal rate has no doubt been greatly abused, and this bill appears to be directed against such abuses. The provision in regard to sample copies, to which you direct especial attention, seems to me to cover the matter in a manner entirely satisfactory to the country publisher.

Certainly 50 per cent of the regular issue would cover any reasonable number of sample copies sent out for legitimate purposes. I think 50 per cent is a liberal allowance, and believe this provision would be helpful to legitimate country papers. It would prevent the establishment of uncalled-for publications and the flooding of the country with large numbers of so-called sample copies for the sake of getting advertisements. I can see no objection to the bill in its present shape. I only note that there appears to be no provision in regard to free circulation in the county where published, as is now the law. This may be covered by the act of March 3, referred to in section 2 of the Loud bill, and if so, would be all right, as that act does not appear to be repealed, if I understand the bill aright.

Sidney T. Huntley, publisher of the Dassel (Minn.) Anchor, says:

I believe the Loud bill will prove a benefit to the country publisher. I agree that the part relating to sample copies is a good thing. But if on page 4 of the bill, lines 20 to 24, it means that we can not mail supplements with our paper without having them pasted in, it would be bad. But I don't think that is the correct interpretation.

W. A. Reid, editor of the Renville Star-Farmer, published at Renville, Minn., says:

I have read the bill over carefully and noted what its effect might be on the country press. The sample-copy feature, in my opinion, would be a benefit to publishers in country towns like ours, as it would have a tendency to cut off the competition of the large city weeklies we are continually wrestling with. Here is where an abuse has crept in. The bill seems all right with the exception of section 6, which I would like to see struck out, as far as country publishers are concerned. The postmasters in small cities and villages have plenty of time to sort the mail for the different points of destination without troubling the publisher to do it for him. In large cities where an enormous amount of paper mail is handled the provision might work all right.

H. B. Brooks, editor of the Renville (Minn.) Record, says:

The honest country publisher recognizes the need of reform in the matter of second-class mail matter, and as long as the privilege of free county circulation is not denied him will favor the effort to rid the postal department of a great burden.

W. D. Joubert, publisher of the Litchfield (Minn.) News-Ledger, says:

I have read over the Loud postal bill, and I see in it no point to be feared by the country publisher.

A. E. Haven, editor of the Faribault (Minn.) Democrat, says regarding the bill:

I have received your letter in reference to the Loud bill. Your position is correct, and I am able to judge, knowing how the mails are lumbered up by free publications sent out under the sample-copy rule. I know that numerous publications without circulation send out tens of thousands of copies every week. It is a great damage to legitimate country weeklies and costs the Government enormously, besides hindering the legitimate work of the post-office.

O. G. Wall, editor of the Red Wing (Minn.) Argus, says of the bill:

I have examined the Loud bill and I see no objection to it in particular in the form inclosed to me. Am inclined to think the passage of this bill in its present form would be for the best interests of the country.

Dr. J. A. Gates, editor of the Kenyon (Minn.) Leader, writes in reference to the bill:

I have looked over the bill and Postmaster-General Smith's excellent report and firmly believe in the proposed amendment, for there is no doubt that the second-class rate is woefully abused and that the law never intended it to be used, as it is used, as a pure advertising scheme. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

It has been said that this bill affects the exchange list of a newspaper. This is another misrepresentation by the opponents of the bill. It should be remembered that exchanges have always been and always will be treated as subscribers by the Post-Office Department. It has also been stated that college publications will be affected adversely by this bill. I can not understand how any such interpretation can be placed on the bill.

As I understand it, a college publication having a regular list of subscribers and issued at least four times during the college year will not be disturbed by this bill. It will have the same rights and privileges that it now enjoys. I believe that this bill is a good one for the publisher of a country weekly.

It will help to take away from the country publisher much of the competition of a paper which is printed solely to derive a revenue from the advertisements it gets on account of an extensive circulation worked up at the expense of the business of the country publisher, who must have a fair price for his paper in order to make both ends meet. Papers that are circulated at nominal rates take from the country publisher much business in the way of advertising which properly belongs to him.

I desire to call attention to an editorial from the Faribault (Minn.) Republican, under date of March 14, 1900. The Republican is one of the leading weeklies of Minnesota, and its editor, Mr. McKinstry, has had an experience as a country editor and publisher extending over a period of nearly half a century. Here is the editorial:

THE LOUD BILL.

Some of the publishers in the large cities are sending out appeals to country newspaper publishers to petition Congress not to pass the Loud newspaper bill, relating to second-class mail matter.

We do not propose to help these gentlemen to pull their chestnuts out of the fire. Their principal objection to the bill is that it cuts off the sending at pound rates of sample copies of newspapers and paper-covered books, which are not newspapers and ought not to come under the classification of second-class matter. The mails are overburdened with this class of matter, which is carried at a heavy loss to the Government.

The country publishers are not materially benefited by the sending of sample copies free, but the large city publishers, who swell their circulation by sending out thousands of copies to news dealers who are privileged to return those that are unsold, making a double loss on the transportation to the Government, are the men who are doing the kicking. The burden is getting to be such a grievous one to the Post-Office Department that the outcome is likely to be an advance all along the line, unless proper discrimination is made by excluding the publications mentioned from the second-class rates. The Loud bill ought to pass.

Also, to editorial paragraphs from other papers in my district. The Lesueur (Minn.) News, under date of March 15, 1900, contains the following editorial paragraph:

The Loud bill at present before Congress is designed for the protection of legitimate publications. The fake publishers are again urging the editors of country papers to oppose it and are meeting with some success through a misunderstanding of the bill. The law proposed will help the country paper and stop the drain on postal funds as well. Two-thirds of the entire number of pounds of mail matter now carried is second class, and a large percentage of this the fake paper that enters into competition with the country weekly. Give us the Loud law; kill off the wolves, and save Uncle Sam thousands of dollars a year.

The Chaska (Minn.) Review has the following under date of March 16, 1900:

By the passage of the Loud bill (H. R. 6071), introduced with the intention of amending the postal laws, it seems to us that the legitimate country newspaper would be benefited, especially so by the adoption of section 3, which limits the number of sample copies to 50 per cent of the bona fide subscription list, provided that in no case shall this number exceed 500 copies.

This would materially decrease the number of samples sent out by cheap weeklies and other publications—which are now mailed at pound rates—and cut off much competition. We feel satisfied that Congressman HEATWOLE will work for the best interests of Minnesota publishers in the matter, for he is an old newspaper man and has his brother newspaper men's prosperity at heart.

The Dakota County Tribune, published at Farmington, Minn., under date of March 16, has the following to say editorially:

The Loud bill, in an amended form, is before Congress and will be voted on in a few days. The Loud bill relates to postal matter of the second class, and we believe is a good measure, as it will shut out a lot of cheap and trashy reading matter, including blood-and-thunder novels, that have gained entrance under the law wholly intended to give the people the benefit of cheap postage on legitimate newspapers.

The Elysian (Minn.) Enterprise, of recent date, says upon this subject:

The passage of the Loud bill, relating to second-class mail, should be indorsed by the press of the country. The provisions of the bill are calculated to cripple the circulation of the cheap periodicals and trashy literature, of which a large portion is printed at Augusta, Me., and which of recent years has caused a considerable deficit in the Postal Department.

For this reason the bill is denounced by that class of publishers of yellow monthly periodicals, and they are standing the expense of a fight against the proposed legislation, which is inimical to their interests. Every publisher of a legitimate newspaper should vigorously indorse the measure, the passage of which would have tendency to improve the class of literature now mailed as second-class matter.

Mr. LOUD. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM].

[Mr. BINGHAM addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. LOUD. I yield to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LATIMER] five minutes.

Mr. LATIMER. Mr. Speaker, there are many speeches made in this Hall by members of this House, and frequently those speeches seem to me to be unnecessary, but occasionally it becomes necessary for members of this House to speak, in order that they may give expression to the reasons which prompt them to cast certain votes that they decide to cast upon measures presented here for their consideration. From the circulars that have been coming to me through the mail, I am satisfied that there is a large class of people throughout this country who feel very much like a certain negro that I heard of down in South Carolina.

The Republican party, the scalawag or carpetbag party that controlled the Southern States for quite a while after the war, came down from the New England States and promised the negroes each 40 acres of land and a mule, and a good many of the negroes had been waiting for a long time. This old fellow had waited about thirty years. He had been to the Lord in prayer asking for the 40 acres and the mule. Finally he went to a lawyer, one of these shrewd fellows, and told him to fix up the papers so he could get his claim. The lawyer said he must have $5 fee. Cuffy had only $3.50. The lawyer took that and fixed up the papers. The old negro went down into his master's farm and began to stake off 40 acres of the best land he had. The old gentleman went down and said, "Cuffy, what are you doing here? What right have you here?" "Oh," said he, "boss, here it is right in my pocket." He said, "Let me see it." He pulled out a paper which read as follows: "As Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, so have I lifted this durned nigger out of three dollars and a half." [Laughter.]

Now, gentlemen, I am satisfied, as I said a few moments ago, from the circulars that are coming through the mails to members of this House, that there is a large class of people in this country to-day who feel that this House is about to lift them out of something that they imagine they had, but on an examination I find they have not under the law the rights they imagine they have, and are now violating the law as to second-class mail matter. I find that the only practical question that presents itself to my mind is this: Shall we continue to send through the mails of the United States about 175,000,000 pounds of second-class matter at 1 cent a pound that cost the Government 8 cents, or will we charge that class of matter the legitimate postage that it ought to pay in order to meet the actual expenses of carrying that mail? This is the proposition as it presents itself to my mind.

Gentlemen on this floor argue that certain publications will be excluded from the mails. They may be excluded as second-class matter, but where is the proof that that matter can not go through the mails at third-class rates? One hundred and seventy-five million pounds of these trashy advertising sheets, that are worthless except as advertising sheets, come in competition with our daily and weekly newspapers, taking their legitimate advertising from them at an actual cost to the Government of $26,000,000 per annum. In a word, we pay the railroads $26,000,000 to carry the matter and get back $1,750,000.

It was stated here this morning that these paper-covered books are a great source of education to the people of this country. This I admit, but their usefulness will not be destroyed because they are not allowed to go as second-class matter. It takes on an average about five of these books to weigh a pound. The additional cost to the purchaser of these books will be about 1 cent on each book. Do you tell me that the young people of this country, that the people who desire education, will fail to buy books because of the additional cost of 1 or even 2 cents on each book, and therefore that all this valuable information that is published will be shut up from the people of this country? It is too absurd a proposition to make to intelligent people.

Mr. LLOYD rose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from South Carolina yield to the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. LATIMER. I have only five minutes, but I will yield.

Mr. LLOYD. I want to call your attention to the fact that the Postmaster-General in his report has said:

A division of the amount of postage received for third-class matter by the number of pounds of such matter mailed shows that the Department actually derives a revenue of 14.75 cents a pound from this class of mail.

Mr. LATIMER. That is third-class matter. I am talking about second-class matter.

Mr. LLOYD. And you are talking about second-class matter that under this bill can be entered at third-class rates, and you are talking about what would be the additional cost. I am calling your attention to the fact that the additional cost will be the difference between 14.75 cents a pound and 1 cent a pound. [Applause.]

Mr. LATIMER. Let it be as you state. I say that no part of the people of the United States who are doing business for profit have the right to come to the Post-Office Department and demand that their literature shall be carried through the mails at such a loss to the people who have to pay the taxes to meet this deficit. Nor will the passage of this bill have the effect of driving valuable literature out of the market or depriving the people of this country from its use, though it has to go through the mails at the 8 cents a pound rate, or even at 14½ cents per pound, as the gentleman has stated, for this rate will not, upon expert testimony given on the subject, add more than 2 cents apiece for these publications. If the increase in postage be added to the present price, which I do not admit will be done, owing to the competition and profit to the publishers in this business, I believe there will be no perceptible advance in the price.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the law of March 3, 1879, reads as follows:

(1) It must regularly be issued at stated intervals, as frequently as four times a year, and bear date of issue, and be numbered consecutively.

(2) It must be issued from a known office of publication.

(3) It must be formed of printed sheets, without board, cloth, leather, or other substantial binding, such as distinguished printed books for preservation from periodical publications.

(4) It must be originated and published for the dissemination of information of a public character, or devoted to literature, the sciences, arts, or some special industry, and having a legitimate list of subscribers: Provided, however, That nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to admit to the second-class rate regular publications designed primarily for advertising purposes, or for free circulation, or for circulation at nominal rates. (Act of March 3, 1879, section 14, 20 Stat. L., 360.)

This law was intended to deprive this very class of advertising sheets, reprints of books, dime novels, tons of series called libraries, purely paper-covered samples of books having no list of subscribers, from the benefit of second-class postage. It is asked why enact this bill that is simply a repetition of that law. The necessity for this bill becoming a law is intensified when we contemplate the tremendous abuses that have crept in under this law and the act of July 16, 1894.

Under these laws an enormous quantity of matter was let in at newspaper rates. Flagrant wrongs, solidly intrenched behind interests that have proven powerful and defiant, demand radical remedies; nothing short of this will rectify an abuse which, as the Postmaster-General says, involves a sheer waste of over $20,000,000 a year. This provision of the law was intended to give low rates, or recognition to legitimate newspapers and periodicals, but has been perverted, through deception and fraud, to the profit of interests wholly outside the plain intent of the law.

There are many of the metropolitan newspapers, like the New York World, that enjoy special privileges under this law, being carried at 1 cent per pound by the Government, while the Government actually pays the railroad 8 cents per pound for the same service; but that paper, not being satisfied with these privileges, sends out the World Almanac, entering it at the New York office as second-class matter. It is put in as the monthly edition at 35 cents per year, when in fact everybody knows that the World Almanac is not a monthly edition of the New York World, but is published once a year and can be bought at the news stands at 25 cents.

Now, in order to evade the law and get into the mails as second-class matter it is made to appear as a monthly edition with a list of subscribers. This is but a sample of the palpable and flagrant frauds that are being perpetrated by these publishers; and yet men stand on this floor and urge that these publishers must not only be allowed these great privileges of having tons of these dailies carried through the mail at second-class rates, but, in addition, must be allowed to flood the mails with tons of almanacs, paper-covered novels, "house organs," so-called trade journals, advertising sheets, known also as benevolent or fraternal societies, insurance organizations, trades unions, etc.

The gap has been laid down by various rulings of the Department and decisions of the Attorney-General of the United States. This abuse has grown until Postmasters-General Smith, Bissell, Wilson, and others have urged Congress for such legislation as will cure the abuse. Mr. Speaker, it has been claimed by opponents of this bill that it would injure the country newspaper, and yet to this moment no such claim has been backed by one single argument to sustain the contention.

The truth is, the country newspapers not only have all the rights guaranteed under the present law, namely, that they can circulate their paper free in the county in which it is printed, send it through the mails at 1 cent per pound, send out sample copies to the amount of 100 per cent of the subscribed circulation, or to the number of 2,000. What more does this bill do for the country newspapers? It protects them from the metropolitan press flooding their territory with thousands of copies of advertising sheets at 1 cent per pound, and gives them some of the legitimate advertising which their location entitles them to.

This bill, if enacted into law, will not only wipe out the deficit of over $6,000,000 now confronting the Department on this year's business, but it will put a surplus of between ten and thirty million dollars into the Treasury for other useful service by the Department. We need between five and ten million dollars for free rural delivery in the country. Part of this surplus could be used in this way with great profit and benefit to our people who live in the country districts and are denied many of the comforts enjoyed by the city districts. We must pass upon the $36,000,000 now paid the railroads for carrying this mail. I feel sure we are paying exorbitant rates for this service.

Ah, Mr. Speaker, business methods and economy all along the line in this Department will not only wipe out the $6,000,000 deficit and inequalities now existing, but, in my judgment, will result in a few years in giving us a 1-cent postal rate. I can see no just defense for the inequality of the present postal charges, which are as follows: On first-class matter, 32 cents per pound; second-class, 1 cent per pound; third-class, 8 cents per pound; fourth-class, 16 cents per pound. My contention is that these unjust burdens should be nearer equalized. Make the business of the Department self-sustaining, and meet the highest and best interests of the whole people. Therefore I shall give my vote for this measure, believing it to be in the right direction. [Loud applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 9279) making appropriations to supply additional urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, and for prior years, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 8347) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. CULLOM, Mr. SEWELL, and Mr. TELLER as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees as indicated below:

S. 1804. An act granting an increase of pension to Rida B. Haskell—to the Committee on Pensions.

S. 3441. An act for the relief of Louis A. Yorke—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

S. 1023. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to loan naval equipment to certain military schools—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

S. 1772. An act for the payment of the claim of M. M. Defrees for the construction of a sewer adjacent to the lands of the United States, known as the "arsenal grounds," in the city of Indianapolis, Ind.—to the Committee on Claims.

S. 2799. An act to carry into effect the stipulations of Article VII of the treaty between the United States and Spain concluded on the 10th day of December, 1898—to the Committee on War Claims.

Senate concurrent resolution 32:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 7,000 copies of the Annual Report of the Major-General Commanding the Army for 1899, with accompanying documents, of which 2,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 4,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 1,000 copies for the use of the War Department and Headquarters of the Army.

—to the Committee on Printing.

Senate concurrent resolution 20:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be directed to cause a survey to be made and an estimate submitted of the cost of constructing a ship canal to connect Puget Sound with Grays Harbor via the Chehalis River, in the State of Washington, in accordance with recommendations heretofore made and filed with the War Department, and to report whether or not, in his judgment, it is advisable to construct such canal.

—to the Committee on Printing.

GENERAL LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all gentlemen who speak on this bill may be permitted to extend their remarks in the RECORD for the next five days.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee that all gentlemen who speak upon this bill be allowed to extend their remarks in the RECORD for five days? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MOON. I now yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. NEVILLE].

SECOND-CLASS MAIL MATTER.

Mr. NEVILLE. Mr. Speaker, I could not face my constituents with a clear conscience when I return home if I do not now exhaust the power I have, both in speech and vote, to defeat this unholy measure. If this bill is enacted into law and the executive branch to which it relates does not ignore such law, as is frequently done by other executive branches with acts relating to them, another long stride will have been taken toward the final subversion of the people's liberties; and I confess that it is an unsolved question with me whether a people are more to be be pitied when in the hands of a lawmaking body that will enact laws to deprive the people of their rights than when in the hands of an executive who will disobey a law enacted by the people; but when they are at the mercy of both such authorities, they not only need the pity of the human family, but the active interference of a higher power.

This bill, Mr. Speaker, is a long step backward, and one upon reading it can find food for reflection and signs which foretell serious destination unless the fork in the road is soon reached.

The people had the right to assume, when electing the members of this body, that the Administration, having started upon a policy of spreading civilization, education, and Christianity, beginning with the Tagals and Sulus, and evidently intending to wind up with the Mohammedans and Buddhists—that such Administration would surely not attempt to prevent the dissemination of knowledge, religion, and civil government in our own land.

It may be well to remark here, Mr. Speaker, that no corrupt, unjust, or tyrannical power was ever able to dominate a people unless it kept them physically weak or mentally ignorant.

We were taught from our infancy to despise the power of might over right, and our children are yet taught in a half-hearted way that physical strength, as such, has no just claim to dictatorship. If the doctrine taught by the lowly Nazarene is to prevail in the end, as I firmly believe it will, the children of future generations will be taught to despise the cunning, brainy men of this age who despoil a people by enacting law.

I know, sirs, it is claimed this bill is necessary to prevent a deficiency in the Post-Office Department, and while there is such a deficiency the average citizen can not understand why reading matter should be cut off from the people, the public schools, and colleges when such deficiency could be wiped out by refusing to pay railroads prices for carrying the mails enabling them to pocket a large profit on legitimate investment and then some on watered stock.

Government ownership of all the public highways, including railroads, would soon solve the question of deficiencies in the postal service. Right here is one of the points where the shoe pinches. The people under the present facilities for the circulation of information are rapidly becoming acquainted with the great questions of public highways, finance, education, and liberty in their application to governments, and those who desire the Government to aid them in living off the sweat of other people's brows have scented danger to their tyrannical power, and now seek to prevent the light from shining upon their dark intentions.

If I understand this bill correctly, it seeks to deprive the great masses of the people from the privilege of pound rates upon a large class of reading matter which, under the law, now is within their reach. It will exempt reprints of the works of great authors in subdivisions and cheap form from the second-class rates, and thus deprive the poor of access to such information.

I have upon my desk No. 3, Riverside Art Series, "Michelangelo," by Estelle M. Hurll, a collection of pictures with introduction and interpretation, also No. 1, Riverside Literature, "Evangeline," by H. W. Longfellow, with notes and biographical sketches; also No. 6, Riverside Literature Series, "Grandmothers' Stories" and other poems, by Oliver Wendell Holmes; also No. 32, Riverside Literature Series, "The Gettysburg Speech" and other papers, by Abraham Lincoln, and an essay on Abraham Lincoln, by James Russell Lowell. These papers are prepared in form to make them accessible to the poor, and this bill seeks to put them beyond the reach of that class.

While it is no doubt true that the Department is imposed upon and the pound-rate privilege abused, yet the same can be said of every liberty enjoyed in common by the American people. The masses will not complain of an honest attempt to correct the abuse by properly dealing with the offenders. If the proper methods are adopted, yellow-backed literature and disreputable periodicals and papers and all matter carried in violation of law can be excluded not only from the privilege of pound rates, but, if proper, from the mails altogether, without affecting the right of the citizen to that which he is entitled.

Mr. Speaker, this bill not only discriminates against such publications as I have mentioned and all others of like character intended for school and family use, but it would require all publishers of newspapers and periodicals to put a postage stamp upon all exchanges, copies to advertisers, extra copies for campaign committees and candidates, always necessary for election purposes, sample copies to influence subscribers, return copies from agencies and news stands, and special and extra editions for any purpose whatever; besides it would put a new, vicious club in the hands of unscrupulous partisan postmasters to use in the coming and near future elections.

This is not all, Mr. Speaker. By reference to section 5 of this bill it will be seen that under subdivision 1 of said section a publication must be issued as frequently as four times a year to entitle it to the privilege of second-class matter. I very much fear it would be difficult to convince a Postmaster-General under the present Administration that this qualification was complied with until the fact was demonstrated by a year's publication. If so, it would shut out from the privilege all new enterprises.

By reference to the first paragraph of subdivision 4 of section 5 of the bill, which reads as follows:

> It must be originated and published for the dissemination and information of a public character, or devoted to literature, the sciences, arts, or some special industry, and must have a legitimate list of subscribers who voluntarily order and pay or agree to pay for the same—it will be seen that to start a rural newspaper the projector would be compelled to secure his subscribers without being able first to display the merits of his publication.

Mr. Speaker, this bill would materially injure if not wholly drive the country newspapers out of business, and the city dailies would monopolize the field. Such dailies use carriers and express companies almost exclusively, and would be able to pay increased postage on country delivery if the rural weeklies could be exterminated.

When I turn my memory back to the campaign of 1896 and recall the words of a prominent bishop lamenting the fact that the farmers' children were receiving too much education, because it disinclined them for the drudgery of the farm and complicated domestic and political conditions, I am not at a loss to understand why such a measure as this bill should be urged.

By an examination of the report of the committee it can be readily seen that the table of figures on pages 3 and 4 and committee comments thereon, which I ask to have inserted here in my remarks, and do not read, because the report is before the members, are based upon a false presumption of what will occur if this bill becomes a law:

As strikingly illustrating the extent and effect of the abuses to which reference is made, attention is particularly invited to the appended statements and exhibits. Calculating upon the basis of the count of pieces and the weighing of volume made in 1880, and adhering to the rule of estimating which has been observed in the Department from that time, the weight in pounds and the receipts for postage on the several classes of matter mailed during the year ending June 30, 1899, are as follows:

Class.	Weight.	Postage paid.
	Pounds.
First class	128,517,992	$65,987,732.98
Second class:
Paid at pound rate	352,703,226	3,527,032.26
Free	62,241,700
Transient	25,289,355	1,564,290.00
Third class	68,227,169	10,093,882.50
Fourth class	21,776,347	3,421,181.80
Foreign	5,531,079	2,546,800.44
Total	664,286,868	87,140,919.98

Careful inquiry has been made through experienced postmasters and by an examination of the records of the Department, and it is believed that fully one-half of all the matter mailed as second class and paid for at the pound rate is not properly second class within the intent of the law and ought justly to be paid for at the third-class rate. This gives the enormous quantity of 176,351,613 pounds from which the Department derives only a fraction of the revenue to which it is fairly entitled. The third-class rate of postage is 1 cent for each 2 ounces or fraction thereof, nominally 8 cents a pound, but in reality, through the operation of the fractional provision, the rate is higher.

A division of the amount of postage received for third-class matter by the number of pounds of such matter mailed shows that the Department actually derives a revenue of 14.75 cents a pound from this class. If, therefore, there had been paid, as there should have been paid, the average third-class rate on the 176,351,613 pounds which was wrongfully transmitted at the pound rate, the Department would have received $26,011,862.92, instead of $1,763,516.13, which it actually received, and the postal revenues would have been increased by the handsome sum of $24,248,346.79.

The actual financial exhibit of the Department for the last fiscal year is as follows:

Total expenditures	$101,632,160.92
Total receipts from all sources	95,021,384.17
Deficit	6,610,776.75

Had this 176,351,613 pounds of mail matter, really of the third-class but transmitted at the pound rate, paid as it should have paid, the average third-class rate, the financial exhibit would have been this:

Receipts, as above given	$95,021,384.17
Additional revenue from 176,351,613 pounds third-class matter, at 14.75	24,248,346.79
Total receipts	119,269,730.96
Total expenditures	101,632,160.92
Surplus	17,637,570.04

Or if it be assumed that the matter would pay only the nominal rate of 8 cents a pound, this would be the showing:

Receipts, as given above	$95,021,384.17
Additional revenue from 176,351,613 pounds third-class matter, at 8 cents	12,344,612.91
Total receipts	107,365,997.08
Total expenditures	101,632,160.92
Surplus	5,733,836.16

This is what the financial exhibit of the postal service for the year would be if the matter carried through the mails were classified and rated as the law intended it should be. It would show a large surplus instead of a large deficit. Nor do even these figures present the full case. The first table of this statement shows that the amount of postage per pound actually received on the several classes was as follows:

	Cents.
First-class matter, not free	85.6
Second-class matter	.8
Third-class matter	14.7
Fourth class (seeds, etc.)	9.2
Fourth class (ordinary)	17
Foreign	46
Postal cards	188.2

From these statements it appears:

First. That more than one-fourth of the entire volume and weight of matter carried through the mails is rated and pays as second-class matter, when, under the spirit and intent of the law, it ought to be rated and to pay as third-class matter.

Second. That while this wrongly classed matter amounts to more than one-quarter of the whole volume of mail transmitted, it furnishes only one fifty-fifth part of the postal revenue.

Third. That the expense of transportation being reckoned at 8 cents a pound, the mere carrying of this matter cost $14,108,129.04, while the revenue from it was only $1,763,516.13, involving a loss to the Government of $12,344,612.91.

It must be plain, Mr. Speaker, to every man that the 352,703,226 pounds of second-class matter would not all, nor even any great portion of it, have been mailed if third-class rates had been charged, and therefore the deductions of the committee as to the transformation of a small deficit to a large surplus are without merit.

Again, it would seem to one not well versed in the intricacies of star-route fortunes that a general average by class of 52.6 cents per pound, or the rate in cents for either class for delivering mail matter considering the distributive distances, ought, in a well-regulated service, to prevent a deficit.

The facts are that this bill is another long stride toward the centralization of power. Even now, sirs, there is a bill pending in this Congress to put parcel delivery on a cheaper rate in the postal service than the present rate for second-class matter which will burden the postal department with freight instead of mail, sacrifice intelligence as well as just government to the greed of commerce, and drive out of business the crossroad and small city merchants in the interest of large city department stores.

Thirty-odd years of centralization policy under the domination of a party controlled by corporations, syndicates, and trusts has driven from our villages, towns, and small cities the tailor, the shoemaker, the wheelwright, the blacksmith, the carder, the weaver, the foundryman, the cabinetmaker, the locksmith, the tinner, the tanner, the pottery maker, the plow maker, and in fact almost all classes of mechanics, artisans, and manufacturers, and now the contemplated changes in the postal service will compel the printer and possibly the merchant to follow them.

The argument is advanced by the supporters of this bill that no one class of business should be specially taxed or burdened to benefit another; that no one person should be heavier burdened that another might enjoy greater privileges. It is the same old, old story. Cain is on earth again and wholly indifferent to his brother.

Turning my memory back to the days of subscription schools, when the teacher boarded around, and coming down through the great conflict which was waged to prevent the public-school system from being enacted into law, I note the similarity of argument.

The great subsidized constitutional lawyers of that day pawed the air and burdened the courts and people with ceaseless oratory charging the public-school system to be highway robbery, unjust, and unconstitutional discrimination between citizens; that it deprived the citizen of his property without adequate compensation or due process of law; that it was confiscation of property in times of peace; that it compelled one man against his will to labor for the support of another; that it subverted the doctrine of the survival of the fittest and encouraged the laggard in his idleness.

It is a disgrace to our civilization that greed, avarice, and selfishness should be permitted to dominate the people in their interest, but it is the tendency of the times; the next step will be for the same reason and by the same argument to abolish the public-school system, and the next an educational qualification to vote.

Later on the same argument will be used to urge that an indigent person should not have the right to say when, for what, and how much the property holder should be taxed, and then a property qualification to vote will follow, and thus, one by one, the boasted American liberties will fade from the grasp of the citizen.

It is not difficult to define the menial stages through which a people must pass before becoming slaves.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, permit me to say that the second-class rate on mail matter is in the interest of the farmer, the wage earner, and the poor people, and I can not consent to cut off from them the bulk of the benefit it gives because a small deficit, probably caused by unnecessary salaries, exorbitant freight charges, and official mismanagement, exists. [Applause.]

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The SPEAKER. Pending that motion, the Chair submits the following report of the Committee on Enrolled Bills:

Mr. BAKER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill and joint resolution of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 1040. An act to amend section 4445 of Title LII of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to licensing of officers of steam vessels; and

H. J. Res. 159. Joint resolution to amend joint resolution to furnish the daily CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to members of the press, and so forth, approved February 17, 1897.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the following titles:

S. 746. An act to authorize C. R. Dobbins to accept a gold watch awarded to him by the government of the Dominion of Canada in recognition of his humane and gallant service to the shipwrecked crew of the British schooner Ashton, of Weymouth, Nova Scotia;

S. 2114. An act to constitute South Manchester, Conn., a port of delivery;

S. 1740. An act to authorize C. E. Marr and E. H. Pierce to accept silver watches awarded to them by the government of the Dominion of Canada in recognition of their services in rescuing British sailors;

S. 68. An act granting to the State of Kansas the abandoned Fort Hays Military Reservation, in said State, for the purpose of establishing an experiment station of the Kansas Agricultural College and a western branch of Kansas State Normal School thereon, and for a public park; and

S. 3138. An act to provide for necessary repairs to the steamer Thetis for service as a revenue cutter.

URGENT DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. CANNON rose.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from California withdraw his motion for a moment?

Mr. LOUD. I withdraw it.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent to nonconcur in the Senate amendments to the urgent deficiency bill, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9279) making appropriations to supply additional urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, and for prior years, and for other purposes, with sundry Senate amendments.

Mr. BELL. What are those amendments?

Mr. CANNON. There are a page or two of them.

Mr. BELL. I would like to ask the Chairman a question.

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. BELL. Did they put on that amendment for the increase of salary of the principal of the Central High School?

Mr. CANNON. This is the urgent deficiency bill.

Mr. BELL. It is not the bill that we had up the other day?

Mr. CANNON. It is not the District of Columbia appropriation bill. There are several amendments. It would not take a great deal of time to read them.

The SPEAKER. There are two or three pages of Senate amendments.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Why not print them in the RECORD?

Mr. CANNON. They are printed in the RECORD in the Senate consideration.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Then why read them now?

The SPEAKER. The bill as printed will appear in the RECORD, the Chair will state. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to take this bill up, to nonconcur in the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the House nonconcurs in the Senate amendments and asks for a conference. The Chair announces the appointment of the following conferees: Mr. CANNON, Mr. BARNEY, and Mr. PIERCE of Tennessee.

The bill, with the Senate amendments, is as follows:

[Omit the part in brackets and insert the part printed in italics.]

An act making appropriations to supply additional urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, and for prior years, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the following sums be, and the same are hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year 1900, and for prior years, and for other objects hereinafter stated, namely:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

USE OF THE ROENTGEN RAY.

Mr. PLATT of New York, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the concurrent resolution submitted by Mr. HAWLEY February 1, 1900, reported it without amendment; and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 5,000 copies of a document entitled "The use of the Roentgen ray by the Medical Department of the United States Army in the war with Spain (1898)," of which 1,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 2,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 2,000 copies for the use of the War Department.

REPORT OF THE GOVERNOR OF ARIZONA.

Mr. PLATT of New York. I am directed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 108) providing for the printing of the report of the governor of Arizona for 1899, to report it without amendment, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to print 4,000 additional copies of the report of the governor of Arizona for 1899, of which 1,000 copies shall be for the use of the Department of the Interior, 1,500 copies for distribution by the governor of Arizona, 500 copies for the use of the Senate, and 1,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LIGHT AND FOG STATIONS AT BUFFALO, N. Y.

Mr. DEPEW. I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4008) to establish light and fog stations to mark the main southern entrance of the new breakwater at Buffalo, N. Y., to report it favorably without amendment, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that there shall be established, to mark the main southern entrance of the new breakwater at Buffalo, N. Y., suitable light and fog-signal stations, at a cost not to exceed $45,000.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. PENROSE (by request) introduced a bill (S. 3755) to inquire into the reorganization of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company and the disposal of the lands belonging to the said Northern Pacific Railroad Company by the Northern Pacific Railway Company; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. PENROSE. I ask that the bill and accompanying paper be referred to the Committee on Pacific Railroads.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. It has been the rule to have those bills go to the Committee on Public Lands, if I am not mistaken.

Mr. PENROSE. I will state for the information of the Senator that I have introduced the bill by request, and personally I do not care to which committee it goes.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Nor I, particularly. I wish simply to observe the rule; that is all. I think bills of that character have gone to the Committee on Public Lands heretofore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill and accompanying paper will be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. PENROSE introduced a bill (S. 3756) to correct the military record of Francis Fox; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3757) granting an increase of pension to Alexander Robertson; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3758) granting an increase of pension to W. I. Miller; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HANSBROUGH introduced a bill (S. 3759) for the relief of homestead settlers who died while in the military and naval service of the United States in the Spanish-American and Philippine wars; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3760) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Red River of the North at a point on said river where the section line extending east and west between sections 8 and 17, in township 157 north, of range 50 west, in Marshall County, State of Minnesota, intersects said river; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. GEAR (by request) introduced a bill (S. 3761) relating to compensation of fourth-class postmasters; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. BERRY introduced a bill (S. 3762) granting a pension to Amos W. Daugherty; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. TILLMAN introduced a bill (S. 3763) to authorize the Secretary of War to cause to be investigated and to provide for the payment of all just claims against the United States for private property taken and used in the military service within the limits of the United States during the war with Spain; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. MORGAN introduced a bill (S. 3764) for the relief of Julia Rebecca Holt; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. ELKINS introduced a bill (S. 3765) to correct the military record of Arthur J. Steele; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. MORGAN introduced a bill (S. 3766) for the relief of the Bank of Attalla, Ala.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. THURSTON introduced a bill (S. 3767) to appropriate money for rental of a building at Manila, Philippine Islands, to be used as a library, and for salary of a librarian for period of one year; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CULLOM introduced a bill (S. 3768) granting a pension to William B. Johnson; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3769) to increase the pension of William T. Evans; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. LINDSAY introduced a bill (S. 3770) for the relief of Clement Calhoon, of Larue County, on the border of Nelson County, State of Kentucky, for supplies and stores taken from him by the military forces of the United States for their use during the war for the suppression of the rebellion; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. THURSTON introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 109) to restore the status of the Nebraska Militia who served during the late war; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION AT ST. LOUIS.

Mr. COCKRELL introduced a bill (S. 3771) to provide for celebrating the one hundredth anniversary of the purchase of the Louisiana territory by the United States by holding an international exhibition of arts, industries, manufactures, and the products of the soil, mine, forest, and sea in the city of St. Louis, in the State of Missouri; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Select Committee on Industrial Expositions.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that the Select Committee on Industrial Expositions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2747) to provide for celebrating the one hundredth anniversary of the purchase of the Louisiana territory by the United States by holding an international exhibition of arts, industries, manufactures, and the products of the soil, mine, forest, and sea in the city of St. Louis, in the State of Missouri, be discharged from its further consideration and that the bill be postponed indefinitely.

The motion was agreed to.

PAY OF CERTAIN NAVAL OFFICERS.

Mr. PENROSE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 3422) to adjust and equalize the rank and pay of certain officers of the Navy; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENTS TO INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I submit an amendment intended to be proposed to the Indian appropriation bill in lieu of the one I presented a few days ago providing for the appointment of a commission for each town in the Choctaw, Chickasaw, Creek, and Cherokee nations, to consist of one member to be appointed by the executive of such nation, etc. I move that the amendment be printed and lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $750 as an additional payment for the last three quarters of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, at the Union Agency, Ind. T., intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

UNIVERSITY OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. DEPEW. I move that the Committee on Education and Labor, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3330) to establish the University of the United States, be discharged from its further consideration and that the bill be referred to the Committee to Establish the University of the United States.

The motion was agreed to.

INSULAR TARIFF COLLECTIONS.

Mr. ALLEN. I submit a resolution for which I ask present consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, directed to transmit to the Senate complete tariff schedule now in force in Puerto Rico, Cuba, the Philippine Islands, and the island of Guam, together with statements of the amounts of tariff duties collected therein, respectively, since the occupancy of said islands by the Government of the United States of America, and inform the Senate in what manner the money has been disbursed, and whether any portion thereof, and if so, how much, has been covered into the Treasury of the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. ALLISON. I do not object to the resolution, but I would prefer that the Senator should merely provide in the resolution for a statement of the original duties, and then afterwards, in a separate resolution, ask for the disbursements. I think it might be important to have a statement of the rates of duties. It will not take long to prepare such a statement, but it might take some little time to give a detailed statement of the disbursements. I merely make that suggestion to the Senator. I shall make no objection to the resolution.

Mr. ALLEN. I will state to the Senator that I do not ask for an itemized statement. I want to know the sum which was collected in each country and the sum which was disbursed.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well.

Mr. ALLEN. And if any balance has been covered into the Treasury I desire to have that fact stated.

Mr. ALLISON. I shall not object to the resolution.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

EXPENSES OF THE PHILIPPINE COMMISSION.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I submit a resolution and ask for its immediate consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the President be, and he is hereby, requested, if not incompatible with the public interest, to send to the Senate an itemized statement of the expenses of the Philippine Commission, together with a statement of the amount paid to each commissioner for his services and individual expenses.

Mr. DAVIS. Let the resolution go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the resolution goes over.

NATIONAL BANKS.

Mr. BUTLER submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the Senate of—

1. (a) The number of applications for charters of national banks that have been received since July 1, 1899; their capitalization; and (b) the number and capitalization of banks whose charters have terminated during said time; also (c) the applications for the same period of the previous year; the capitalization; and (d) the number and capital of national banks the charters of which have expired during said time.

2. (a) The number of national banks that have increased their capital stock since July 1, 1899; and (b) the increase in capitalization; also (c) the same data for the same period of the preceding year.

3. (a) The circulation that has been applied for from July 1, 1899, to March 14, 1900, and (b) from March 14, 1900, to the present time; also (c) the same data for the same periods in the preceding year.

4. (a) The amount of the United States bonds that have been tendered in exchange for those provided for under the new currency law.

5. (a) The amount of cash paid out of the Treasury for premiums on the bonds now refunded, and (b) the total amount that will be paid for premium on the refund of the bonds.

6. (a) The amount of Government funds on deposit with national banks at the present time, (b) March 14, and (c) the largest amount on deposit since July 1, 1899.

7. The territorial distribution of the increase in the volume of (a) bank notes and (b) money paid as premium on bonds refunded.

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9279) making appropriations to supply additional urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, and for prior years, and for other purposes, and asking for a committee of conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments disagreed to by the House of Representatives and agree to the conference asked by the House.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. HALE, Mr. ALLISON, and Mr. COCKRELL were appointed.

SCHEDULES OF CERTAIN POSTMASTERS' SALARIES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. MORGAN, as follows:

Resolved, That the Postmaster-General be, and he hereby is, directed to return to the Senate certain schedules of salaries of postmasters in the States of Alabama, Arkansas, Kansas, and Kentucky computed under the act of March 3, 1883, which schedules were before the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads of the Senate, but which were temporarily recalled by the Postmaster-General on the 30th day of September, 1899.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Is this a resolution for which immediate consideration is asked?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution came over from yesterday.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I should like to have some explanation of the resolution. It goes back ten years.

Mr. MORGAN. The object of the resolution is merely to get before the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads a paper that was there authentically which was temporarily withdrawn for rearrangement in some way and which has never been sent back. I want to get the paper so as to send it before the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads to see if they have got anything to do about it.

Mr. WOLCOTT. All right.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask that the resolution may lie over again. That is an old question. It has been up here for the last seventeen years.

Mr. MORGAN. I make no question except to get a paper.

Mr. COCKRELL. I have had I suppose half a dozen resolutions of the same kind sent to me, and that is the reason why I want to examine it.

Mr. MORGAN. I have no objection if it goes over without prejudice.

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes; without prejudice.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri asks unanimous consent that the resolution may go over, retaining its place on the table.

Mr. MORGAN. Yes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

CHANGE OF NAME OF STEAMSHIP PARIS.

Mr. PENROSE. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 3587) to grant authority to change the name of the steamship Paris.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHARLES A. D. WISWELL.

Mr. ALLEN. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 2166) granting a pension to Charles A. D. Wiswell.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Charles A. D. Wiswell, of Ainsworth, Nebr., and to pay him a pension of $72 per month in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House disagrees to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7941) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. HITT, Mr. ADAMS, and Mr. DINSMORE managers at the conference on the part of the House.

PUERTO RICAN REVENUES.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report on House bill No. 9080.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays the conference report before the Senate.

The SECRETARY. Report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9080) appropriating, for the benefit and government of Puerto Rico, revenues collected on importations therefrom since its evacuation by Spain and revenues hereafter collected on such importations under existing law.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the report of the committee of conference. Is the Senate ready for the question?

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read.

The Secretary read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9080) appropriating, for the benefit and government of Puerto Rico, revenues collected on importations therefrom since its evacuation by Spain and revenues hereafter collected on such importations under existing law, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1, 4, and 5.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 2: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the matter inserted by said amendment and insert in lieu thereof the following: "now existing and which may hereafter be established in Puerto Rico, and for the aid and relief of the people thereof, and for public education, public works, and other governmental and public purposes therein until otherwise provided by law;" and the Senate agree to the same.

W. B. ALLISON,
EUGENE HALE,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
J. G. CANNON,
W. H. MOODY,
Managers on the part of the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the report.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I had not expected to take the lead in this matter at all. I addressed the Chair only because the question was about to be put. I supposed, of course, the members of the conference committee upon the minority side would proceed with the discussion, and I only now go on at the request of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] who was a member of the conference committee.

Mr. President, this report when read would indicate that there had been mutual concessions; that the Senate had surrendered some features and that the House had surrendered some features, and that there was a compromise agreement. An analysis of the report will show that the Senate has practically yielded everything to the House, and that the House has yielded nothing.

The bill came from the House and went to the Committee on Appropriations. The Committee on Appropriations reported back the bill with certain amendments which they recommended to the Senate, and the bill as passed by the Senate is exactly the bill which was reported back to the Senate by the Committee on Appropriations, composed, the majority of it, of Republicans.

Now, what were the changes? I desire to say that the object I have in calling attention to this matter is not for the purpose of simply stickling as to the right of the Senate to maintain its position; it is not for the purpose of making any captious objection; but it is for the purpose of showing that beneath what may appear to be a very harmless difference, the purpose in maintaining the House bill practically in its entirety is one of a very radical character, one which will be not slight in the extent to which it will reach.

Now, what was the difference between the bill as it passed the House and the bill as it passed the Senate? As the bill came from the House it contained a provision for the appropriation of all the revenue which had been received upon importations from Puerto Rico up to January 1, 1900, and, in addition thereto, all other revenue which had up to the present been received from the same source, and all revenue which in the future should be received from the same source.

That was really the most radical feature upon which the Senate disagreed with the House and to correct which it amended the House bill. But I will say that there was still a further objection that the Senate committee took to the House bill, and that was that the appropriation as expressed in the House bill was too indefinite; it simply put it in the power of the President to dispose of this large sum of money practically in his discretion for the benefit of the people of Puerto Rico. I am not pretending now to quote the exact language, though I probably had better do so. I find it quoted in the RECORD.

Mr. COCKRELL. Here is the bill itself.
